GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee spoils the stomach, ruins the digestion, closes the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

GREAT COMBINATION OF TROLVEY ROADS.

Kean and Riker Companies About to Pool Interests.

END OF THE BOULEVARD.

TWO LINES TO TAP EACH OTHER AT ROSELLE.

It Will Mean the End of a Bitter Fight Between Big Capitalists — Riker Combine Control Right of Way Between Cranford and Plainfield and Kean Has the Right of Way in Other Direction

After having fought each other for the past few years, it is now understood that the electric street railway interests represented by Senator John Kean, of Elizabeth, and Chandler W. Riker, of Newark, respectively, are about to pool their interests in Union county. This means the death of the much-talked of $250,000 county boulevard between Plainfield and Elizabeth, over which Senator Kean had planned to construct his cross-county trolley road. The Riker syndicate has already absorbed nearly all the important lines in northern New Jersey, and if Senator Kean's trolley interests join in the combination it will make one of the most formidable street railway syndicates in existence.

For two years these two gigantic combinations of capital have been fighting for franchise rights in Union county, and a move on the part of one was always followed by a counter move on the part of the other. The Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company in conjunction with the Plainfield Street Railway Company, controlled by the Rikers, has been able to secure almost exclusive rights in the western section of the county from Cranford to Plainfield. On the other hand Senator Kean has obtained valuable concessions in the other direction towards Elizabeth. Roselle seems to have been the pivotal point in the trolley plans, and the efforts to get a franchise in that place has been seesawing back and forth for weeks without result.

Now it is said that the Kean and Riker companies have agreed to combine their interests and form a junction of lines at Roselle, thus completing the through line between Plainfield and Elizabeth. It is planned to have the two lines tap each other at some point where they connect with a tunnel under the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

In the White Mountains.

The Mail and Express of Saturday gives the following report of some Plainfielders at Jefferson, in the White Mountains: "The first large party arrived Tuesday and included Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Fisk, Miss Louise Fisk, Harvey Fisk, Annie Fisk, Miss Coe and Dr. Benj. Hedges, of Plainfield, N. J.; Miss Florence S. Suydam, of Brooklyn, Miss Reynolds, of New York, and John T. Sanderson, of Philadelphia. The party with their servants are established at Mr. Fisk's cottage, Onaway, near the Waumbek."

A Morning Runaway.

The horse attached to the business wagon of Marsh, Ayres & Co., ran away Tuesday morning on East Second street. While his driver had removed the bridle to adjust it the horse departed suddenly. After shivering a hitching post with the wagon the horse left its charge behind and chased several pedestrians off the sidewalk. Matthew Coon captured the animal before any more damage was done. Harness and wagon suffered severely.

A DECLAMATION CONTEST

LEAL'S SENIORS HELD THEIR CLOSING EXERCISES MONDAY NIGHT.

First Prize Awarded to George H Richards and Second Prize to Thomas L. Thomas—Honorable Mention for Many.

Society lent its most flattering approval and turned out in force for the closing exercises of John Leal's School, held in the Casino last Monday. A class of eleven young men was graduated and all will enter college in the fall. The senior declamation contest, which formed a principal part of the programme of the evening, proved to be very interesting and reflected much credit on those who had instructed the young men in oratory.

The speakers and their subjects were as follows: Howard Emory Bushnell, "Culture in Emergencies;" Aubrey Congdon Crowe, "The Man for the Crisis;" Howard LaChevalier Roome, "The Victor of Marengo;" George Stuart Simons, Jr., "Jenks' Infernal Machine;" Owen Howard Fleming, "Poetry the Language of Symbolism;" William Austin Townsend, "A Plea for Enthusiasm;" George Huntington Richards, "Puritanism;" Thomas Lewis Thomas, "The Traditions of Massachusetts." First prize in the contest was given to George H. Richards and second to Thomas L. Thomas.

At the close of the exercises, Mr. Leal spoke a few words to the graduates and then announced the honorable mentions as follows: Algebra, Fred L. Brown, David C. Griggs, A. M. Terriberry; geometry, A. M. Terriberry; French, Hugh G. VanderVeer; German, Aubrey C. Hull; Latin, Frank Simons, George H. Richards, John Hall; physics, Hugh G. VanderVeer; English composition, John Hall; Greek, Aubrey C. Hull; Junior department, Henry Babcock.

An orchestra rendered several selections during the evening. The ushers were A. C. Hull, C. S. Roome, W. J. Roome, Jr., and George Dupee. A reception and dance followed the exercises and was largely attended by the younger set of Plainfield society.

JERSEY CENTRAL YIELDS.

Railroad Company Removes Its Own Cars and Other Property from South Cove.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey began this morning to remove all of its property from the South Cove, of which the Street and Water Board of Jersey City took possession Saturday last, it having been decided that the filled in portion, as well as the water, belonged to the city, and that the Central Railroad was a trespasser. The city had tried for over two years to get the railroad to pay rent for the land.

When the city tore up the Central's tracks on the South Cove land and held up nearly fifty coal cars the Central came to terms, and asked the Street and Water Commissioners to come to some agreement in the matter. The Commissioners could not compromise, and declared that no terms could be discussed until every vestige of Central Railroad property was off the city's land.

Vice-President Williams agreed to remove all of the railroad's property if the Street and Water Board would permit him to lay a temporary track and would give him five days in which to do the work. The necessary permission was granted at the meeting of the Street and Water Board yesterday. The Central must not only remove its cars and tracks but must also tear down two trestles and a bugeshed.

Good Outlook for Peaches.

The present outlook for peaches in the neighborhood of Glenwood is very encouraging. It is estimated that 45,000 baskets will be shipped from that station if the conditions remain favorable during the season. Many of the farmers in that section of the country are converting large portions of their farms into peach orchards, and it is said that 100,000 trees are annually set out in that vicinity.

CONSTABLE ROUTED WITH PITCHFORKS.

Thrilling Experience of Bob Mattox and His Deputies.

WENT AFTER HERD OF COWS

EXECUTION AGAINST THEM TO SATISFY A JUDGMENT.

Ernest Tietz, a Farmer at Dog Corners, Very Successfully Repelled the Constabulary Forces, and Now Brings Suit for $300 Damages—Charge of Assault Against Constable.

Another exciting chapter has been added to the famous attachment case at Dog Corners. It appears that Ernest C. Kieb, of Fanwood, sued Ernest Tietz, of Dog Corners, for a debt. Kieb secured judgment and Constable W. R. Mattox, of this city, was authorized to go to Dog Corners and make a levy on seven cows, which the owner valued at $280. These cows were sold to E.C. Kieb for $6 to satisfy the judgment. This sale was held June 7th.

Constable Mattox claims that he was set upon by Tietz and his wife who assaulted him. Saturday last he went to the home of Mr. Tietz for the purpose of taking the cows. Remembering his previous experience he went prepared to meet his adversaries. In addition to carrying a revolver, he was accompanied by his son, Patrolman Mattox, Ernest Kieb, Mr. Kieb's son, and John Donnell, of Fanwood.

The constable and his deputies arrived in good shape and immediately made known their mission. As the cows were in a large field surrounded by a fence, they thought the best way would be to tear down the fence and chase the cows out. In this effort they were rebuffed and a fight soon followed, in which Mr. Tietz and wife battled with the constable and his deputies.

It is said that Mrs. Tietz suffered greatly from loss of dress and also received a number of bruises. It is also stated that the constable drew a revolver from his pocket and threatened to shoot if harmony and quiet were not restored.

By this time things were becoming rather warm and Tietz and his wife were doing well in defending their rights. They realized that they would be beaten in the fight unless they had help, so they began to scream. This attracted the attention of neighbors who hastily appeared with pitchforks and shovels and joined the man and his wife in the battle. In a short time the enemy was chased away. In the clouds of dust the coat tails of the flying army could be seen occasionally.

Mr. Tietz came to Plainfield yesterday and consulted Lawyer McClure who has brought suit against Mr. Kieb for $300 and the goods will be replevined. The suit has been brought in the Elizabeth District Court.

Justice Jones, of Fanwood, before whom the first case was tried, has gone to New York, and papers in the case are not accessible. For this reason the details in that cannot be ascertained. It is understood that a suit will be brought against Constable Mattox for assault on Mrs. Tietz, who received severe injuries in Saturday's fight.

REPAIRS TO A SCHOOL.

Board of Education Receives Estimates of Cost for Work on Whittier Building.

There was a brief session of the Board of Education Monday. The meeting was called for the purpose of opening bids for repairs and alterations to be made to the Whittier School building. All members of the Board were present except Mr. Abbott.

Bids were received from the following: John Abbott, $1,593; H. E. Gayle, $1,500; Mundy Bros., $1,400; Carney Bros., $280; A. M. Griffen, $486; Wm. M. Pangborn, $397. The first three bids offered to do all the work save the galvanized iron work. The other bids were for the iron and galvanized work. The work is to be done according to plans furnished by C. Powell Karr. Upon motion of Mr. Probasco, the matter was referred to the building committee with power.

The Board then adjourned.

Bridge Work Progressing.

Progress is being made on the new iron bridge over Green brook on Union avenue, at Bound Brook. The big iron girders were taken from the car Saturday and will be placed in position this week.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK
called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

FELL FROM CHERRY TREE

SERIOUS ACCIDENT THAT BEFELL A DUNELLEN MAN.

John W. Case Missed His Footing and Fell Twenty-five Feet—His Injuries May Cost Him His Life Also.

Dunellen, June 20.—John W. Case, aged fifty years, residing near the borough, met with an accident yesterday which may cost him his life. He was picking cherries in a large tree and was about twenty-five feet from the ground. In changing his position he missed his footing and fell headfirst the entire distance to the ground. The tree stands not far from the house and members of the family were greatly startled by hearing a strange noise. They rushed from the house and saw Mr Case lying in a helpless condition. He was unable to move himself and he could only talk faintly.

Just as quickly as possible he was taken to the house and the best of home remedies were applied. Mr. Case complained greatly of sharp shooting pains in his hips and shoulders, and it is feared that he has sustained serious injuries internally. He is still unable to move about and he has to be helped to everything.

One very serious feature of his condition is the fact that he is so old, and the application of all sorts of remedies fail to bring the desired warmth to his body. Several times Mr. Case has fainted away, but would come to in a few minutes. He seems to retain his mind and knows everything that is going on or said to him.

Owing to the fact that Mr. Case is rather infirm his injuries are all the more serious, and the extent of them have not as yet been ascertained. A physician was called and everything possible is being done to relieve the sufferer from pain and to assist in his complete recovery.

FELL UNDER MOVING CAR

THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF WOMAN WITH BABE IN ARMS.

Attempted to Get Off the Train While it was in Motion—Rescued Just in Time by Baggagemaster Henry Hanson.

Mrs. Peter Jonas, of 442 West Fourth street, had the thrilling experience Sunday evening of falling under the wheels of a moving train at the North Avenue station. Luckily, she was dragged from her perilous position by Night Baggagemaster Henry Hanson before the wheels struck her.

Mrs. Jonas attempted to leave the 8:23 eastbound train on its arrival here Sunday evening. Owing to the crowd to get aboard she was pushed back and did not get a chance to descend until just as the train started. She tried to step off backward with her five year-old son in her arms. She slipped and fell right under the car. A cry of horror went up from the crowd, but Hanson and another man rescued her in just in time.

Dr. J. T. Fritts was summoned and found that she was badly bruised by the fall and suffering from the nervous shock of the accident. She was taken home. The boy was not injured.

A Musical Treat.

A musical treat is in store for Plainfielders next week Tuesday evening, when the choir of the First Baptist church will present Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and selections from the "Redemption," by Gounod, under the direction of E. J. Fitzhugh, musical director for the choir. The solo parts will be taken by Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward, Wm. Holmes, G. W. Smith and G. L. Moore. The choir has been rehearsing the works for sometime and a finished performance is guaranteed. The entire proceeds of the concert will be given to the Muhlenberg Hospital for the building fund, and liberal patronage should be accorded.

BOARD OF TRADE TALKS TROLLEY.

Question of Transfers to Dunellen Looked Into.

LOCAL COMPANY TO BLAME.

BRUNSWICK TRACTION COMPANY WILLING TO BE FAIR.

C. W. Runyon Investigated the Subject and Found That the Plainfield Street Railway Company Did Not Seem Anxious to Serve the Public—Riker Never Answered Any Letters.

There was a quorum at the meeting of the Board of Trade Monday evening and some business of importance was considered. The by-laws were so amended that in the future seven persons shall constitute a quorum instead of eleven, as heretofore. A committee, consisting of Harry C. Runyon, L. J Spicer and Wm. A. Woodruff, was appointed to confer with the Fourth of July committee to arrange for special railroad rates between Elizabeth and Somerville and this city for July 4th.

A communication was received from Perrin, Frantz & Co., glove manufacturers, of New York, asking the Board to do something toward having the trolley extended to Washingtonville, where their factory is located. In this connection it was stated that the trolley company objected to the extension somewhat on account of the frequent blasting in the Valley. The matter was referred to the special trolley committee. Chas W. Runyon reported that he had interviewed Mr. Radel, of the Brunswick Traction Company, regarding that company coming to Plainfield, as well as about the transfer system at Dunellen. He learned that the company would like to get into this city, if the Board could help them to do so, but they did not want to do anything to cause feeling with the Plainfield company. Mr. Runyon then told at some length about the agreement between the two companies about the transfer system, and in his opinion the Plainfield company had failed to keep their agreement. He said that Mr. Radel informed him that he wanted to run his road for the benefit of the public and was willing to agree to any thing reasonable. He said that the Plainfield company charged his company $5 to allow one of his cars to come to this city and go out, a pretty good price when it is considered the Plainfield company pays $2 a day for a car, and they require forty minutes to come in and go out. Mr. Radel said that he was willing to meet Mr. Riker at the Board meeting anytime agreeable and fix matters satisfactorily.

In connection with this Secretary Runyon stated that he had written twice to Mr. Riker about the matter, and that person had not even replied to the letters.

Another matter, introduced by C. W. Runyon, will be investigated by the special committee, and that is regarding the use of side rails on the Plainfield trolley cars. It was reported to be a nuisance, especially where there is a single track, and it was a source of inconvenience to all.

The Board decided to drop the following persons from the roll for non-payment of dues: W. A. Clum, C. W. Lines, Bard Cycle Company, J. F. McIntyre, J. M. Hetfield, Nelson Giles, Frank Hand, Henry Jessup, J. M. Schorb, Jr., C. D. French and Putnam & DeGraw. There are twenty-six names on the roll which will be dropped at the next meeting if they do not settle in the meantime. They will be notified of this action and given an opportunity to pay up.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that their is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Rahway Firemen to Parade.

The officers of the various companies in the Rahway Fire Department held a meeting Friday night to take steps for a parade of the Rahway firemen next October. Owing to the fact that all the companies were not present, there was not much done at the meeting except to talk the matter over, and the proposition to have a parade met with favor from those in attendance. Another meeting will be held next week, at which representatives from all the companies are expected to be present.

Middlesex's Remodeled Courthouse.

New Brunswick, June 21.—The Public Buildings Committee of the Middlesex County Board of Freeholders has adopted the plans of George K. Persell, of this city, for the rebuilding of the Middlesex County Courthouse in this city. The plans provide for the erection of an addition to the present building, and when completed will modernize the present antiquated structure. It is estimated that the work will be done at a cost of about $8,000.

Miss Harriet S Loomis, of New York city, who has been the guest of Miss M. G. Morse, of Franklin place, has left for Easton.

ALL WENT WELL AT THE FRUHLINGFEST.

Large Attendance Marked the Succesful Affair.

FOR INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

HELD AT PARISH HOUSE OF CHURCH OF HEAVENLY REST.

Bright Decorations on the Lawn—Handsome Booths Arranged in Parish House—Affair Was for the Benefit and Under the Auspices of the Parish Industrial School—The Assistants in Various Departments.

"Wasn't it great?" said the patrons of the Fruhlingfest as they bid adieu to the waving lanterns and fluttering flags and the gay scene within the parish house.

"Wasn't it," came the reply. And such was the unanimous opinion of the folk, old and young, who thronged to the parish house and lawn of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, on Clinton avenue, Saturday afternoon and evening. The Fruhlingfest, or Spring festival as every German student will translate it, was given for the benefit and under the auspices of the Industrial school of the parish. While held in the parish house, it has been a nonsectarian institution and has been supported and conducted by the workers in that and other churches.

While it was rather chilly for an ideal lawn festival the visitors thronged there all the afternoon and evening. Over a hundred Japanese lanterns were distributed over the lawn, giving color to the scene in the daytime and a mild illumination at night. Flags of all nations waved on every side.

The tables for the serving of ice cream were placed on the lawn, while a tent served as headquarters for that department. Here Mrs. Alice S. Brown, superintendent of the school, reigned as chairman, with Mrs. J. O. Stevens and Miss Bulkley as her able assistants. The waitresses were the Misses Irene Kitchen, Lena Arnold, Florence Phillips, Louise Eisemann, Elizabeth Becker, Sadie Hand, Minnie Gunzelman, Lillian Duckworth, Edith Huson, Viola Stutz and Emma Scribner.

The other booths were in the parish house which was gay indeed with bright decorations. One end of the main room was partially partitioned off with a screen of ferns and flowers. There an orchestra of four pieces spent the afternoon and evening rendering popular and classical selections.

On the right of the entrance was the cake booth, a charming combination of pink and white where was displayed an attractive assortment of cakes of all sizes and varieties. Mrs. W. E. Albertson was in charge, assisted by Miss Florence Williams and Miss Grace Brown.

The fancy work booth, a creation in green, showed the work of some of the pupils of the school. There were a great variety of fancy articles, all the handiwork of the children. Miss Alice Gilbert was in charge with the Misses Sadies Kriney, Sara Montgomery, Nettie Thompson, Stella Anderson and Lena Crane as her assistants.

A corner was devoted to the candy booth while lavender and white prevailed in the tasteful decoration. Most of the toothsome dainties were of handmade manufacture. Miss Mary E. Wilson was chairman, with the Misses Alice Barlow, Frances Phillips fand Helen Phillips as the other members of the committee, and the Misses Mabel Hand, Nellie Dow, Florence Morrison, Alice Lude, M. Burt, Helen Fulton, S. Saums, I. Talamy and Etta Randolph.

A lemonade well, surrounded by flowers and ferns, was well patronized. Mrs. VanAistyne, Miss Hattie Curris and Miss Viola Leivers were in charge, assisted by the Misses Irene Bell, Clara Scribner, Nellie Hanahan, Lois Hanson and Katie Overland.

There was a grocery department where Uneeda biscuit and other objects of interest to the housekeeper were sold. Miss Martin was in charge, assisted by the Misses Helen and Nellie Thompson. The decorations there were orange and white.

Miss Nellie Arthur was in charge of the drug department, a small booth of orange.

A delegation in the costumes of the Japanese land cared for the Japanese booth, a real eastern arrangement in which crimson was the prevailing color. Mrs. Francis G. Moore was in charge with Mrs. W. T. Pelletier, and the Misses Maria B. Morgan, Nina Morgan, Wenona Dodds and Alice Ashworth as her assistants.

One of the attractions out on the lawn was the so-called "shooting gallery" where small rubber images of colored boys were the targets and rubber balls the ammunition. Robert Larmour was in charge. At the entrance, Thomas Minford, Charles King, Lawrence Robert, Lawrence Tweedy and Dudley Furguson divided the duties of collecting tickets.

W. W. Moore exercised general supervision over the whole affair and lent his aid and assistance where it was most needed. He was a busy man, indeed, all the afternoon and evening but found time to look after the wants of the little people as well as the older. William Ashworth was also a very valuable man and assisted in the general charge of the grounds.

The patrons were many and they came with well filled pockets. As a result, the treasury of the Industrial School was increased by a goodly sum, the exact amont of which has not yet been announced.

POLICE WILL LAUGH NOW

OFFENDING WHEELMEN MUST GIVE SECURITY HEREAFTER.

So Many Have Failed to Appear When Ordered That Chief Grant Will Try More Effective Measures Hereafter.

"He who laughs last, laughs best." So quoted Chief Grant Monday a. m. The Chief says that the wheelmen have been laughing at the police. Now he says the police are going to laugh at the bicyclists. The cause of all this laughing is the frequent violation of the bicycle ordinance. The offenders are arrested and ordered to appear before the City Judge. This they very frequently forget to do.

Saturday night, there were six arrests made for violation of the bicycle ordinance. All the offenders were ordered to appear before the City Judge Monday. Only two showed up. It is a common practice and Chief Grant was thus led to make the remark already mentioned. Now the Chief has given instructions to all the officers to compel the wheelmen to leave their bicycles or other good security to insure their appearance when ordered. If they will not do that, then the orders are to lock up the offending wheelmen.

A lad named Kendall Collins appeared Monday a. m. He was up for riding on the sidewalk on Putnam avenue. Patrolman McCarty made the arrest. The Judge suspended sentenced with a warning. A. O. Shannon had been out riding and his gas lamp exploded. He came horse without a light and was stopped by Patrolman Lunger. Sentence was suspended.

Robert Yotman, Thomas Washington, Miss Bertha Manning and William Fosbury were the absentees. They were all arrested by Patrolman Watson.

MORTGAGE FOR $100,000.

Watchung Water Company Raising Money by Issuing Bonds.

New Brunswick, June 19—The Watchung Water Company, which does business in this and Somerset counties, has filed a mortgage for $100,000 at the County Clerk's office to secure an issue of $100,000 of coupon bonds. The mortgage covers all of the estate of the company, including real and personal franchises and assets, and is given to the Fidelity Trust Company as trustee. The bonds to be issued will be of $500 denomination, bearing 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

The company's directors decided to mortgage the estate at a special meeting May 31. Charles P. Sebring, of Bound Brook, is president of the company, and Arthur D. Bell is secretary.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

Mrs Pauline Woodward Married to Humphrey A. Bodine.

There was a quiet but pretty home wedding celebrated Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Pauline Woodward, 1004 Putnam avenue, when that lady became the bride of Humphrey A. Bodine of this city. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Stephen P. Simpson, rector of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal church at Netherwood, at 3:30 o'clock, in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The bride was given away by her son, Horace Arthur Woodward. There were no bridesmaids. The bride is the widow of E. H. Woodward and is a lady highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Bodine left Saturday evening on a short wedding tour to visit friends in a distant city. Upon their return they will reside in this city.

Ruth Moore Tells a Thrilling Story.

Ruth Moore, aged fourteen years, complained to the police that she was forced into a wagon Saturday night while she was on her way home and carried into the outskirts of the borough and maltreated by a married man of the borough. The Moore girl spends most her time on the streets and is considered to be in a bad way. Her story will be investigated.

GREAT DAY FOR GOLF AT HILLSIDE LINKS.

Biggest Attendance in History of the Club.

FIRST GAME OF THE TEAM.

THEY SUCCEEDED IN BEATING THE HARBOR HILL AGGREGATION.

Large Number of Contestants for Reinhart Cup and Some Good Scores Were Made by the Players—Visiting Team Outclassed by the Hillside Players—The Scores Given Below in Detail.

Saturday was the biggest day in golf on the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club grounds that has yet been recorded. The weather was all to be desired and it brought out the devotees of the game in large numbers. The course was crowded throughout the afternoon, and in addition to the events scheduled there were many that played on the course simply for their own pleasure. The social features in the clubhouse were greatly enjoyed by all present, and Steward Ivamy was kept busy serving patrons with refreshments.

The greens were in fairly good condition although they are suffering from the want of rain. However, there was little complaint in that direction and good scores were the rule. Especially in the contest for the Reinhart cup were close scores made, and it was particularly noticeable that there were many tie scores, and it was not until the last of the players recorded their scores that the winner of the cup was known. H. V. Ryder was the successful one with a net score of 82. Mr. Ryder had a handicap of 13 which is considered a good one when the ability of the player is compared. Frank Reinhart made the best score, 85, from scratch. However, there were a number of good scores as the following table will show. This cup has been won once by H. V. Ryder, Frederick Wals, F. O. Jard, Olaf Sangstaud, while J. H. P. Wharton, Jr., has won it twice. The person winning it three time becomes the permanent owner. The cup will be contested for again next September. The scores of Saturday are as follows:

	Gross	Handicap	Net
H. V. Ryder	95	13	82
Frank Reinhart	85	0	85
Howard Beebe	95	10	85
J. H. P. Wharton, Jr.	101	15	86
W. V. VanBuren	103	18	85
C. Gienner	99	2	97
Howard Huntington	103	18	85
Owen Fleming	97	10	87
Frank Talmadge	99	0	99
J. C. West	107	17	90
F. O. Jard	97	6	91
E. J. Waring	99	8	91

W. T. Kaufman	107	10	97
A. H. Fisk	100	2	98
Frank Bookerck	105	5	100
Olaf Sangstand	108	7	101
Reeve Stockton	107	5	102
A. G. Patterson	115	12	103
D. H. Barrows	121	18	103
F. Wals	120	17	103

The next big event was the match play between the Hillside team and a team from Harbor Hill Golf Club. The home team played in fine form, while the visitors were unable to maintain their reputation and win out. The visiting team was composed of some of the best players from their club, while the remainder of the team was at home contesting in another match. Owing to the fact that they were one man short a nine-man team played. Captain Sangstaud seemed be out of form and was one of two members of his team to be defeated. This was the first game for the new team and they acquitted themselves with credit. A return game will be played at some date in the near future. The score of Saturday's match is as follows:

Harbor Hill.		Hillside.
O. Hockmeyer	8	Olaf Sangstand	5
O. Hockmeyer	0	C. W. Fisk	5
Frank Lawton	0	Frank Reinhart	5
P. R. King	0	J. H. P. Wharton, Jr.	5

One of the Happiest Men in Town

W. W. Warnock, baker, 138 North avenue, informs us that for years his bunions and corns kept him in misery. Nothing or nobody could do any good. He was advised by cured friends to consult Mr. Brown, 145 West Second street. Mr. Warnock says he went to the specialist's office limping and when he left he felt like dancing with joy, and what is marvellous the treatment is painless and bloodless, not a bit of pain after. Owing to home office engagements Mr. Brown's Plainfield visit soon closes.

Plainfield Lawyers Take a Hand.

Friday evening last there was a meeting of the State Bar Association at Hadden Hall, Atlantic City, when every county in the State was represented. At this meeting a temporary organization was effected with the election of Attorney-General Grey as chairman, Craig A. Marsh, representing Union county, and Charles A. Reed, of Somerset county, were appointed on a committee to report constitution, organization and by-laws, Judge E. S. Atwater, of Elizabeth, also represents the Union County Bar Association.

PYTHIAN KNIGHTS HONORED THEIR DEAD.

Held Services in all the Local Cemeteries.

PYTHIAN DECORATION DAY.

RATHBONE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN ASSISTED IN CERMONIES.

Uniformed Knights Marched Into Cemeteries With Reversed Arms and Lowered Colors to the Dead March Played With Muffled Drums—Impressive Services—Graves Decorated in Morning.

The graves of the Pythian Knights in the local cemeteries were decorated and appropriate services held over them by their living brother Knights Sunday, the time set for the Pythian Decoration Day. The services of the day were under the charge of Crescent Compay, Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias. It was the first time since the day was first observed in this city six years ago that there has not been an interruption of the services by rain.

In the morning, details of two Knights from Crescent Company visited the North Plainfield, Greenwood, Hillside and the Scotch Plains cemeteries and decorated the graves of the Knights there. There were nineteen graves in all. The decorations consisted of flowers, the United States flags and the Pythian emblem.

In the afternoon the members of Crescent Company, to the number of twenty-six, commanded by Captain J. E. Flannery, assembled in the rooms of Pers-verance Lodge. Accompanied by the Independent Fife and Drum Corps and fifteen uniformed Knights, they marched to the North Avenue station to meet the 2:07 train from New York. On it were twenty-one members of the Justice H. Rathbone Company, of Brooklyn, commanded by Captain Hale.

The procession then moved to the North Plainfield cemetery, where the services were conducted by Crescent Company, David Bowen acting as chaplain. On entering the cemeteries, the Knights reversed their swords, the colors were lowered while the drum corps played the dead march with muffled drums.

The companies next marched to the Evergreen and Methodist cemeteries on Plainfield avenue where the impressive Pythian service was conducted by the visiting company. Stages then bore the Knights to Hillside and then to Scotch Plains, the Crescent Company conducting the services. At Hillside a photograph was taken.

A collation was served at Hand's Hotel, Scotch Plains, and then the Knights returned in time to allow the Brooklyn Knights to catch the 8:13 train for New York.

FROM DEFENDANT TO PLAINTIFF.

August Trost Now Sues A. Lincoln Clark for $173.50.

Some three months ago A. Lincoln Clark, of New York, brought an action against August O. Trust, of North Carolina, to recover the amount of $900 alleged to be due on a note held by Mrs. John M. Schorb, who had assigned it to Clark. Wm. G. De-Meza, of this city, as attorney for Trust, succeeded in having the writ of attachment set aside. The defendants in the action now bring suit to recover $173.50, an amount of expense alleged to have been incurred in travelling expenses, etc.

MARRIED TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Vail Celebrated the Event in a Pleasant Way.

Last Saturday evening Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Vail, of 601 Washington street, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage in a pleasant way surrounded by about seventy-five of the relatives and friends.

The house was appropriately decorated through the use of flowers of all kinds. In the parlor the decorations were especially attractive and it was here that the bride and groom received their friends who showered congratulations on them. The bride was gowned in the dress in which she was married twenty-five years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Vail were the recipients of many costly and useful presents, all of which will be reminders of the pleasant event. During the evening a repast was served.

Quakers Getting Up-to-Date.

That this is an age of improvement is evidenced by the fact that a handsome signboard has been placed on the front of the Orthodox Friends' meeting-house on Watchung avenue, opposite North avenue, telling passersby of the name of that house of religious worship, in gilt letters.

Hank Cuff Didn't Show Up.

Hank Cuff, colored, was arrested by Patrolman Watson Saturday evening for being drunk and disorderly. He was released Sunday morning by Mayor Bockfellow on promising to appear for trial Monday morning. He failed to show up and the officers were instructed to arrest him on sight.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."

Children's Day Exercises at Trinity Reformed Church.

RECITATIONS AND SINGING.

LITTLE CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS PAY HOMAGE TO THE DIETY.

Beautiful Church Decorations, Choice Music and Clever Children Form an Interesting Scene Sunday Morning—Mrs. Tier's Efforts in Training the Little Folks Crown'd With Success.

The catchy, inspiring music, the clever recitations and the entire absence of tiresome features, combined to make the Children's Day exercises at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday morning, the most interesting, perhaps, of any held by this denomination.

The attendance was large and taxed in a measure the seating capacity of the church. The sacred edifice had been beautifully and almost profusely decorated for the occasion. At the front of the platform was erected a good sized arch with gateway extensions on either side. The arch displayed a green background, which was studded with imitations of red roses, while surmounting its apex, with outstretched wings, posed a white dove, the emblem of peace and purity. Above the circle of the arch, in large gilt letters, were the words, "Our Little Ones."

To the right and left of the arch were large palms and about the platform was a profusion of fragrant flowers and potted plants, giving a most picturesque and charming effect that was much admired. Besides the arch, the body of the church was also handsomely decorated, numerous flags and the national colors being used with excellent taste, while conspicuous above all was a festoon of red, white and blue, suspended over the centre of the auditorium, and joined by miniature flags. The entire decorations produced a good effect and are a credit to the artistic skill and taste of the designer, William Olmsted, who had entire charge of the decorations, but who was ably assisted by Miss Grace Smith.

It was fully 10:45 o'clock when the primary department of the school, headed by Mrs. J. M. Tier, the energetic superintendent, was ready to enter the church, where seats had been reserved for them in the centre at the front. Mrs. Tier formed her little Christian soldiers into line in the Sunday-school room. Before doing so, however, the roll was called and it was found that there were present 326 scholars and teachers. Then to the rendering of a voluntary by Organist A. L. Titsworth the children filed in and took seats. At the head of the column, borne by a bright little chap, was carried a handsome silk banner, on both sides of which was the inscription: "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," and on the reverse side simply the word—"Love."

Seated upon the platform on either side of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Schenck, was E. E. Anthony, superintendent of the school, and H. J. Martin, the musical precentor.

To Mrs. Tier should be given the the credit for the success of the affair. She has been indefatigable in her efforts and it is mainly owing to her zeal and energy that the little folks were brought to the degree of efficiency that marked their success and which was as surprising to the parents and friends of the pupils as it must have been gratifying to their instructress.

During the exercises an interesting feature was introduced, and one which will not soon be forgotten by the children of the Sunday-school and those who had the pleasure of witnessing it. It was the administering by Dr. Schenck of the holy rites of baptism to a class of thirteen infants, representing eight families who were brought to the baptismal font by their parents.

The programme given below was a most interesting one, and the children acquitted themselves in a manner highly complimentary to those who aided in bringing them to the success that they attained.

Space, however, is not available to admit of personal mention of all who participated in the interesting exercises. It may not be out of place, though, to speak of the vocal efforts of Master Elmer Bohan who rendered in fine voice "A Little Sunbeam," while Bessie Randall, who recited "His Mother's Songs," and little Miss Elsie Tier in "The King's Jewels," and Miss Helen Woolley in her character sketch (with an armful of dolls) entitled "My Children," gave evidences of considerable elocutionary abilities, and their clever portrayals were cordially received by the large audience.

The finale was a pretty song, given by a bevy of young Misses, each carrying separate flags to represent the different nations, entitled "His Banner Over Us Is Love."

The programme was as follows:

"Children's Day"..... Nettie Robinson.
Song—"We've a Little Song for Jesus"..School
Recitation—"My Boy."..... Elmer Bohan
Recitation—"A Country Lassie."

Recitation—Messages of Nature,".....Delia Dufford, Anna Bos, Agnes Garretson, Elsie Dunavan, Myra Dunavan.
Song—"Little Feet Be Careful"..Laura Bodine
Dialogue—"How it Seemed."..... Mary Neal, Ida Tier

"Little Ones for Jesus."
Clover Song..... School
"A Question"..... Ira Vail
Recitation..... Helen Wooley
Song—"A Little Sunbeam"..... Elmer Bohan
"The King's Jewels"..... Elsie Tier, Ralph Martin, Helen Smith, Florence Wilson, Kattie Gray, Edna Coles, Arthur Williams, Davis Rogers, Russell Vail, Raymond Manley, Emily Temple, Ella Case.
"Grandmother's Maxim."..... Della Dafford
"The Tell-tale Bird"..... Perry Holder
"His Mother's Songs."..... Bessie Randall
"My Children."..... Helen Wooley
"His Banner Over Us Is Love"..... Anna Bodine, Willie Lucker, Laura Bodine.
Song—"The Forget-me-not-Land"..... School

VISITED AT THE 'PLAINS.

MARTIN COFFEY CAME BACK FROM THERE INTOXICATED.

He is Said to Have Talked Back to a Policeman—Went to Jail and was Fined This Morning in City Court.

Martin Coffey went to Scotch Plains Sunday. As a direct result, Martin Coffey spent the night in the city jail and was fined by City Judge Runyon Monday morning. Somewhere on the statute books of this State there is a law saying that liquor shall not be sold Sunday. Coffey's testimony is to the effect that such law was openly violated Sunday in Scotch Plains.

It wasn't the selling of the liquor that involved Coffey in trouble. It was the liquor itself. Once inside of that individual it caused him to perform all sorts of stunts. Patrolman Jerry Cash saw him on South avenue as he was returning. At 9:30 o'clock Patrolman Saffron tried to start him homeward from in front of the Crescent flats on Watchung avenue.

Coffey says that he just came out for a glass of soda water and a cigar, and that he thought Saffron was just joking. The officer says Coffey became abusive in his language and so was locked up. Judge Runyon fined him $3.

BICYCLE THIEF AROUND.

A New Wheel Stolen From a Plaza of a Hillside Avenue Residence.

A thief helped himself to a new Cleveland wheel belonging to Goodwin Beard Saturday night about 10 o'clock. The wheel had been left with another older one on the veranda of Mr. Beard's house, at 329 Hillside Avenue, while its owner was inside playing a game of whist with a friend. The thief selected the best one of the wheels and made off with it. Mr. Beard offers a reward for the return of the wheel and no questions will be asked.

A. G. A. R. SERVICE.

Address to the Veterans by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell Sunday Afternoon.

Sunday afternoon at the W. C. T. U. rooms an interesting service was held for the members of the G. A. R. The superintendent of the soldiers' and sailors' work, Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, arranged the service and presided. After the reading of the Scripture lesson a vocal solo was given by Clifford Braider, accompanied by Mrs. E. E. Anthony. This was followed with an address by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, pastor of Monroe Avenue church. He recited many incidents in connection with the Civil War and showed that many of the prominent leaders were of the Grand Army of the Redeemed. He then urged all to join this army and work for the Lord.

After the above remarks a beautiful duet entitled "God is Love," was sung by Mrs. Honeyman and Miss Jomini, and at the close of the service Mrs. Honeyman gave an effective solo, after which the benediction was pronounced by Pastor O'Donnell.

Loose Stones to be Picked Up.

Mayor Smalley has given instructions to the proper person to have a horse and a man travel over the various streets of the borough and pick up the loose stones of any size that may be lying about. On some streets there are a number of large stones and they are a source of anoyance to cyclers and those who use horses and wagons.

Presented the Diplomas.

The commencement exercises of the Long Branch Public High School were held last Friday evening in St. Luke's M. E. church of that place, and a feature of the event was the presentation of the diplomas to the graduates by S. St. John McCutchen, president of the Borough Board of Education. Mr. McCutchen made a few remarks in his usual happy and appropriate manner.

Got Six Cents Damages.

Justice Mattison rendered his decision Monday in the celebrated case of Compton against Duffy, both of the borough. He awarded the plaintiff 6 cents damages and the defendent pays the costs of the court.

Mrs. Harry Dreier is seriously ill at her home on West Front street.

COMPARING MORALS IN SCOTCH PLAINS.

Pastor Shott Does Not Mince His Words in the Pulpit.

SERMON MADE A SENSATION.

HE BELIEVES MAN IS MORE TO BLAME THAN WOMAN.

Declares That if God Should Separate the Clean and the Unclean There Would be Many Divided Households in Scotch Plains—Does Not Believe in Many of the Church Entertainments Held.

Scotch Plains, June 19.—In connection with his crusade for a higher plane of morals in Scotch Plains, Rev. G. M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, last night preached a sermon that created a sensation greater than any previous pulpit effort along the same line. Rev. Mr. Shott's remarks last night were inspired by the following anonymous communication which he received a few days ago:

"Why does the world patronage a man in business and lionize him in society for destroying the virtue of a poor victim of a woman who, on the other hand, would be turned out into the world, ostracised by society and shunned by all good people."

The receipt of this epistle suggested to Rev. Mr. Shott the aptness of a sermon on "Comparative Morals."

"I believe," said the minister, "that the world may patronize and lionize the destroyer of morals, but that in God's sight the sin of the man was the greater and man should be held doubly blamable for wronging a helpless victim. I deplore that the world makes such a distinction, but God makes none. I know of a western town that receives a certain young man into its best society, who has entree to the best homes in the town, who has a record of thirty betrayed victims. Yet these very so-called good people lionize him in the face of the well-known fact. It would be useless for one of his poor victims to even ask society for a crust of bread. They would be refused and shunned. The world gives woman no chance to repent of her sins; the man's sin's are overlooked."

"I am satisfied," declared the minister, "that if the Lord should separate the clean from the unclean in our fair and beautiful village we should find homes divided. Where are the boys of the future to come from if the boys of the present are to be nestled in sin? Then away with your gambling, beer gardens and other methods of the devil which are in existence in this little town."

"I have become disgusted with churches that are always holding entertainments, festivals, etc., for pleasure. When this is done the church places itself in the social life of the town. Let everyone who is a christian go out tomorrow and sing "I am the Child of the King," and then we will have a revival. But if we sing in a meeting "Only a Step to Jesus," the vilest sinner can join in with us, and they say "I will take that step when I get ready.' Let our morality be such that sin cannot live in our fair village."

DISTURBING CHURCH WORSHIP.

Children Play Romping Games in Front of the Trinity Edifice.

Children living in the vicinity of Trinity Reformed church are becoming quite a disturbing element to the worshippers of that society. Parents seem to forget the fact that several hundred people are sitting in the church listening to Pastor Scheck, and allow their children to go out of doors and romp and play all kinds of boisterous games during the hours of service, especially at the evening hour.

Last evening the children were particularly annoying to preacher and congregation, so much so that two men were compelled to remain outside during the service to keep them quiet. The officers of the church are seriously considering the necessity of appealing to the police department for an officer to be stationed in the vicinity of the church to obviate the nuisance, should it continue as it was last evening.

FUNERAL OF A LITTLE FELLOW.

Episcopal Service Rendered Over Remains of Chauncey Field Runyon.

The funeral services of Chauncey Field Runyon, were held Sunday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock, from the residence of his father, Elmer E Runyon, of Madison avenue. Rev. E. M. Rodman conducted the Episcopal service and was followed by prayer by Rev. Charles L. Goodrick. Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards then spoke a few words.

The remains were taken to the vault at Hillside cemetery, Monday a. m., where the committal service was read by Rev. E. M. Rodman. The bearers were David E. Titsworth, Charles L. Lewis, T. Frank Budlong, Howard J. Runyon, Frank Vosseller, and Frank W. Runyon.

POLITICAL VICTORY FOR SENATOR REED.

George W. Cooper Appointed Postmaster at Somerville.

SENATOR'S COHORTS IN GLEE

THEY THINK THAT THOMPSON'S DOWNFALL IS CERTAIN.

Cooper is Reed's Right Hand Man in the County Seat—Reed Faction Certain That Thompson Will be Badly Defeated When County Convention is Held—How Deal was Made with Clark.

President McKinley's selection of George W. Cooper, Friday, for appointment as postmaster at Somerville, after he had been recommended by Congressman Howell, of the Third district, is regarded as a great political victory for Senator Charles A. Reed, of North Plainfield, in his fight with Chancery Clerk Thompson for the control of the Republican organization in Somerset county.

The result, of course, is that Senator Reed's faction is in high glee. The Reedites now claim that the political downfall of Thompson is assured, for if he is unable to control or influence the appointment of a postmaster in his own town he will still less be able to avert a defeat for himself and cohorts in the county convention next fall.

Cooper has been the right hand man for Senator Reed in the county seat of Somerset for the past two years, and now that he has been able to capture the most important federal office in the county—North Plainfield, the largest town, being deprived of a postmastership on account of being served from the Plainfield office—it is calculated that Senator Reed will be able to wield more influence than ever in Thompson's home community.

Senator Reed has been confident all along that he would be able to land Cooper as postmaster to succeed former Congressman Alvah Clark, who is Reed's father-in-law, and through whom the Senator was able to get the quiet tip as to what time was most opportune for the springing of the candidacy of Cooper upon Congressman Howell.

As a matter of fact, it is asserted that Mr. Clark put his resignation in the hands of his son in-law, though they differ in politics, so that the resignation and the application of Cooper could be filed at the same time without the knowledge of the Thompson faction of the Republican party.

Senator Reed is at Belmar today and therefore could not be seen by a Press reporter to get his views concerning the appointment of Cooper.

CANDLE AND OAKUM.

They Formed a Combination to Call Out the Fire Department.

A candle and a bale of oakum became acquainted in A. M. Griffin's hardware store, East Front street, Saturday at 7:15 o'clock a. m. The bale of oakum was resting in the back of the store and the candle was in the hands of a young man named Duffy. Their acquaintance ripened with much rapidity. Duffy told the neighborhood.

Collector James Martin was passing and sent in an alarm from Box 12. The fire department turned out without loss of time. Meanwhile the bale of oakum had been carried outdoors and a pail of water had quenched the flames. The damage done was only to the bale.

RECEIVED THEIR SHEEPSKINS.

Plainfield Boys Graduated From the Lehigh University.

Among the graduating class at Lehigh University, at Bethlehem, this year, who received their sheepskins last Wednesday, were George A. Horne, of Willow avenue, and James M. Middledith, of Mercer avenue. Horne graduated from the North Plainfield Public School and afterwards from the Plainfield High School in 1895. He took up the study of chemistry and received the degree of A. C. on his graduation. He was one of the best students of his class and graduated with honors. Middledith was a graduate of Mr. Leal's School in this city and took up the mechanical engineering course. He received the degree of M. E. on graduation.

Their Silver Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hodge, of West Front street, new comers to this city, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage at their home Wednesday evening. Guests were present from many Jersey towns, and the occasion was one of pleasure to all. The bride and groom received many tokens of value which will always help them to remember with pleasure the happy event.

Library Benefit.

The Ladies' Orchestra, under the direction of Mrs. J. E. Buckley, gave an entertainment at Basking Ridge last Friday for the benefit of the public library at that place. The hall where the entertainment was held was crowded and the people greatly enjoyed the musical programme.

TITLED BRAZILIAN CUT A GREAT SWATH.

Bound Brookers Badly Taken in by the Gentleman.

LIVED IN HIGH STYLE.

THOUGHT TO BE RICH, BUT EJECTED FROM HOUSE HE RENTED.

The Marquis Said to be Related to Dom Pedro, the Deposed Emperor of Brazil—Visions of Gold Mines and Other Sources of Wealth Gave the Marquis High Standing Among the Townspeople.

Last spring the real estate agents of this place nearly had a fit in falling over each man bearing the imperious title Domo other to cater to the wants of a noble Eugenio Farlo Gonzales de Teixeria Maquis of Aguila Branca, who was alleged to have fabulous wealth in ready cash, gold mines and landed properties in Brazil. He had resided, it was said, on West End avenue, New York, for sometime previous to that, living in regal style and spending money in strict conformity to his high-sounding title.

Through some friends he met in business circles he was induced to come to Bound Brook and look around. After making the trip and seeing the luxuries of the little borough on the Raritan canal he decided that it was just the place for him and his family, consisting of his mother, two children and himself. It soon became noised around the prosaic little town that a real Marquis was to appear upon the scene and take up his residence on the aristocratic hillside section of the town The towns folks were set ago by the prospect of such an acquisition to their citizens, and everyone started in to make life as happy as a seven days' lark for the noble Brazilian.

Among the leaders are the real estate agents. The Marquis had numerous houses offered for his use, but after much hesitation he decided to rent the Farlee house on Union avenue. In due time the Marquis and his family appeared and took up their residence in the Farlee house. The family lived high and ran big bills at the local grocery and meat shops.

It happened that about the first of each month the Marquis was detained on important business in New York and was unable to attend to the bills rendered him. Finally, after having run up bills amounting to several hundred dollars, the family of Marquis left for New York to ostensibly spend a few days. They had been gone but a short time when the news began to circulate that the Marquis' business ventures had been a failure and his wealth—gold mines and all—had been swept out of his grasp and he was impoverished.

This was the signal for the Dime Savings Bank, which owns the property rented by the Marquis, to immediately serve dispossess notices on those that remained of the noble household—the servants. They were soon hustled out of the house, and the household fixtures of the Marquis confiscated by the creditors.

Now all Bound Brook mourns its Marquis.

It is said that the mother of the Marquis was a first cousin of the deposed Don Pedro.

NO WORD FROM BULLMAN

HIS WIFE HAS NOT THE SLIGHTEST IDEA WHERE HE IS.

He Had Met With Financial Reverses and it is Possible That He Went to Recuperate There—Highly Respected.

George W. Bullman, the ex-Free holder, of Stone street, who went away from home four weeks ago, has not yet been heard from. He told his wife the day he left that he was going to look for work and would not return until he found it. Notwithstanding this, Mrs. Bullman had no idea that he would stay away a month without communicating with her.

It is true that Mr. Bullman has had financial reverses and it was necessary that some extra effort should be made to meet expenses. He is a man that has always been held in the highest respect. Mrs. Bullman is nearly heartbroken over her husband's disappearance. She has made every effort possible to locate him, but without success. He secured a small amount of money to go away with, but not enough to make it an object for anyone to waylay him for the purpose of robbing him.

Mrs. Bullman has three children, two of whom are boys. The boys are working for small compensation, and cannot well be expected to contribute largely towards the expenses of the home.

Thefts are Others.

Mayor Rockfellow desires to say to the public that he hopes they will not forget to subscribe for the Fourth of July celebration. He does not want all the money left at his place, but there are other members of the committee who are authorized to receive subscriptions and he would be pleased if the people will remember them.

WOULD BE A POLICEMAN.

BUT IT WAS AS PRISONER HE WENT TO STATION HOUSE.

Patrick Dougherty, Five Weeks in This Country, Wanted an Opportunity on Police Force—Begging Was Found Better.

The old country did not offer a wide enough field for the abilities of Patrick Dougherty to expand in this proper line. So it was that six weeks ago he sailed for the United States to become a policeman until something of a more attractive nature turned up.

Dougherty first went to New York. Chief Devery did not need him at the time and he next tried Newark The police force of that city was not enlarging its numbers and he failed to get an appointment. Last Wednesday he started for Plainfield.

In this beautiful city he found a more congenial occupation than guardian of the peace. The people here were so kind to him, he said, that it wasn't necessary to join the police force. Then, too, he discovered that it was necessary to know something to even be a candidate for the Plainfield police department

So, for the past few days, Dougherty has been living on the fat of the land. Saturday at 8 o'clock, a. m. Rounds man Frederickson found him begging from house to house on East Seventh street. So the officer made the acquaintance of Mr. Dougherty and took him for a visit to the city jail.

The stranger was a little man with a brilliant complexion. He turned his trousers wrong side out to save the other side, he explained, for festal occasions. He begged City Judge Runyon to allow him to go and promised never to return. The Judge consented to that arrangement and Dougherty hustled out of view.

MARRIED AT HIGH NOON.

Miss Annie B. Stone Wedded to F. H. Robertson, of Newark.

At high noon Wednesday occurred the marriage of Miss Annie B. Stone, of Central avenue, and Frederic H. Robertson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Robertson, of Newark. Rev. Father Smyth, pastor of St. Mary's church, performed the ceremony. The bride was gowned in white silk en train and a tulle veil fastened with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a white prayer book, the gift of her eldest sister.

After the happy event Mr. and Mrs. Robertson left for a wedding trip to Niagara Falls, and on their return they will join the groom's parents at Asbury Park until September, when they will go to Sparta, N. J., until November. After that they will be at home to their friends at 31 Chestnut street, Newark.

Site For the Fountain.

A site for the public drinking fountain for animals as well as man, has been secured on North avenue and work will be begun as soon as sufficient money has been received by Mrs. D. S. Miller, 442 Orchard place, who is treasurer of the fund.

AN ENDLESS CHAIN.

A Business Man Tangled Up With a General Utility Citizen.

"I suppose we all get caught at times," remarked a well-known business man, "but I have had an experience that was particularly mortifying to one who has been in business for forty years.

"I received, some time ago, a letter from a party living in a little town in the west, who wanted a small bill of goods.

"Not finding his name in either Dun's or Bradstreet's, I wrote the postmaster for the man's standing. I received a very flattering letter in return, saying that the party referred about was the one of the town's solid citizens and good for any amount.

"This allayed any suspicion that I had, and I forwarded the goods ordered.

"I sent three bills before I received an answer, and then it was not satisfactory. I allowed the matter to run for some time, and, at last, getting a saucy answer in reply to a letter of mine asking for a settlement, I lost my temper and wrote the postmaster a letter, telling him to hand the matter over to the leading attorney in town for collection, no matter what the cost would be.

"It wasn't long before I received an answer from the postmaster saying he had followed my instructions and handed the matter to an attorney, who had succeeded in collecting the amount, but at a considerable expense. In fact, the attorney had a bill against me for double that he had collected, and that he the postmasters had paid it and would look to me for the amount.

"Here was a situation. I hadn't instructed the postmaster to act as my cashier, but thinking that was the western way of it, and not caring to have the postmaster have to pay the amount, I sent him a check, and considered the matter closed.

"But the other day I chanced to meet a party who formerly lived in that town, and I asked him if he knew the party who had beaten me out of a bill of goods. He said he did. He was a prominent citizen for the whole neighborhood. Ran a general store, kept the post office, and, when he could get nothing else to do, took what business he could get as a lawyer. He added that he appeared to be making money, but it was a mystery to every one how he managed it.

"But it was no mystery to me. I had seen a great light. He has an endless chain arrangement that will make him a fortune if some one doesn't get mad and go out there and kill him."

WERE GUESTS OF MR. LEE

PLEASANT TIME FOR PLAINFIELDERS ON THE LEHIGH.

Enjoyed a Pleasurable Jaunt to Summit Hill, Pa., Were They Were Shown the Sights of a Rich Coal Producing Section.

The Lansford (Pa.) Record prints the following interesting item about a trip of a Plainfield party:

Two score of the best people of Plainfield, New Jersey, reached Summit Hill over the Switch Back Railroad in charge of the Messrs Blaksiee, its new lessees, on Thursday and dined at the Eagle Hotel. They were the guests of Charles S. Lee, the up-to-date General Passenger Agent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad.

After partaking of an elegant spread Mr. Lee's party was taken in charge by W. G. Whildin and provided with a special car for a trip to Tamaqua and return. The ride down the mountain and through the Panther Valley enabled the visitors to pass through the richest coal section in the world. The return trip was just as pleasant, as the trolley climbed the mountain with the ease and grace of a Black Diamond.

Between the ride up the Lehigh Valley, over the famous Switch Back, the dinner, and the trolley jaunt, the party was profuse in its thanks to Mr. Lee for the day's outing and voted him a jolly good fellow.

The jovial party was composed of Mrs. Lee, Mr. Herring, Mrs. Dale, Mrs. Slawson, Isaac Miller, Mrs. Josiah Brown, Mr. Andrews, Alonzo Blakslee, Mr. Atterbury, Mrs. Fleming, Mr. Appleton, Mrs. Monroe, Mr. West, Miss Lee, Miss Barlow, Mr. VanBuren, Miss Stewart, John Miller, Dean Rodman, Mrs. Hyatt, Asa Blakslee, Mr. and Mrs. W. DeWitt Miller, *Mr. Hyatt, Mr. Conklin, Mrs. Stock*ton, Mr. Conklin, Mrs. Stewart, Mr. Flemming, Mrs. Atterbury, Miss Marsh, Mr. Monroe, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Andrews, Mr. Slawson, Mrs. Hedges, Mr. Dale, Mrs. Herring, Mr. Lee.

GOODIES TO TICKLE PALATE.

Ice Cream and Cake Sale Given at the Miss Lackey's Home.

An ice cream and cake sale was held Friday from 7 until 10 o'clock, at the home of Miss Mary Adelaide Luckey, of Lafayette place, by the members of Miss Luckey's class in the First Presbyterian church Sunday-school and a few of their friends. The house presented a very attractive appearance, the piazzas being hung with Japanese lanterns. Little tables were scattered about the drawing room, but the crowd overflowed into the dining room also. Home made candy was on sale in the dining room, under the charge of Miss Violet Beerbower and Miss Mildred Ulrich. Ice cream and cake were served by Miss Beatrice Miner, assisted by Miss Ella Lounsbury, Miss Pauline Denton and Miss Helen Bolce. The house was well filled all through the evening. Piano solos were played during the evening by Miss Violet Beerbower. The proceeds of the affair amounted to ten dollars.

HOME LIFE OF CHINESE WOMAN.

Interesting Missionary Address Given in Trinity Church.

"Home Life of a Chinese Woman," was the subject of a very interesting talk before the Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church Friday evening, by Mrs. VanDyke, of New Brunswick, for several years a missionary at Amoy, China. Her talk was full of entertaining information regarding the Chinese women and children in their home life, and as Mrs. VanDyke was born and reared of missionary parents and speaks the language fluently her talk was all the more interesting. Her father, Rev. Leonard W. Kipp, has been in the missionary service of the Master for nearly forty years. Mrs. F. E. Woodruff, president of the band, lead the business meeting preceding Mrs. VanDyke's talk and the reports of the chairman of the various committees showed the band to be a very active auxiliary of the church. Mrs. W. Startup, the treasurer, read her report showing a balance of $27.22 on hand, and all bills paid. Light refreshments were served and all enjoyed a sociable time together, looking at the many articles brought from China by Mrs. VanDyke.

Suit for Wages.

William Laing is a farmer living near Union Village. He is also defendent in an action which has just been started in Justice Mattison's court. The suit is for $50 and is brought by Michael Reoreau for wages alleged to be due him by Laing. Reoreau helped Laing during the harvesting season last fall and claims that he did not get paid. Murphy and Blatz represent him in the case.

Officers of Noah Dove Encampment.

At the annual election of Noah Dove Encampment, I. O. F., Thursday night, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chief patriarch, Charles W. DeGraw; high priest, Nimrod Horton; senior warden, Louis DeCamp; junior warden, William Barber; recording scribe, J. Williams; financial scribe, Francis Whitely.

GARDEN PARTY FOR TOTS

AN AFFAIR FOR CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH CRADLE ROLL.

Given at the Home of Rev. and Mrs. Goodrich—Guests Were All Under Six Years Old—Childish Amusements Had.

The annual garden party of the children of the Congregational Church Cradle Roll was held Friday afternoon at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Charles Lyman Goodrich, of West Seventh street. Hammocks and an old-fashioned swing were hung under the trees, and rugs chairs, lounges and cushions made the lawn look pleasant and homelike.

Here the children of the church who are six years old were received by the pastor and his wife, assisted by Miss Katharine Wolcott Dwight, superintendent of the Cradle Roll, and a committee of other young women, and spent the afternoon in playing, swinging and riding a big hobby horse. Many of the little folks in attendance were accompanied by their mothers or older sisters.

During the afternoon lullabies were sung by the Misses Emma and Agnes LaBoyteaux, accompanied on the autoharp by Miss M. G. Morse. Refreshments of milk and animal crackers, with lemonade for the older ones, were served. Mite boxes, containing an offering for missions, were brought in by the little members of Roll. Several children who had reached the age of six years received certificates of graduation.

WILL RACE AWHEEL

A Hot Competition Planned Between Drake and Day.

There'll be a lively time on upper Park avenue next Friday afternoon if plans now being formed do not fall through. The fun will be over the proposed bicycle race between Harvey O. Drake and "Buck" Day, who are to make the run from this city to New Brunswick. The respective speed of both has been in dispute for some time and they purpose demonstrating who is the better man by a race. They have put up $50 a side and the conditions of the race are that the man who first reaches the county seat of Middlesex shall take the money. The fact that both men are not physically as robust as the redoubtable Zimmerman, makes the affair the more interesting.

WITH A RING THEY PLIGHTED THEIR TROTH

Robert M. Clark Takes a Bride in Brooklyn.

WEDDING WAS A QUIET ONE.

MARRIED LAST EVENING AT THE CHURCH OF THE REDEEMER.

The Happy Wife is Miss Lillian M. Dundon, an Accomplished and Popular Young Society Belle of the City of Churches—The Groom is a Prominent Young Lawyer of North Plainfield—Many Beautiful Gifts.

Robert Martin Clark, son of Councilman Robert Clark, Jr., of the borough, and Miss Lillian M. Dundon, of Brooklyn, were married at 8:15 o'clock last evening by Rev. Dr. Smythe, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, of Brooklyn.

The ceremony was performed at the rectory in the presence of the immediate relatives of the bride and groom and a few friends.

The beautiful Episcopalian service was used and the happy couple plighted their troth with a wedding ring. The bride was attended by Miss Stella L. Dundon, her sister, and Miss Alice Nelson, of Bridgeport, Conn., who were the bridemaids. Edward O. Clark and Albert C. Clark, brothers of the groom, filled the function of best men. The bride was given away by her father.

The bride, who was of the blonde type, presented a charming appearance in a gown of white taffeta silk, profusely trimmed with lace. She carried a bouquet of jack roses and lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony the bridal party was driven to the residence of the bride's parents at 626 Carroll street, where a reception was held. The house was beautifully and tastefully decorated with choice flowers and potted plants while an orchestra enlivened the occasion during the evening.

Many beautiful and costly gifts were received from friends and relatives in this city and elsewhere, among them being a silver tea service from the bride's uncle, Thomas Dundon, of Bridgeport, Conn., and cut-glass pieces from Richard Dundon, another uncle, of Brooklyn.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark left this morning for a trip to Portland, Me. Upon their return they will reside with the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clark, Jr., at 59 Jackson avenue. Mr. Clark's bride is the eldest daughter of John Dundon, a well-known citizen of Brooklyn. She is a lady of much culture and is highly esteemed by a large circle of friends in her native city.

The many friends of Mr. Clark in Plainfield will all unite in extending congratulations upon the auspicious occasion.

GATHERED ON THE LAWN

EPWORTH LEAGUE SOCIABLE AT THE METHODIST PARSONAGE.

Though the Air Was a Trifle Chilly the Ladies Carried Out Their Original With Success—Those Who Were in Charge.

The monthly entertainment, under the auspices of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church, was held last evening by the social committee at the parsonage, 610 Central avenue. Although the evening was decidedly cool, the efforts of the ladies to carry out the original idea of having a lawn festival was not abandoned.

The handsome grounds at the residence of Rev. C. O. Snodgrass, were very artistically decorated, Japanese lanterns being conspicuously displayed. Rev. and Mrs. Snodgrass assisted the young ladies in receiving. During the evening an impromtu musical and literary programme was rendered, which was enjoyed by all.

The Misses Etta Raybert and Lottie Messersmith sang a duet; Miss Mary Conroy and Miss Clara VanFleet gave piano solos, while Mrs. David Donsvan read a humorous selection. The affair proved as successful and pleasant as have been the others recently held by the Epworth League. Refreshments were served in the house after the entertainment.

Funeral of William Harris.

The funeral of William Harris, a charter member of Pauchcaugh aughsinque Tribe of Red Men, No 193, was held Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock from the residence of his son-in-law, William Klein, of East Second street. A representation from the council in charge of Sachems Nash, attended the funeral in full uniform. The pallbearers were selected from the Carpenters' Union and Paughcaughsinque Tribe. Interment was in Evergreen cemetery.

Only $4.00 Unpaid Personal Taxes.

There is about $4 remaining unpaid personal tax for 1898 on the books of Collector Geo. F. Brown, of the borough, and the collector hopes to receive the entire balance in a few days. He is also receiving payments on the Watchung avenue improvement which shows that those affected are willing to settle.

CORIELL HELD FOR U. S. GRAND JURY.

Former Postmaster Must Answer Charge of Embezzlement.

SHORT IN HIS ACCOUNTS.

MONEY REFUNDED, BUT COMMISSIONER JONES HOLDS HIM.

Department Inspector Testified That a Deficiency of $348 Was Made Good in March, but a Further Discrepancy of $535 Was Found Last Month—Coriell's Lawyer Made Sharp Defense.

Charles A. Coriell, who is charged with the embezzlement of Government funds while Postmaster at Dunellen, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Jones at Newark, June 14th, for a hearing, and was remanded under $1,000 bail to await the action of the Federal Grand Jury.

Coriell was represented by former State Senator Robert Adrain, and United States District-Attorney J. Kearny Rice appeared for the Government.

Coriell is charged with having appropriated $535 of the money order account of the Dunellen postoffice. The only witness called was Post-office Inspector Benjamin R. Shupp, who made the complaint before Commissioner Jones nearly a month ago. Mr. Shupp testified to having made an inspection of the account of the office on March 9th of this year, and finding a shortage of $348 in the money order department. The amount was refunded by Mr. Coriell himself. On May 1st a balance of $588.96 was due the Government, which, however, was partially covered by a reserve of $75.

Under order of the auditor of the Postoffice Department, Mr. Shupp made an examination of the accounts of Postmaster Coriell on May 4th and 5th and discovered a deficit of $535. Coriell, he said, was unable to make it up, and, after consultation with the four sureties of the postmaster, a note of Coriell's to cover the shortage was indorsed by one of the sureties and was discounted at the Bound Brook Bank. This money, the inspector said, had been handed to him by Abner S. Coriell, a brother of the postmaster, and had been depositted to the credit of the Government.

"Was Coriell asked what had become of the money?" Mr. Rice questioned.

"Yes," Inspector Shupp replied, "and he explained that he had lost $250 on a contract and had taken up individual notes to the amount of $450."

Mr. Shupp went on to say that he reported the deficiency and its subsequent liquidation to the department at Washington, and after consultation with Assistant United States District-Attorney Warren Dixon, had lodged a criminal complaint against Coriell, in the meantime having placed one of the sureties in charge of the Dunellen postoffice,

"Did you advise with Mr. Dixon," asked Mr. Adrain, "as to the propriety or legality of preferring criminal charges against Coriell?"

"As is the practice in such cases," Mr. Shupp explained in reply, "I advised with him as to the facts in the case, and the advisability of prosecution."

Mr. Adrain asked the inspector why he did not institute criminal proceed*ings when he found the shortage in* March, but did when there was another deficiency in May. The money which was refunded for the later shortage was actually the money of Coriell, the lawyer held, for it was the proceeds of Coriell's note.

Mr. Shupp answered by pointing out that he made this distinction between the two cases. In the first Coriell had paid the money back himself, in the second, it had been necessary to accommodate bondsmen, and although the money refunded might have come from a note of Coriell's, it bore the indorsement of one of the sureties and was paid to him by Coriell's brother, not by Coriell.

"Do you now insist upon holding the defendant?" Mr. Adrian asked the commissioner. "I do," the commis*sioner replied, "for in the letter of the* law it does not make any difference how the money is paid back. The offence is not altered. In my opinion the defendant should be held."

"Well, the Grand Jury will never hold him," remarked Mr. Adrian.

"I'm not the Grand Jury," returned Commissioner Jones.

Coriell was then put under bail

Death of Rev. W. O. Embury.

Rev. W. O. Embury, rector of the Holy Rood chapel at Inwood-on-the-Hudson, died Thursday. He was a brother of Edmund A., Katherine and Mary Embury, of No. 60 Washington avenue, North Plainfield. The funeral services were held last Saturday at 2 o'clock at the Holy Rood chuch, 161st street, New York. He was well-known by the members of Holy Cross church in the borough.

ESTRANGED COUPLE TOGETHER IN COURT.

Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave Reconciled to Each Other.

SUIT WAS AGAINST BROKAW.

LATTER'S COUNSEL REFUSED TO GO ON WITH CASE.

Did Not Think He Was Getting a Fair Show Before Justice Mosher—Hargrave Was Suing Brokaw for $200 Damages—Justice Gave Judgment for Hargrave for Full Amount.

The action brought by Fred Hargrave, who is in the sash and blind business at Westfield, against Wesley B. Brokaw, the well-known plano dealer of this city, was tried before Justice Mosher Monday afternoon, Wm. G. DeMeza represented the plaintiff and Irving L. Brady the defendant. Among the spectators was Mrs. Hargrave, a handsome young woman, who came in with her husband and occupied a seat beside him. To all appearances the couple seemed to be on the best of terms, notwithstanding Mrs. Hargrave is about to bring an action against him for divorce on the grounds of extreme cruelty. From the testimony of Mr. Hargrave, the first witness called, it was shown that the goods in question had been taken from the plaintiff's house and at first stored in the barn of the defendant, who then lived near the plaintiff. They were afterwards taken to the store of Mr. Brokaw. When Hargrave attempted to replevin his goods Brokaw had ignored the writ, and the property, consisting of a sewing machine and household goods, was not secured. The goods were taken from the house on or about the 29th of April. During the trial of the case the counsel indulged in much discussion and many personalities. Counselor Brady repeatedly objected to questions he considered incompetent, and was as often overruled by the court. He finally became piqued at the decisions of the court and said he should not put in any testimony. Counselor DeMeza thereupon asked for a judgment in favor of his client on the ground that he had clearly established the fact that the plaintiff had sustained damages to the amount set forth in his complaint, $200. Counselor Brady immediately gave notice that he would appeal the case. Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave left the courtroom together.

Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave Makeup.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave have interceded and the unhappy couple are said to have patched up their differences and will again live together. Mrs. Hargrave has decided to drop the divorce proceedings against her husband. It is also reported that Hargrave is to bring an action against Brokaw for alienating the affections of his wife, claiming damages to the tune of $10,000.

TYPEWRITER RECOVERED

LAWYER BRADY'S MACHINE STOLEN IN SEPTEMBER, 1897.

Held in a Jersey City Pawnship for Fifteen Months and Then Sold to New York Firm—Cash Settlement Made for It.

A most unusual recovery of stolen property has just occurred in this city. In September of 1897, a new Underwood typewriter purchased only a short time previous was stolen from the law offices of Irving L. Brady, on East Front street, entrance being gained during the noon hour by smashing in the large plate glass in one of the office doors. Although the fact of the loss was immediately reported to the police and every step taken to secure the machine and capture the thief, not the slightest trace of either could be discovered.

The owner of the machine, however, determined that he would eventually recover it and caused watch to be kept at such places as it might be expected to turn up. A few weeks ago he received word from New York that his machine had been located. Mr. Brady immediately went to New York and found that after being pawned in Jersey City and kept there for nearly fifteen months the typewriter had been sold to New York parties. To these parties he presented his proofs of ownership and loss and they were compelled to surrender the machine. Not caring for two machines Mr. Brady accepted a substantial cash settlement in lieu of his property. He has ascertained that the thief received only $12 or $15 on the machine which costs over $100. The typewriter was found in the office of L. Feruski & Co, 70 Bowery, they having innocently received it from the pawnbrokers.

Closing Musicale.

The closing musicale given by the pupils of Miss Carrie C. Dewey, was held at the residence of Mrs. I. Howard Lapsley, 816 Crescent avenue, Saturday afternoon last. The pupils were assisted by William Howell Edwards, baritone, from Brooklyn.

FOOT OUT OF FAVOR.

THE TIME WAS WHEN THEY WERE ALWAYS THOUGHT OF.

No Herald, No Friend Approached Without a Welcome for His Feet—No Modern Man or Woman Can Boast of Happy Feet.

The time was when no good news made a journey and no friend came near, but a welcome was uttered, or at least thought, for the traveling feet of the wayfarer or the herald, but the foot is so out of favor now that one may doubt whether even love (except in the case of her who lies with two feet, newly born, within the palm of one hand) pauses often upon the dearest feet, or is much aware of them. It must be chiefly the fault of the boot; for the boot has no character, language or nature in it, nor any pathos until it is very old and out of the question. The feet, however, were very dutiful on the mountain; their toil was the price of all communication, and their reward the first service and refreshment. They adored poetry with the primitive word, and the civilization that was single, simple and humane sang them. They were blessed with dew, they suffered, but they were friends with the earth; dews in grass at morning, shallow rivers at noon, gave them coolness. They resist too much hard upon their mountain paths, but never so hard but they needed and had the first pity and the readiest succor. It was very well for the feet of the poor to travel the earth, shod or unshod, and his feet are delicate like his color.

If they have had hardship once, they suffer it still now. No modern man or woman can boast of having really happy feet. And yet the feet should be the part of the body most of earth and know more of flowers, freshness, cool brooks, wild thyme and salt sand than does anything else about us. It is their calling; and the hands might be glad to be stroked for a day by grass and stricken by buttercups, as the feet are of those who go barefoot; and the bootfit might be likened to love. like them, so long near moss. The face has only now and then, for a resting while, their privilege.

If our feet are now so severed from the natural ground they have inevitably lost life and strength by the separation. It is only the entirely unshod that have lively feet. Watch a peasant who never wears shoes, except for a few unkind hours once a week, and you may see the play of his talk in his mobile feet; they become as dramatic as his hands. Fresh as the air, brown with the light, and healthy from the field, and used to darkness, not grown in prison, the foot of the contadino does not keep the undignified and ashamed stillness of the foot of high fashion. The foot is grim, and never lifts a heel against its dull conditions, for it has forgotten liberty. It is more active than that by far, and never lifts the foot of a woman is more active; but whether on the pedal or in the stirrup, or clad for a walk, or armed for a game, or decked for a dance, it is in bonds. It is, at any rate, inarticulate. —Collier's Weekly.

The Curse of Ugliness.

You hear a great deal more about the fatal curse of beauty than you do about the fatal curse of ugliness, but, for all that, the latter privilege has its drawbacks. The worst of ugliness is that—that of being homely and unattractive, but there is a price to pay, as there is with most boons. The penalty in the case of the homely is entirely the reverse of a negative one. Not what a homely woman may do, but what she may not do, is the greatest drawback to her condition. No ugly woman may ever murder, steal, or, indeed, commit any crime worthy of being calendered in yellow print. She may not, that is absolved from it; she is simply incapable of doing it; her unattractiveness disqualifies her for crime, and never, never, may nature, or society, wicked her pulses and strong her incentives may be, can she hope to rival her good-looking sister. The fruit of her doubling is in the eating. Whoever heard of an ugly murderess, or an unattractive forgeress or a shoplifter that was not held up to look upon? They are all and each, according to yellow print, of such wondrous beauty and rare intelligence that the strange thing is that there are any other beautiful women left in the world. One would think that the criminal class must have monopolized them all. But, however, the added heart

LIVES ENDANGERED BY BURNING BARN.

Lively Fire in Rear of George Kirch's Store.

KIRCH WAS BADLY BURNED.

FORGOTTEN BABY FOUND AND SAVED BY SERGEANT KIELY.

One Man Knocked Down and Slightly Injured by Stream of Water—Several Buildings Seemed Doomed But Good Work by Fire Department Saved Them —Loss Will Reach $2,500, Mostly Insured.

The first serious fire, since the burning of the Brady ice house, gave the fire department a lively time Tuesday afternoon when the barn of Geo. Kirch, of Liberty street, was gutted by fire and his store and residence badly damaged. When the department arrived on the scene, the structures seemed in a fair way to be entirely destroyed. By quick work the flames were subdued without the damage resulting that seemed probable. The loss can be estimated at $2,500, which is almost entirely covered by insurance. The fire was marked by several exciting incidents.

At first no one seemed to know exactly what started the conflagration except that it originated in the barn. Little Robert Kirch was playing in the barn and snapped the fated match that started it. It is supposed that he was trying to light a firecracker or did succeed in doing so.

Mrs. Kirch was in the house. She heard the horse in the stable plunge and stamp. Running to look out she saw the fire and shouted to her husband, who saved the horse at the risk of his own life. He was badly burned about the head and hands and his hair was singed. His injuries were dressed at E. F. Randolph's pharmacy across the street.

In the excitement the baby was forgotten and sat in the back room surrounded by flames. Sergeant Kiely found the little one and snatched it out of harm's way before the child's clothing caught.

During the height of the excitement, Israel Price Rue, of Liberty street, was assisting in the removal of the property from the home of Mrs. Isaac Brokaw when he was struck by a stream of water and felled to the ground by the force of it. He was bruised and received a severe shaking by the fall. He was assisted to his home.

The shell of the barn remains but it is gutted and is practically worthless. The backs of the house and store are charred but the prompt work of the firemen prevented the flames from doing much damage to the interior. The roof of the house is also considerably damaged.

These buildings are all the property of Mr. Kirch. The loss on them will reached $1,200, which is covered by insurance. The loss by fire and water to the contents of barn, house and store will be $800, all of which except the wagons was insured.

There seemed little hope of saving the residence of Mrs. Isaac Brokaw, on West Fourth street, next door to the fire. The side of the building was all ablaze. The stream from the chemical engine rendered good service inside and prevented a greater loss by water had a regular stream been used.

The loss to the house will be in the neighborhood of $800. Mrs. Brokaw owned the house and occupied the first floor. The house was insured and so was her household property. The loss on the latter will amount to $75. The second floor was occupied by Miss Mary Mercier, a dressmaker. Her loss will reach $100. She had no insurance. She was absent from the house when the fire started.

Four lines of hose were laid in beside the stream from the chemical engine. The progress of the fire was stopped with unusual rapidity when the burning buildings seemed to be doomed.

The first of the apparatus of the fire department to reach the scene of the fire was the No. 1 hose wagon, driven by Harry Bush, and not the West End hose wagon as stated in yesterday's Press. The latter wagon was, however, a close second.

Death of Mrs. Stanford.

Mrs. Phebe L. Stanford, wife of the late Geo. W. Stanford, aged 68 years, died on Sunday last at her home in Newark the result of paralysis. Mrs. Stanford's husband conducted a shoe business on Front street where the Atlantic and Pacific tea store is now located, forty years ago. The funeral services were held from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. A. V. Whitlock, 1424 West Front street, yesterday at 3 o'clock. Interment was in Plainfield Avenue cemetery.

NEWARK'S FREE TRIP.

HUNDREDS OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN FILLED THE COACHES.

Jostled and Fought for Tickets in an Excited Crush—Many Take Advantage of the Free Ride to Visit Newark.

The free excursion yesterday by the business men of Newark was well patronized. Half an hour before the special excursion train left this city the North Avenue station was filled with several hundred people, most of whom were women, who pushed their way up to the ticket window, jostling each other in an excited manner, while their skirts suffered from the struggle and their tempers were badly ruffled and much the worse for their efforts.

One woman became so excited that she handed her money to a Press reporter to count, while another was seen to grab up a neighbor's child in mistake for her own.

The train leaving Plainfield at 8:55 was made up of fourteen coaches, but only about half of them were filled when the train pulled out. Along the sides of the coaches were hung streamers bearing the words: "Newark Merchants' Free Excursion," while from the pilot of the engine yellow flags, bearing the same words, fluttered in the breeze.

Ten minutes after the first train pulled out the special from Somerville, Bound Brook and Dunellen came rolling into the North avenue station. It was made up of thirteen cars, eleven of them being comfortably filled, their human freight being made up largely of women and children. The cars of this train were also decorated with streamers and flags similar to those of the first train.

The second section of the excursion was flagged at this station for the purpose of putting on board several boxes containing cheap fans which the Newark merchants had supplied gratis to the excursionists.

Many of the excursionists were heard to say that they had taken advantage of the free ride to go to New York, which they could reach from Newark by trolley cars for 10 cents.

The number of tickets sold at the North Avenue station was 998. At Somerville, 405; Bound Brook, 100; Dunellen, 65; Fanwood, 25; Westfield, 150; Cranford, 55.

MAGGIE WILL REFORM.

QUEEN OF PARADISE ALLEY SIGNED THE TEMPERANCE PLEDGE.

She was Very Penitent in City Court yesterday, and Laid the Blame on Man Who Brought Her the Bottle.

Miss Maggie Benford has decided to reform. City Judge Runyon thought it was a very good thing for her to do. While he overlooked her misdemeanors of Saturday night, he warned her that any future indiscretion meant serious punishment. She wanted the young Judge to prepare a temperance pledge for her to sign, but he decided in favor of Father Weidman.

Maggie had a pitiful tale to relate yesterday. She laid all the trouble on one William Perrine, who, she alleged, brought beer and whiskey. Saturday afternoon, she said, he usually went to see Mrs. Charles Jenkins, next door, but last Saturday Mr. Jenkins was home and he came to see Maggie instead.

"Pete" Benford, her sixteen-year-old son, who lost one leg on the railroad, told the Judge how he put Perrine out of the house when he discovered him there. But it was too late; Maggie had taken the whiskey and Paradise Alley was all ago with excitement.

BAD WORDS MAKE TROUBLE.

Two Cases Brought in City Court for Ully Judge Runyon to Settle.

There were two cases of alleged improper language for City Judge Runyon to settle yesterday. Mrs. Lena Kline, of Italian descent, runs a little store on South Second street. She claimed that young Tom Marley had stolen goods from her store and that his mother, Mrs. Maggie Marley, came into the store, used profane language and assaulted Mrs. Kline's little girl. The trial will be held Friday morning.

Nicolino Pasqua, an Italian, was accused by Mrs. Rosa Fie of using the wrong kind of language to her on the premises of 1293 North avenue. The case was adjourned for a week at the request of the defendent's lawyer, Councilman Walter L. Hetfield.

Not Typhoid Fever.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, of West Eighth street, is not ill with the typhoid fever as heretofore stated. His illness proved to be a type of bilious fever from which he is now rapidly recovering and hopes to be out again in a few weeks.

AN ORATORIO CONCERT.

PRODUCED WITH EXCELLENT EFFECT TUESDAY NIGHT.

Proceeds for the Benefit of Muhlenberg Hospital—The Artists All Acquitted Themselves in Fine Manner

An audience that almost filled the First Baptist church last Tuesday enjoyed one of the best concerts ever given in this city. It was the second private concert given by the choir of the church under the direction of E. J. Fitzhugh, musical director, and to him is due credit for the perfect rendition. The regular choir was augmented by a number of the best singers in the city, and the chorus was one of perfect harmony throughout.

The works given are favorites and well-known. The first consisted of selections from "The Redemption," by Gounod, including some of the very best parts. There was considerable solo work in part first, and the soloists acquitted themselves in a highly creditable manner. A great deal of interest was evidenced in the singing of George Leon Moore, tenor soloist, for he had much work both in part first and second. He displayed a good voice of excellent quality, and especially in part second he performed work of a high character in the Latin rendition of "Stabat Mater."

William Holmes, baritone, was given plenty of work, and he won meritorious applause from the audience. His voice was in excellent condition.

Miss Luella C. Harris, soprano soloist, as usual, won the highest praise and admiration for her work. Her work of last evening was delightful.

Praise is also due Mrs. F. M. Ward, contralto soloist, whose work is always of the highest attainment. She rendered her difficult parts with much feeling and grace, and won deservedly the hearty approbation shown.

"The Stabat Mater," by Rossini, was given in part second and the Latin version rendered, thus the very best effect was secured and the rendition made more pleasing and effective. The solo, duet, trio and quartette parts were given in a charming manner, and audiences frequently showed its appreciation by applause.

Howard M. Case presided at the organ and Miss Jessie M. Utter at the piano. Their work was perfect and assisted materially in making the concert a success.

The proceeds of the concert, which will be large, will be given entirely to the building fund for Muhlenberg Hospital, and too much cannot be said in praise of Charles W. McCutcheon, who arranged the concert and gave it with the purpose mentioned. Everyone who took part has worked hard and faithful for the production, and they enjoy the supreme satisfaction of knowing that the concert was perfectly given and compares favorably with any previously presented in this city.

UNITED AMERICANS NOW.

Junior Mechanics Substituted a Better Name.

The New Jersey delegates to the National Council of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics have returned from Minneapolis, and report that it was decided to change the name of the organization, and hereafter it will be known as the United Americans. The local lodges will adopt the title in the course of a few weeks.

The election of officers resulted as follows: National councilor, Charles Reimer, of Maryland; national vice-councilor, Charles F. Reeves, of Washington; national treasurer, J. Adam Sohl, of Maryland; national conductor, J. A. Shields, of Nebraska; national warden, James A. Miller, of Pennsylvania; national inside sentinel, H. J. Shannon, of Georgia; national outside sentinel, W. E. W. Sellers, of Wisconsin; chaplain, Rev. C. A. O. Thomas, of North Carolina. The next place of meeting will be Detroit, Mich.

Odd Fellows Elect.

Last Monday evening there was election both of the lodges of I. O. O. F., Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., elected as follows: Noble Grand, Harry Fraleigh; vice noble grand, Alex. Muir; recording secretary, Jas. R. Neal. The installation will take place on the evening of July 17th. The election at the meeting of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., was as follows: Noble Grand, Peter Doeringer; vice noble grand, Matthew C. Pennington; recording secretary, J. F. Shepherd.

Trolley Makes Building Boom.

Since the trolley has been running to the east end of the city, J. Fred MacDonald has sold eight lots in that section, and there are good prospects of a building boom.

UNCLE SAM'S BIRTHDAY IS APPROACHING.

Plainfield Will Celebrate it in an Old-Fashioned Way.

BIG PARADE WITH FLOATS.

BUSINESS MEN AND OTHERS ARE TAKING INTEREST.

Military, Civic and Fraternal Organizations, to the Number of Several Hundred, Will Be in Line—Much Enthusiasm Evinced at Last Night's Meeting—Hard Work Before Committees

Bright prospects are apparent for a big celebration in this city next Tuesday. At last Tuesday's meeting of the general celebration committee the various committees were well represented and much interest was manifested in the proposed Fourth of July function. While there was not much of anything new to report different than The Press has from day to day furnished its readers, it may be of interest to the public to know that the business men are wide awake to the big event and purpose making the celebration a credit to the city.

Chairman Ulrich, from the executive committee, said he was surprised to learn how quickly The Press got its news, some of which was new to him. However, he admitted that, as The Press has already started, that the Reserves and Marines were both coming and would participate in the parade; but that the latter organization would not bring a band of music.

He said that the fireworks would be sent off on White's lot on Giraud avenue, but he had nothing to report as to a speaker, as yet, those invited having all declined.

Frank G. Smith, chairman of the printing committee, reported that the large bills had been posted in the various villages along the railroad, and that a contract had been made with a local printer for a handsome embossed programme.

William C. Smith, chairman of the parade committee, stated that the line of march was being prepared and would be ready for publication in the daily papers next Saturday. The parade would form on Crescent avenue, near Seventh street, at 10 o'clock, and would countermarch on Park avenue. As far as he had heard from the businessmen they would be represented by thirty seven floats, the wheelmen by thirty-five and the juniors by about 100. There were others yet to hear from, he said.

Mayor Smalley, from the subscription committee, reported that he had secured pledges for $144.50, of which he had collected $81. Various amounts were reported, and it is believed that about $900 has been pledged thus far. The committee needs about $1,100.

It was the sense of the meeting, after various conclusions, that invitations be extended to the Governor, State Senator, Congressman from this district, and the Mayors of the city and borough to be the guests of the Fourth of July committee. Invitations are also to be sent to the High School and Leal cadets to take part in the parade.

A resolution was also passed authorizing the secertary to communicate with the Common Councils of the city and borough requesting those bodies to contribute each a sum of money towards the subscription fund.

The committee then adjourned to Friday evening at 8 o'clock at the Board of Trade rooms in the Babcock building.

After the meeting of the general committee the various sub-committees met and compared notes.

LEHIGH'S NEW SHOPS.

Abandons Plan to Locate in Jersey City—Yard Between Newark and Elizabeth.

It is said authoritatively in Jersey City that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company had abandoned its project of locating a large freightyard and shops in Jersey City for a more advantageous site on the Newark meadows, between Newark and Elizabeth.

The company complains that it has not been fairly treated in Jersey City. It was promised, it is said, permission to lay tracks at grade across Communipaw avenue, to enable it to build its proposed railroad yards and workshops.

Mayor Hoos and many other citizens objected to the proposed grade crossing, and the Street and Water Board failed to pass the ordinance over the Mayor's veto.

Mrs. Horace G. Terry and son, Griffith, of Albany, have been guests at the home of E. O. Bowers, of Franklin place.

A DOG CATCHER'S LUCK.

CAPTURED A "PURP" THAT MADE HIM LOTS OF TROUBLE.

Cranford Official Sick of His Job—Citizens Did Not Like the Way He Dragged His Victim Around the Town

Cranford, June 28.—Yesterday morning Harry Jenks was appointed the official dog catcher of this town, and this morning he was looking for the man who had the nerve to recommend him for the exalted position.

"Some are born great, while others have greatness thrust upon them," said Jenks this morning, "and I had my share yesterday."

It was Jenk's misfortune or misfortune soon after receiving his appointment to see a stray dog trotting through the main street. "Here's my chance," said the dog catcher as he glided after the pup and shortly afterward he returned. Tugging at a rope at one end of which was a small dog of questionable breed. No sooner had Jenks turned into the main street than he was accosted by a woman who wanted to know why he didn't return the dog to its home instead of dragging it about the streets.

Jenks managed to stave the old woman off but not so with smiling Harry Sanderson, the genial manager of Tony Pastor's Fourteenth street theatre. The latter, who was on the way to his train, would not leave the dog to suffer alone and he was backed up by George Morris, at the office of the Society for the Preverty of Cruelty to Animals. They would not allow Jenks to drag the dog by the rope and as the canine refused to be led Jenks had to sit down and wait until the commuters had all taken their trains for the city.

This was the only dog that Jenks caught during the day and now he says that he doesn't care for the position although it was very kind of Committeeman Thompson to have him appointed. He says that he would rather be a committeeman himself.

AT ST. MARY'S SCHOOL.

Graduating Exercises to be Held This and Friday Evenings.

The graduating exercises of St. Mary's school, at Liberty and Sixth streets, will take place this and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock. An interesting programme has been prepared. Tomorrow evening the drama of "Reuben's Triumph" will be rendered, and Friday evening an operetta entitled "Old Glory or the Boys of '76" by a baker's dozen of the boys of the school. Miss Frances Hillman will deliver the valedictory. The class of '99 is composed of the Misses Frances Hillman, Anna Ryan, Mary Doll, Julian Lutz, Mary Burke, Anna Daley and Henry Shannon. Miss M. Smith will reside at the piano and Miss K. Flynn at the organ.

OPPOSES THE TROLLEY.

Cross County Line Receives a Setback in Mountainside.

Westfield, June 28—The cross country trolley line from Rahway to Millburn has received an unexpected setback in the shape of opposition in the borough of Mountainside. William Miller, who owns a large frontage on the county road, is trying to persuade the Council to limit the franchise to twenty-five years. This the company will not accept. Today engineers begin the work of laying out a route through private property around the borough, through Branch Mills, and striking the county road in Springfield township. This route will make Echo Lake easily accessible.

Changes in Residences.

The following residential changes have been made recently by Conover's moving vans: Mrs. Randolph, from Spooner avenue to Plainfield avenue; Mrs. Schaefer, from Richmond street to East Fourth street; John Johnson, from East Front street to Watchung and Kensington avenues; Mr. Conde from Harmony street to Somerset street; Alfred Seidel, from Seventh street, New York, to 422 East Second street; Mrs. C. F. Hollis from West 132d street, New York to Fairview avenue; Wm. McIntosh, from Feight station to 811 College place; C. F. Williams, from 1061 Grandview avenue to 897 Jefferson avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Quick Payment.

D. W. Littell, treasurer of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, has received a check for $3,000 for payment of claim of the death of their late brother, John M. Dayton, who died June 3d. From the time the proof of death was mailed from Plainfield it required only fourteen days to receive the check as payment in full.

—Weak and blue fish at a premium at Rogers' this week.

—Improvements are being made to the culverts at the corner of Park avenue and Second street.

RECTOR'S LAST WEDDING

PRETTY WEDDING AT THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY CROSS.

Miss Mary Grannett and Bradley S. Hall Wedded by Rev. T. Logan Murphy, the Last One Before His Departure.

The Church of the Holy Cross was the scene of a pretty wedding Tuesday afternoon when the marriage of Miss Mary Grannett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Grannett, Sr., of this city, to Bradley S. Hall, son of Joseph R. Hall, of Cranford, was solemnized in that sanctuary. It was the last marriage ceremony to be performed by Rev. T. Logan Murphy, while rector of the church. It was a pretty ceremony but quiet, and was witnessed only by the relatives and immediate friends of the young couple.

The bride wore a tailor-made gown of castor, trimmed with white silk and carried a white prayer book. She was attended by a single bridemaid, Miss Alice M. Thompson, who was gowned in blue and carried a shower bouquet of pink and white carnations.

The best man was George Taylor, of Cranford. There were also four ushers, Charles Western, of Brooklyn, Messrs. Holland and Gardiner, of New York, and Henry Hall, of Cranford a brother of the groom. The wedding march was played by Henry M. Westcra, of Cranford, a brother-in-law of the groom.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Murphy, at 3 o'clock, Mr. Grannett giving the bride away. The church was artistically decorated in green and white, flowers being largely used.

After the marriage, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 742 West Fourth street. The couple then left on a short tour and will go later for a trip through the south.

A large and valuable array of gifts told of the high esteem in which the young people were held by their many friends. Mr. Hall formerly resided in Washington Park, where he is well known.

A furnished flat, all complete, in the Thorn building, Somerset street, awaited Mr. and Mrs. Hall. They will make their home there.

TO REPORT THURSDAY.

BOULEVARD COMMISSION NEARLY FINISHED ITS TASK.

They Hope to Have the Report Confirmed This Time So That the Work Can be Started At Once on the Enterprise

Elizabeth, June 28.—The Westfield avenue commission has been holding daily sessions, taking testimony on the valuation of the property which it is proposed to condemn along the north side of the avenue to make the roadway wide enough for Kean's double track trolley. Tomorrow the commissioners will be ready to award the benefits and assess the damages and make an early report to the court.

The first report was sent back to the commission by Justice VanSyckel for revision. The commission hopes to have its report confirmed this time, so that work on cutting and grading may proceed, as the laying of trolley tracks has already begun.

FUNERAL OF J. A. FREEMAN.

Largely Attended by the Older Generation That Knew Him Well.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Jarvis A. Freeman were held from his late residence, 402 Watchung avenue, Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. They were largely attended by the older generation of Plainfielders who have known Mr. Freeman so long. The pall-bearers were: B. O. Bowers, John Ross, Isaac Brown, Jr., Mr. Clawson, of Plainfield, and Mr. Cadmus and Freeman Cadmus, of Philadelphia.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph D., officiated, assisted by Rev. William Charles O'Donnell. There were many beautiful floral remembrances from friends and relatives. Interment was in the North Plainfield cemetery. A short service was held at the grave.

Made an Executor.

Rev. E. E. Jackson, pastor of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, has been made executor of the estate of the late Mrs. Ella Prior, who died recently in this city. Yesterday Mr. Jackson went to Elizabeth and qualified for his position before Surrogate Parrot.

One Fined, One Discharged.

Richard Waring and Herbert Schutt were arraigned Tuesday evening in the Borough Court to answer to a charge of fast driving. The evidence disclosed the fact that Mr. Waring was driving and a fine of $5 was imposed. Mr. Schutt was discharged.

GERMAN CHURCHES MAY CONSOLIDATE.

Such a Result Due to Episcopal Consolidation.

REV. H. C. EYME RESIGNS.

GERMAN LUTHERANS TO LOSE $550 ANNUAL RENTAL.

That is the Sum Paid by the Church of Redeemer for the Use of the Edifice —Lutherans Will Probably Consolidate With the Reformed Church, to Which Most of the Members Once Belonged.

As a result of the consolidation of the Episcopal societies of the Church of the Redeemer and the Church of the Holy Cross, it is likely that the consolidation of the German Lutheran and the German Reformed churches will follow. This result will be brought about by the withdrawal of the Church of the Redeemer from the German Lutheran church as a tenant of their edifice, for which $550 rental was paid annually, and which formed the principal support of the German society.

For some time past the membership of the German Lutheran church has been gradually diminishing until within the last few weeks the expenses could not have been met if the rent from the Church of the Redeemer had not been coming in. As in the case with the Episcopals the community is not large enough to support two German churches without one or both suffering. In this case it was the youngest society—the Lutherans—who felt the tide of adversity.

Last Sunday Rev. Hermon C. Eyme, pastor of the German Lutherans, preached to only a handful of worshipers, and as this had happened frequently of late he concluded that it was a waste of effort for him to continue as minister of the society any longer, especially since the principal financial support of the church would be withdrawn with the consolidation of the Episcopal churches. He announced then that thereafter he would not occupy the pulpit. The resignation will be formally presented to the Board of Trustees in a few days.

When this matter is acted upon it is probable that steps will be taken to consolidate the Luthern with the German Reformed society, the latter being the strongest. The Lutheran church was formed a few years ago by a number of members who then belonged to the German Reformed church, but who were dissatisfied with the way the church affairs were administed at that time. The Lutherans have always had a hard struggle to get along.

Rev. Mr Eyme and wife will go to Orange next Friday to visit friends till July 8th, when they will sail for Germany to spend the rest of the summer visiting relatives. Rev. Mr. Eyme is an educated and polished gentleman, who has a splended command of the German language, of which he is an efficient instructor. He has a large class of students in this city and the borough and will return next fall to take up the instruction again. He will retain his present residence at 78 Duer street.

HUNTING THE WOODS FOR A BOY.

A Westfield Farmhand Thought to Have Wandered Off in a Fit.

Westfield, June 28.—Matthew Collin, an orphan, fifteen years old, is missing from the farm of Frederick Sheelan, near here. He had been living with Mr. Sheelan for about two years, and helped in the farm work. Monday afternoon the boy was tossing hay in a field where Mr. Sheelan was mowing. About 4 o'clock the boy was left alone. He has not been seen since, and the woods are being searched for him.

About six months ago he had a fit, and about two months ago another. It is feared he wandered into the woods and had one and died. Mr. Sheelan does not know if the boy has any relatives except a sister who lived in Newark, but whose name he does not know.

Mother's Attempt at Suicide.

Elizabeth, June 28—Annie Heinemeyer, living with her husband and year-old baby at 419 South Park street, swallowed two tablespoons full of paris green yesterday with suicidal intent because she said her husband did not treat her kindly. When placed in the ambulance she fought like a tigress for her baby, and finally broke away from the ambulance surgeon and driver. She got her child and then went peacefully to the hospital. She is in a critical condition.

—It is proposed to begin the addition to the Masonic Home at Mt. Holly, at once, as it is desired to have the work completed before the arrival of winter.

LAST CLASS OF CENTURY.

GRADUATING EXERCISES OF THE PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL HELD THURSDAY NIGHT.

The Exercises Held in Music Hall, Which was Filled by a Fashionable and Representative Audience to Aid the Graduates in a Fond Adieu to Local School Life—Excellent Address Delivered by Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, of New York—Names of the Prize Winners.

Ninety-nine, the last class of the century at the Plainfield High School, lives now only in memory. Thursday saw the culmination of the efforts of the nineteen young people who had passed successfully through the difficulties of the four years' High School course. The Commencement exercises, the great event of the school year, were held in the Stillman Music Hall last evening before a great concourse of people, and the nineteen bright graduates were formally awarded their diplomas. For the twenty-ninth time a new group of Plainfield's sons and daughters were sent forth to meet the stern realities of life.

The Commencement did not differ materially from those of previous years, only it was delightfully cool and no thunder storm appeared at the last moment to threaten destruction to the beautiful summer gowns that brightened the auditorium on every side. As usual there were more people to attend the exercises than the hall could possibly hold, and many were disappointed in their endeavors to secure seats.

The graduates occupied seats on the right of the stage while the members of the Board of Education, Superintendent H. M. Maxson, Principal Ira Winthrop Travell, and the speakers were seated on the left. Palms and potted plants were used by way of decoration. The young women of the class were all in white and made a charming array. Owing to illness, one of their number, Miss Marjorie Canfield Sterling, was unable to be present.

Fanciulli's New York orchestra proved eminently satisfactory and fill its selections were well rendered, particularly the airs from "The Jolly Musketeers," which caught the popular ear.

The invocation was offered by Rev. Charles E. Herring, of this city. The salutatory and oration, "Recent Advances in the Art of Living," was given by William Asbury Fisher. After his words of welcome and excellent expression to the Board, he cleverly sketched the wonderful strides of civilation during the last few years. Electricity he pointed out as one of the great instruments in this advance and told briefly of some of the wonderful things only recently accomplished. The educational advances were touched upon with a tribute to Bishop Vincent, once a Plainfielder, and founder of the now famous Chautauqua system. His oration was an interesting one which he delivered well.

The address to the graduates was made by Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, president of the Union Theological Seminary, of New York, who made one of the most interesting addresses ever heard at the commencement exercises in this city. After making introductory remarks appropriate to an educational theme, he started with an earnest appeal for the recognition in every home and in every school of the value of the individual and of the rights of the individual. He divided his subjects into three parts: I. "The Undiscovered Self." II. "The Discovery of Self." III. "The Use of Self."

I. "The Undiscovered Self." After dwelling upon the fact that many complicated conditions of inheritance and environment tend to make every life more or less of a problem to itself, he dwelt in detail upon the misfortune of going through life without a clear conception of one's own subjectivity and one's own relation to the world. He brought out this part of his argument under three heads, each one of which was developed in a plain and practical manner, viz: the imprisoned self, or the mental and moral life of the individual shut up and suppressed within itself and denied the opportunities of expression and expansion. The maltreated self, or the violence that one even tends to do to one's own best self-development so long as one remains ignorant of the nature, powers and possibilities of one's own selfhood. The diminishing self, or the inevitable tendency of an imprisoned self and a maltreated self to grow smaller, weaker, more puny, more insignificant.

II. "The Discovery of Self." This part of his theme was also carefully developed. Dr. Hall advocated three lines along which the discovery of self is most possible for childhood, viz: the contemplation of nature by systematic observation and recording of phenomena; the liberation of power in accordance with Froebel's great law of self activity, (illustrated in manual training,) in recording personal observations, etc.; the discovery of God. Here the speaker dwelt upon the vital importance of the religious element in education, and, while recognizing the political and ecclesiastical embarrassments in the way of an adequate religious influence in the public schools, he expressed the opinion that its absence cannot be regarded otherwise than as a misfortune to youth.

Dr. Hall closed this part of his address by earnestly appealing to parents to assist their children toward self-discovery by sympathetic companionship on the highest lines; and he also appealed to every teacher to regard himself as in loco parentis toward all children deprived by circumstances of the full measure of sympathetic parental influence.

III. "The Use of Self." This, the speaker claimed to be the chief end of education. Self discovery is a means to an end; the discovery of self must issue in the use of self. This use was considered along three lines.

1. The use of self in relation to self. Here were taken up and discussed the care of health, the discipline of the mind, the adjustments and readjustments of the point of view as matters affecting personal life which can only be comprehended and provided for by those who have had the blessing of self discovery.

2. The use of self in relation to society. Here the speaker dwelt upon the obligation for social service that rests on each educated life. The larger mission of womanhood and the especial importance of citizenship were pointed out.

3. The use of self in relation to God. Dr. Hall referred hopefully to the tendency of modern science toward theistic rather than atheistic conclusions. He pointed out that the modern movement of religious thought affirming the immanence of God in His world is in striking correspondence with many of the most recent scientific utterances.

He regarded it as an absolutely essential part of education to direct thought and aspiration Godward, and to lead the mind of youth to look upon life religiously and to use self as an instrument for the service of God.

The presentation of rewards was made by Leander N. Lovell, of the Board of Education. The awards were as follows:

Miss Helen Louise Hall delivered the valedictory and essay. "A Cornerstone of Character." Miss Hall's essay was of unusual excellence. She spoke of self-control as a corner-stone of character and pointed out the necessity of looking well at the superstructure as well as the foundation. The dangers of selfishness and self-indulgence were considered and the path toward true success in life outlined She closed with a few words of farewell to her classmates.

The presentation of the diplomas by Dr. J. B. Probasco, President of the Board of Education, ended the exercises. There was a profusion of flowers and other gifts for the graduates which were distributed about their seats on the stage during the intervals in the programme.

SCENES IN HOLY LAND.

INTERESTING TALK BY REV. DR. E. M. RODMAN.

Delivered Before the W. C. T. U. Thursday Afternoon What He Saw in Egypt and Palestine—Many Interesting Observations.

Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman, rector of Grace Episcopal church, gave an interesting talk at the rooms of the W. C. T. U. on East Front street Thursday afternoon.

The genial and talented clergyman said he had been asked by Miss C. R. Yates, the vice-president, to lecture on his recent trip to Egypt and Palestine. He said he had not prepared any lecture, but if the audience would bear with him he would give them a brief account of what he saw while in Egypt and Palestine.

After prayer by Miss Yates, Dr. Rodman said that in the three months he was traveling in Egypt and in the Holy Land he had seen but little intemperance; in fact the only man at all under the influence of intoxicants was his barber, whom he had been compelled to discharge.

He attributed this condition of affairs to three agencies. The first was owing to the great poverty of the country and the fact that the people were compelled to use what money they could secure to buy food. The second reason he believed to be owing to the faithfulness of the Mohammedan faith, which forbids wine, or not admit of drunkenness. The third reason was because light wines were used almost entirely by those of convivial habits. He said he believed that if light wines could be introduced into this country it would prove one of the greatest agencies towards advancing the cause of temperance of anything that has yet been suggested.

For 1,500 years before Christ was born Egypt had been the greatest and most powerful country on the face of the globe. It is composed of Pharisees, Persians, Roumanians, Turks, Arabs and Mohammedans. As to the Turks, they are considered the worst class of people imaginable. The doctor referred to the interesting points in Alexander, Port Said and at Yefa, and hurried along to Jerusalem, which he and his party reached March 27th. This holy city has a population variously estimated at from 15,000 to 50,000. Of this number 30,000 are Jews, the remainder being made up of Mohammedans, Syrians, etc.

Palestine has always been considered the central region of all religious history, and every human soul thrills at the mere mention of the name of the sacred place where the Lord was born. The principal streets of the city are known as Christian and David. These streets are but about ten feet wide and the apology for a sidewalk is but little used, and men, women and children and also the cattle walk in the streets. There's little of interest in the city save the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and a piece of the wall outside of which natives tell the visitors that the Lord was buried. It is said that this church was built upon the site of Calvary or where the Lord was crucified and then placed in the tomb, but this is denied by both Dr. Merrill, the American Consul, and Gen. Gordon, who have assumed to carefully investigate the story.

One of the interesting features of Dr. Rodman's description of his travels was the exhibition of a collection of curios which he brought back with him.

No Word From Bullman.

Thus far Mrs. Bullman, of the borough, has received no word from her husband, ex-Freeholder Charles Bullman, who went away from his home about five weeks ago. Efforts are constantly being made to learn of his whereabouts, but without success up to the present time.

New Fire Alarm Boxes.

Two new fire alarm boxes have been located in the city. Box 83 is at the corner of West Front street and Grant avenue, and Box 17 is stationed at the corner of Westervelt avenue and Orange street. Both of these boxes have been needed for a long time.

TAKING WEDDING VOWS BEFORE THE ALTAR.

Marriage of May Flanagan and Charles J. Ward.

AT ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

FOLLOWED BY A RECEPTION AT THE BRIDE'S HOME.

The Ceremony Was Performed by Rev. Father Smyth in the Presence of a Large Assemblage—Description of the Bridal Party—The Happy Couple are Popular—Many Costly Presents Were Received.

The marriage of Miss May Flanagan and Charles Joseph Ward was solemnized at St. Mary's Roman Catholic church at 6 o'clock June 21st.

The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. P. E. Smyth, assisted by Revs. Father Westman, of this city, and Father Murphy, of Cranford, a former assistant to Father Smyth. The sacred edifice was litterly packed with the many friends of the young couple, and standing room was at a premium.

The bridal party entered the church and filed up the aisle to the soft strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Miss Mary Smith, the well known organist. First came the ushers, Messrs. Joseph W. Winters, Charles J. Smith, Frank M. Bush, Herbert Parks and George Allen, of Brooklyn, and George J. Tobin, of Plainfield. The bridesmaids, Miss Elizabeth Flanagan, sister of the bride, and Miss Annie Lenahan, of New York, came next, being followed by the maid of honor, Miss Loretto Flanagan, youngest sister of the bride.

The bride, leaning upon the arm of her father, Patrick J. Flanagan, brought up the bridal procession, which proceeded to the chancel steps, where they were met by the groom and best man, Thomas Reilly, of Brooklyn, who had entered from the sacristy.

The bride was given in marriage by her father who presented his daughter to the groom as the happy couple took their position before the priests, while the rest of the bridal party formed a circle about the bride and groom.

Then the good father, Rev. P. E. Smyth, performed the solemn ceremony that joined in the holy bonds of wedlock May Flanagan and Charles Joseph Ward.

The scene presented was solemn and impressive. The church had been darkened and the only light was that supplied by the many candles upon and about the altar, while choice flowers lent an additional beauty to the scene, which was made the more picturesque by the rich and handsome gowns of the bride and her retinue of waiting maids.

While the ceremony was being performed the soft low tones of the organ reverberated through the church and to some extent prevented the responses of the bride and groom being heard distinctly.

After the priest had pronounced the couple man and wife and given them his blessing, the bridal party wended its way from the church, the newly wedded couple leading the procession, while the rich tones of the organ burst forth in mirthful melody as if in glad tidings of the joyful event.

The bride was richly gowned in white satin, with duchess lace and pearl trimming. She wore a bridal veil, surmounted by a wreath of orange blossoms and she carried a pearl colored prayer book, the gift of her mother.

The bridesmaids were costumed in light blue organdie over blue taffeta silk.

The dress of the maid-of-honor was of pink organdie over pink taffeta silk.

After the ceremony at the church the bridal party was driven to the residence of the bride's parents, No. 522 West Fifth street, where a reception was held, lasting until late into the night. The handsome home was further embellished on the interior by quantities of flowers and palms while the grounds presented an inviting appearance with an abundance of Japanese lanterns suspended at convenient points about the place.

There were about 150 relatives and friends present. The cities of New York, Brooklyn, Yonkers, Bridgeport, Conn., Dunellen and this city, being well represented.

While Mr. and Mrs. Ward were receiving the congratulations of their guests, Rogers' orchestra enlivened the occasion by choice selections.

A sumptuous collation, followed the expressions of good wishes which were showered upon the happy couple.

At the south side of the house had been erected a spacious platform which was used by the young people to "trip the light fantastic."

Here also was given some impromtu theatricals during the evening.

The bride is the eldest daughter of Patrick J. Flanagan, one of the faithful officers of the Plainfield police department. For some years she has been the leading soprano singer in St. Mary's church and has also had charge of the music. In public life the young woman was well known as the superintendent of the millinery department in Lederer's store, where she made many friends among the patrons of that establishment. In church circles and in the social set in which she moved the bride had endeared herself to all by her amiable disposition and many excellent qualities, and she is therefore much beloved.

Mr. Ward is a fresco artist of New York city, but is well-known in Plainfield where he resides with his mother on Clinton avenue. He is popular and counts among his friends many of the most representative citizens of this city.

In an upper room at the bride's home are displayed an array of beautiful and costly presents—gifts from dear friends who have learned to not only admire but love their recipient.

The groom's present to the bride was a diamond ring of beautiful lustre.

The bride's gifts to her bridesmaids and maid-of-honor were turquoise, amethyst and sapphire rings.

The ushers received diamond stickpins from the groom, as souvenirs of the happy event.

Mr. and Mrs. Ward left on a late train for a wedding tour to Maine. When they return they will reside with the groom's mother on Clinton avenue.

Hosts of friends will join in wishing the popular couple all that is possible of life's blessings.

A QUIET WEDDING.

Miss Annie S. Garretson United in Marriage to Alvah Miller.

A very quiet wedding took place Wednesday, June 21st at 4 o'clock at 315 New street, when Miss Annie S. Garretson, daughter of Mrs. Kate E. Garretson, was united in marriage to Alvah Miller, a contractor, of Somerville. The affair was attended by just the immediate family and relatives. The bride and groom were unattended. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, after which congratulations were offered and a supper was served. At 5 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Miller left for Lake Hopatcong, where they will spend a portion of their honeymoon. On their return they will reside at Somerville, where the groom will erect a handsome house for their occupancy.

The bride has been teaching school at Somerville, where she has a host of friends. During the vacation season she would come to this city and remain with her mother on New street. Her husband is a popular man at home, and the couple have the best wishes of all for a happy and prosperous journey through life.

ALUMNI RECEIVED '99.

RECEPTION AND DANCE TO THE GRADUATES HELD AT CASINO.

Followed the Commencement Exercises and Was Largely Attended—Excellent Music and a Cool Evening Enjoyed.

After the class of '99 of the Plainfield High School was graduated with all due honor at the formal commencement exercises held in Stillman Music Hall Thursday, the members of the class were entertained at the reception and dance given in the Casino by the classes of '97 and '98. The alumni reception to the graduates proved a great success.

For the last four years these receptions have been held in the Casino and have been made important events in the school year. The cool weather and the excellent music by Fanciulli's orchestra made the affair of last evening particularly attractive. It was well attended, all the graduates appearing and several members of the Board of Education and the faculty looking in on the young people.

There was a goodly delegation from the alumni present, and there were greetings between those who had not met since the last alumni reception. At midnight refreshments were served by Steward Kane. The decorations, while not very elaborate, were very tastefully arranged.

The affair was in charge of a committee of which Sydney R. Titsworth, '97, now of Alfred University, was the chairman. The success of the reception was the direct result of the energetic labors of Mr. Titsworth.

THEIR SCHOOL DAYS OVER.

BOROUGH GRADUATES FACE THE WORLD IN STERN REALITY NOW.

Y. M. C. A. Hall the Scene of a Brilliant Gathering of the Smart Pupils Who Have Earned the Right to Diplomas—Practical Remarks Delivered to Them by Rev. Dr. James F. Riggs—Prizes Awarded Presented by Henry J. McGee, a Member of the Borough Board of Education.

Last Thursday at the Y. M. C. A. Hall the commencement exercises of the Borough Public High School were held, at which time four young women and four young men passed from the highest seat of learning in the borough into the world, where they will separate and walk various paths in life. It was a triumph in the lives of those who were graduated, and their parents, teachers and friends joined in wishing them all the success possible. Those who were graduated were Charles F. Bryan, Miss Grace Eleanor Codwise, Newton Douglass Drake, Miss Grace L. Emmons, Miss Emma Frances Line, Frederic Stanley Overton, Miss Rita Pond and Arthur E. Smith.

The class colors, purple and white, were arranged in a tasty manner about the hall, while the platform was made attractive through the use of potted plants, palms and ivy. Seated on the platform were the graduates; President S. St. John McCutchen and Henry Hoge, of the Board of Education; Superintendent W. J. Wightman; Rev. Joseph Orr McKelvey and Dr. James F. Riggs.

The programme opened with a two-part song by the High School chorus, after which Rev. Mr. McKelvey offered prayer. This was followed with a pretty vocal solo by Mrs. F. M. Ward, entitled "One Spring Morning."

Then came the salutatory by Arthur E. Smith, which was a finished composition and was appreciated by the large audience present. Mr. Smith treated in a masterly way the subject of education, and showed conclusively how important it is to a nation's success and prosperity. He depicted the fall of Rome and Spain, and showed how both had fallen away proy to all other nations of greater learning. The subject was an interesting one throughout and at the close Mr. Smith received great applause.

The next number was two selections by the school chorus given in a commendable manner. Following these selections the address of the evening was given by Dr. James F. Riggs, of East Orange, formerly a professor at Rutgers College. This speaker is not a new one in this city, and the audience was given a talk of the highest excellence.

Dr. Riggs spoke on the subject of "Literature and Life," and he furnished both the graduates and those in the audience much food for thought. He urged on all the necessity of reading the very best literature and thus making it possible for all to gain the highest moral force to accomplish much in this world. He deemed the present time a serious one for the graduates, for unless they are careful they may lose all interest in educational matters and allow themselves to drift away from what learning they already have gained. He said the teacher and city had done all possible for the graduate and the responsibility now rests with them as to what they will do and become.

The professor spoke of a young man who graduated from Yale University and returned to his room and threw his inkwell as far out of the window as possible. He was so tired of books, learning, etc., that he vented his feelings that way. He afterward repented, but it took him a good while to get back to his proper sphere again, and so he urged the graduates not to throw away their inkwells, for they might need them.

The speaker said that knowledge without moral force is useless, and then illustrated by demonstrating how useless gun powder is useless when it is properly mixed with nitrate, which is the force. He said that he would rather have one fact clearly impressed upon his mind so that he knew it, than to have a hundred facts that he could not find when he wanted them.

The doctor urged that moral force comes through literature, and in that way inspiration was received. He held that literature must of necessity be poisonous or nutritious; it could not be neutral. He then spoke of the newspapers that disseminate bad news, and said that he would like to have all the editors of New York, Philadelphia and New Jersey in a church and preach them a sermon. He would use some of their own writings for his discourse, and from a chapter in Nehemiah he would take his text, "There is much rubbish." In conclusion Dr. Riggs said that as a person must have the best food so they must have the best books that are positively beneficial. Before he closed his address he spoke a few words of congratulation to the graduates.

Mrs F.M. Ward then sang "Secret," Goetz, in good voice, after which the valedictory was delivered by Miss Rita Pond. This talented young woman in a finished manner and speaking on behalf of her associates reviewed the past four years and with mingled feelings of joy and regret voiced the sentiments of all on leaving their studies and those who have been together at this seat of learning. She spoke words of commendation to the teachers, superintendent and Board of Education, and impressed upon them the deep feelings of gratitude felt by each one. Her essay was complete and given in a delightful manner.

At this time Henry A. McGee made a happy speech and presented the two prizes, $15 and $10 in gold, offered by Councilman John Valiant for the best work in mathematics. Arthur E. Smith secured first prize and Frederick Stanley Overton second prize, while Miss Rita Pond, Charles Bryan and Miss Emma Line received honorable mention. After President S. St. John McCutchen made a neat little speech and presented the graduates with their diplomas, the school chorus sang "Blow Both Winds," and the commencement exercises for ever came to a close. Miss Carrie Van-Fleet, a graduate of 1896, was the efficient accompanist of the evening. After the exercises the graduates received baskets of flowers, presented by parents and friends.

DUNELLEN GRADUATION

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES WERE HELD LAST NIGHT.

Programme Carried Out in the Methodist Church, Which Was Filled With a Large and Appreciative Audience of Citizens.

A large and appreciative audience assembled in the M. E. church Thursday evening to witness the annual graduation exercises of the public schools. The church was prettily decorated for the occasion with flowers and greens, and the graduates, four in number, occupied seats on the platform together with President W. J. Hamilton, of the School Board, Superintendent Leon E. Vanbyckle, and Revs. A. L. Martine and E. E. Jamison. The graduates were Miss Nellie Brown, Miss Lulu Gertrude Stephen Kennedy and Charles Ward, and instead of the usual declamation the graduates gave recitations all of which were very creditsole. Each one of the graduates was the recipient of pleasant words and bouquets of flowers as they stepped from the school into the world.

The exercises were very enjoyable throughout and the programme was exceedingly well arranged. The only address was given by the president of the Board of Education, W. J. Hamilton, and this was given in connection with the presentation of diplomas and awards. The graduation class motto is "Not for Ourselves Only," and the class colors are pink and green.

The programme as rendered was as follows:

Graduates' March, "Majestic," Miss Lizzie Kuldoshes and David Kuldoshes: prayer, Rev. E. S. Jamison; greeting chorus, "Merry June," school; recitation, "John Burns, of Gettysburg," Stephen Todd Kennedy; piano solo, "Whispering Wind," Miss Lizzie Kuldoshes; recitation, "The Whistling Regiment," Miss Nellie Brown; chorus, "A June Day" and "Over the Sea," school; piano duet, "Othello," Miss Nellie Brown and Miss Irene Day; recitation, "The Death of Jefferson," Charles Ward; chorus, "Swing Song," school; recitation, "The Defence of the Bride," Miss Lulu Gertrude Stephen; chorus, "Down by the Silvery Stream," school; benediction, Rev. A. L. Martine. Miss Flora E. Wiligus was the musical director, and Miss Lizzie Kuldoshes, accompanist. After the exercises a reception was given to the graduates.

Yesterday afternoon the closing exercises at the Lincoln School were held at the school building and there was a large attendance of parents and friends of the scholars. The exercises consisted of songs, recitations, drills by the scholars and the awarding of prizes and honors to the scholars entitled to them. There were also addresses by members of the school board. Great credit is due the teachers for the very creditable programme presented.

Trolley Company Settled.

John Holder, who was recently injured by a fall, occasioned by the sudden starting of a Plainfield open trolley car while he was handing his fare to the conductor, has settled with the company through Superintendent John Adelmann. His doctor's bill was paid by the company and he was also given a small sum of money.

His Good Luck Came Through an Advertisement Asking for Trace of Him —Has Been a Truck Farmer Near Plainfield for Twenty-five Years—Expects to Receive the Money in a Short Time.

George John Stutz, an aged German, who has been a market gardener on the outskirts of this city, just over the Middlesex county line in Piscataway township, for the last twenty-five years, has received assurances that the reputed fortune of $75,580, resting in a German bank in his name, is a reality and that in the course of a short time the money will be turned over to him.

Last winter John Haight, a son-in-law of Stutz, who is an engineer on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, noticed an advertisement in a New York paper asking for trace of George John Stutz, who was said to have a fortune awaiting him in Germany. Without giving the matter serious consideration Haight showed the advertisement to Stutz and his family one day and laughingly said that the old man might be the person wanted. Stutz and his family scoffed at the idea. Stutz, who is seventy-six years of age, had left his home in Germany when he was twenty-two years of age and he considered if there was any money waiting for him he would have found it out before this time.

Nothing further was done about the advertisement till one day Stutz came to Plainfield and met a young lawyer, whose name he now regards with jealous secrecy, who was complaining about his lack of practice. At that moment it struck Stutz that here was a good chance to find out if he was really an heir to a fortune. He engaged the lawyer on the spot to write a letter for him to the firm that had advertised for information of a person bearing the same name as his. Stutz furnished the lawyer with the necessary data, and the lawyer wrote the letter in answer to the advertisement. Stutz paid the lawyer $2.16.

A few weeks after that the lawyer received a letter from a German law firm in Baden Baden, stating that the facts that had been presented in relation to the birth and life of Stutz seemed to indicate that he was the man that was wanted. It was explained that when Stutz was ten years old his mother had secretly deposited $4,000 in the State bank of Baden Baden to the credit of her son to be drawn by him when he became of age. In the meantime the mother had died without making known the fact that she had deposited this money.

Year after year went on and Stutz finally set sail for America to seek his fortune in this country. That was fifty-four years ago. For forty-seven years he has lived within seven miles of Plainfield, and for twenty years has run a truck-garden at the place where he now lives. The place consists of nine acres, and no matter how much money he secures Stutz says that it will continue to remain his home. Since he was ten years old the original $4,000 has compounded nineteen times until now it amounts to $75,580.

Immediately on receiving the news of the fortune that awaited his claiming Stutz set to work to get it. May 22d the proper papers and other legal formalities had been compiled with and the $75,580 turned over to the American consul in Germany to be forwarded to this country and delivered into the hands of Stutz.

Stutz lives with his wife and two sons, William and Adam, on his truck farm, and supplies several of the Plainfield grocers with their garden stuff in the summer. He is extremely deaf, however, and his wife does most of the business in town.

Holland-Gaines.

Miss Cecilia Gaines, former president of the Jersey City Women's Club and New Jersey State Federation, and well-known in Plainfield, was married June 21st to John A. Holland, of Cold Spring-on-the-Hudson. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's mother, 208 Summit avenue, by Rev. E. L. Stoddard.

Completed His Course in Medicine.

Dr. Fred Hughes, of the borough, has completed his course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, and is now enjoying a few days rest at his home. On July 1st he will assume his position at St. Vincent Hospital, New York, to which place he was appointed by virtue of receiving first honors.

H. P. Greenwood, of Woodhull & Martin's, who has been detained by illness, has again resumed his position, but he will soon leave the city to enjoy a vacation of two or three weeks.

DEATH CHARGED TO CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

Cranford Woman Did Not Have a Doctor Until Too Late.

IMBUED WITH THE SUBJECT.

WHEN IT WAS TOO LATE SHE RENOUNCED THE FAITH.

Mrs. Santiago Porcella Was the Woman—Left the Presbyterians to Join the Christian Scientists in Westfield —Studied to Be a Practitioner—Heavy Cold Developed Into Consumption.

Mrs. Santiago Porcella, the wife of a wealthy New York business man residing at Cranford, where she was a leader in society, died at Crescent Beach, Conn., Thursday afternoon as the result, it is said, of the lack of medical attendance on account of her belief in Christian Science. Mrs. Porcella was thirty two years of age.

Up to six months ago she a was member of the Presbyterian church in Cranford, but at that time became interested in the Christion Science faith and finally joined the First Church of Christian Scientists at Westfield. She also interested her husband in the faith with the result that the whole family became attendants at the services held by the scientists. Later her husband renounced the faith and tried to pursuade her to do likewise. She refused to do so, and became more and more imbued with the teaching of the "science." After a time she decided to be come a practitioner of the faith herself, and after that she devoted almost her whole time to the study of the teachings of the sect.

During the month of April Mrs. Porcella caught a heavy cold and declined to take any medical remedies or also the consultation of a physician. Last month the cold developed into hasty consumption as a result of her neglect to take medical precautions. Then it was that Mrs. Porcella realized her serious condition and the futility of trying to recover her health with out the aid of a physician. Dr. G. W. Bailey, of Cranford, was called in the case and he ordered that she be removed to a different climate, and her husband took her to Crescent Beach, where she died yesterday.

Before the end, however, she renounced the Christian Science faith, and last Sunday sent a letter to Rev. George Francis Greene, pastor of the Presbyterian church in Cranford, asking his prayers for her help.

GRADUATES' GOOD TIME.

RECEPTION ARRANGED BY BOROUGH ALUMNI RECEPTION.

Class of '98 Make it Pleasant for Those Who Have Just Bid Adieu to School Life—Dancing the Pricipal Feature.

A delightful reception was given last Friday to the graduating class of the Borough Public High School by the new alumni association, recently organized. This association is composed chiefly of members of the graduating class of 1898, but there are a few members of the 1897 class who have also joined.

The class colors, purple and white, prevailed in many different styles. The music for the occasion was furnished by P. Ludwig Conde.

It was after 9:30 o'clock when dancing was started, and the programme consisted of twenty-three numbers. During the intermission those present were served with ice cream and cake, after which dancing was continued until a late hour.

The officers of the alumni association include Miss Clara VanFleet, president; Miss Elizabeth Hoagland, vice-president; treasurer, Miss Florence Smalley; corresponding and recording secretary, Miss Susie Munn. The other members of the association are Miss Alyce Barker, Miss Rachel Emmons, Miss May Conroy, Miss Ellen Codington, Miss Laura Codington, Miss Elsie Brokaw, Miss Bertha Stevens, Miss Minnie Marsh, Miss Alice Thompson, Miss Edna French, Miss Helen Phillips, Miss Bessie Day and Fred Williams.

Handy Calendar Pad.

Leader & Bookstaver, printers, 52 Duane street, have issued a handy memoranda calendar pad for the desk of business men and others. Each page contains the day and date of a week of working days from July 3d, 1899 to June 30th, 1900, each day and date being ruled off by itself. It is a very handy pad to keep a record of coming events, engagements, etc. Mr. Leader is a resident of Plainfield, at 63 Duer street. Anyone desiring one of the pads can have it for the asking or addressing a postal card to his office.

Grocers Will Go to South Beach.

The annual excursion of the Grocers' Protective Association, of this city, will be held Labor Day, September 4th. The destination will be South Beach, S. I. Thirty cars have already been engaged and the grocers are counting on the largest excursion ever held by them.

EXPERTS AND NOVICES ON THE GOLF LINKS.

Scores Made by Hillside and Park Club Players.

GILBERT CUP COMPETITION.

M SS KAUFMAN AND WHITNEY BAKER THE LEADERS.

The Threatening Weather Kept Many Away From the Links of Both the Clubs—Park Club Has a Promising Player in the Person of Edwin T. Douglass, Who Makes Fine Scores.

The very warm and threatening weather of Saturday afternoon kept many persons away from the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club grounds; however, there was a good-sized crowd present and many occupied the links throughout the afternoon. The chief event of interest was the first play this season for the Gilbert cup for mixed foursomes, and there were about eighteen entries for the event. Of this number eleven finished, and the weather by this time became so threatening that the others failed to complete the eighteen holes. The play throughout was exciting and much interest was manifested. Miss Grace Kaufman and Whitney Baker succeeded in winning the cup with a net score of 89. The other scores were quite close, as the following table will show:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Miss Grace Kaufman. Whitney Baker.....	109	20	89
Miss Leinbar. F. O. Schenck.....	103	10	93
Mrs. N. P. Rogers. Mr. Rogers.....	96	6	90
Miss May Holly. H. Huntington.....	118	20	98
Miss E. VanDekerck. Mr. Barber.....	120	22	98
Miss Blanchard. W. L. Gilcney.....	112	13	99
Miss Margaret Holly. L. H. VanBuren.....	121	22	99
Miss Sculley. George VanDekerck.	118	18	100
Miss Steel. Owen Fleming.....	125	22	103
Miss Wadsworth. Parker Mason.....	114	8	106
Miss Schoonmaker. H. Rich.....	117	10	107

A large number of members and friends remained in the evening to dinner and enjoyed some of the social features offered by the club. The serving of meals has become very popular at the club. Every evening last week there was a dinner party at the house and Steward Ivamy is kept very busy attending to the wants of the patrons. Next Saturday afternoon the event will be men's foursomes, and a goodly number of entries are looked for.

The chances of a thunder storm seemed so good Saturday afternoon that many of the golfers of the Park Golf Club stayed at home. The Saturday afternoon play on the club links near the mountain was not as largely attended as usual in consequence. The course was in fair condition and the greens were in good shape, but the need of more rain was very apparent. There was a fair attendance at the clubhouse and a few of the members played round for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup. There were a number of others who did not record their scores for the cup. Anderson and several of the other crack players were absent.

The feature of the day was the brilliant playing by Edwin T. Douglass, who, though having remarkably hard luck, succeeded in lowering his already enviable score. It is well to add that those interested in the game should watch this rising player, for he is conceded by those who come in contact with him daily to have remarkable ability in this direction.

Thanks to a good handicap Mr. Douglass made the lowest net score for the day and gained three points in the race for the McCutchen cup. G.W. Cooley and G. W. Faber made the best scores for the day, each completing the round of eighteen holes on 110 strokes.

During the afternoon tea was served in the charming little parlor of the clubhouse, Mrs. E. T. Douglass and Mrs. J. C. Peck presided over the tea table.

The scores recorded during the afternoon for the McCuchen cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
E. T. Douglass.....	121	26	95
G. W. Cooley.....	110	14	96
Meredith Dryden.....	124	28	96
H. D. Hibbard.....	135	22	113
J. L. Myers.....	130	27	103
G. W. Faber.....	110	3	107

A Preparatory Service.

Next Friday evening preparatory service will be held in the Crescent Avenue church. A meeting of the session will follow and those who wish to come into active membership of the church may confer with the session at that time. Next Sunday morning the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be observed.

Two Lots Sold.

The owners of the Denton property, through the S. D. Drake Realty Company, Saturday evening, sold two lots upon which handsome residences are soon to be built.

Mr. Marsh Ill With Typhoid.

Craig A. Marsh, corporation counsel, is detained at his home with typhoid fever. He has what is considered a light attack. Dr. Endicott is in attendance.

TEACHERS SELECTED FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Corps of Instructors in the Plainfield Schools.

THERE ARE FEW CHANGES.

AUTHORITIVE LIST OF TEACHERS ANNOUNCED FOR NEXT YEAR.

One Change in the Faculty of the High School—Miss Peckham Will be Succeeded by Miss Ellen N. Cumming, a Vassar Graduate—Changes in the Other Public Schools—All the Contracts are Signed.

There will be very few changes in the corps of teachers who will begin duties in the Plainfield public schools after the long vacation is over. During the last month, Superintendent Maxson has been busy in arranging the list of instructors who are to teach here in the fall. All the contracts have been signed and there will be no changes from the list now prepared unless on account of illness or death.

There will be one change in the faculty of the High School. Miss Peckham will leave and next fall her place will be filled by Miss Ellen K. Cumming, a talented young woman from Saratoga and a graduate of Vassar College She comes very highly recommended.

In the Washington School, Miss Charlotte E. Tennant, of Albany, is a new comer. Miss Mary A. Cowles, of Massachusetts and Miss E. May Tennant, of Albany, will be the new instructors in the Washington School. Miss Anna S. Coyle, of North Adams, Mass., at the Lincoln School, will be the only other new teacher.

The rest of the school will be looked after by the same efficient workers that were here during the past school year. The entire list of teachers in the different schools is as follows:

High School—Ira W. Travell, principal. Eden E. Niles, Ellen K. Cumming, Alice M. Whitney, S. Lena Bass, A. B. Meredith, George W. Sanford, Anna J. Bennett, Charles L. Lewis, Mabel A. Thomas, Agnes B. Freeman, Susie Davies.

EIGHT GO TO COLLEGE.

SOME OF THE HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES WILL CONTINUE STUDIES.

Out of Nineteen Who Graduated From Plainfield High School, Eight Expect to Resume Studies at College.

Of the nineteen young people who graduated from the Plainfield High School, Thursday evening, there are eight who will probably continue their education in some of the higher institutions of learning. Miss Helen Louise Hall and Miss Angie S. Kuhl will enter Wellesley College in the fall. Miss Marjorie Canfield Sterling also expects to enter college if her health will permit.

Among the young men, William Conant Morgan will go to Amherst where his brother graduated several years ago. William Asbury Fisher, Merton Whitcomb Davis, Edward Leslie Coriell and Charles Morgan Titsworth will all go to Rutgers College at New Brunswick. Fisher, Davis and Coriell all reside in Bound Brook, Titsworth in Dunellen and Miss Kuhl in Somerville. The other graduates are all residing in this city at present.

Lowering the Tracks.

At present the Plainfield Street Railway Company is busy lowering their tracks on West Fourth street below Plainfield avenue. The track was not laid to the proper grade in the first place, and the change is now being made. Owing to this work now being done the Common Council will not attempt to macadamize that street for the present. The bids submitted for the work will be rejected and later on other bids will be asked for.

SEVENTY-SIX YEARS OF LIFE IN PLAINFIELD.

Jarvis A. Freeman Died Suddenly Saturday Night.

WAS A QUIET PERSONAGE.

EXCESSIVE HEAT URGED THE FATAL MOMENT.

He Had Been Feeling Comparatively Well, Except That the Heat Had Affected Him—Born and Always Lived in Plainfield—Of Cheerful Manner—Leaves Three Children—Died on Piazza.

Plainfield lost one of its oldest living marks in the death of Jarvis A. Freeman, who passed away suddenly Saturday evening. Born and reared here, he spent all his life in Plainfield where his face was familiar to all of the older residents. He was a quiet personage with a kind word for all and went through life cheerfully until death ended his career.

Saturday morning Mr. Freeman appeared in his usual good health although he felt the effects of the great heat considerably. In the evening, he walked up to a neighboring store. On his return he became dizzy and a friend assisted him to his home at 403 Watchung avenue. When seated on the piazza, he gave a sudden gasp and passed away before a physician could be summoned.

Mr. Freeman was seventy-six years old. He was born in Plainfield and has spent most of his life here. He attended school here and afterwards became a merchant tailor, in which business he has since remained.

Fifty years ago, he married the daughter of Jacob Thorn. There were three children, all of whom are living. His wife died and he married again. His second wife was Mrs. Barnard B. Winnie who died some years ago. Mr. Freeman has one sister living, Mrs. Randolph, of West Second street, mother of L. W. Randolph.

The house in which Mr. Freeman has lived for so many years was built by him over forty years ago. He has always lived there since and was loath to give it up. Mr. Freeman was well liked by all who came in contact with him, a pleasant manner and a Christian character combined to make him an agreeable friend. He was a member of the Trinity Reformed church.

While one of the oldest of Plainfield's business men and always interested in any movement for the advancement of the interests of the city, Mr. Freeman never took an active part in politics. His life was rather a retired one for he was content to remain at home and look quietly after his business. His loss will be greatly deplored by the older generation in particular to whom he was so well-known and identified with Plainfield.

He leaves three children, Miss Annie and Miss Norma, who lived with him, and Oscar, of Easton. Oscar Freeman is one of the oldest conductors on the Jersey Central Railroad and is very popular with the patrons of that line.

SIX TRIBES COMING THE FOURTH.

Miantonomoh Tribe Will be Host on the Fourth.

Last Friday at the meeting of Miantonomah Tribe, I. O. R. M., the warriors and chief's degree were worked on several candidates. The secretary was instructed to notify every member to be present at the rooms Fourth of July morning at 9 o'clock to join the parade. Already six letters of acceptance have been received from out-of-town tribes, out of thirteen tribes invited. The committee from Miantonomah was given full power to complete arrangements for their part of the celebration, and to arrange for the entertainment of guests.

At this meeting a warrant for $100 was ordered drawn in favor of Mrs. Grollmisch, of East Front street, whose husband, a member of the tribe, died last evening. The members will assemble at the lodge rooms tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 o'clock for the purpose of attending the funeral services to be held at 2 o'clock from the house on East Front street, and 2:30 from the German Reformed church.

Death of Miss Randolph.

Dunellen, June 24.—The death of Miss Mary F. Randolph, aged seventy-one years and eight months, occured at her home at Greenbrook yesterday. She was well and favorably known throughout this vicinity and in Plainfield. Her illness extends over a long period and she suffered with diseases that are incurable. She was a native of this vicinity and has always lived near here. The funeral services will be held at the Friends' meeting house, Watchung avenue, Plainfield, Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church, will spend his annual vacation, as usual, at Saratoga. He will go away the latter part of August.

Miss Euphemia Johnston, of New York, has been the guest of Miss Edith L. Pruden, of East Second street, for several days.

HOUSTON'S DEMAND MAY DEFEAT CROSS.

Present Union County Senator May Not be Renominated.

J. MARTIN ROLL'S AMBITION.

HE WANTS TO GO TO THE HIGHEST LEGISLATIVE BRANCH.

It is Feared That There is a Secret Movement on Foot Between Plainfield and the Other Towns Against Elizabeth—Sheriff Kirk Not After the County Clerkship—Howard Would Like to Succeed Himself.

Elizabeth, June 26.—Former Assemblyman J. Martin Roll, of Springfield, is in the field as a candidate for Senator from Union county, in opposition to Senator Cross.

It begins to look as though a secret movement is on foot to prevent Mr. Cross's renomination by a combination between Plainfield, the other townships of Union county and Elizabethport. The latter place wants Assemblyman Houston nominated for Sheriff and stands ready to enter any deal that will bring about this result.

Houston was promised the nomination for Sheriff three years ago, but was beaten by William T. Kirk, of Plainfield, at the county convention. Kirk now wants to be County Clerk, and if his forces combine with those of Houston they will be a formidable power in the convention.

William Howard, of Rahway, present County Clerk, wants another term of five years, but the outlook is that he will be have the fight of his life on his hands to get it in the event of Kirk remaining in the race and pooling his strength with Houston.

The rest of Union county claims that Elizabeth should be satisfied with one county office next fall and herein lies the danger to Senator Cross, as Houston's friends will not give way, but will demand that the pledge made by the leaders in 1896 to the Elizabethport man be carried out.

This is where J. Martin Roll hopes to come in as a candidate of the townships for Senator.

CARING FOR CHILDREN.

AGENT OF BOARD OF CHILDREN'S GUARDIANS VISITS IN PLAINFIELD.

Two Children Found Who Were Not Surrounded With Proper Influences—One Taken Away Yesterday Afternoon.

Recently there was organized in this State what is known as the State Board of Children's Guardians, an organization that especially looks after dependent children, provides homes or comfortable places for them, and if at any time it is found that the parents of these children are perfectable capable of caring for them they are returned to the parents. The organization is now in operation under a State law that gives this Board full authority to act as their best judgment teaches. The expense attached to this work is paid by the county in which the children live, and is not paid by the locality directly from which the children are taken.

In view of the fact that there are a few children in Plainfield that come under the supervision of this Board, a representative of the organization visited Plainfield yesterday and in company with Mrs. W. A. Woodruff, agent for the Charity Organized Aid Association, made several visits about the city and learned exactly the state of affairs in relation to the work of the new organization. It was learned that at present there are two children to be taken care of, and one was taken away yesterday afternoon to be placed in a comfortable home. There are other families that will soon be broken up, owing to the fact that the parents are absolutely incapable of taking care of the children, but as stated, if later on they are able to care for the little ones they will be returned.

This new organization is managed by the best people in New Jersey and already they have done a good work. Out of eighty children taken in charge sixty of them have been returned to parents perfectly able to care for them. While the representative was in this city a visit was made to the Children's Home, and it is possible that arrangements will be perfected whereby some children may be placed there. The sum of $1.50 per week is paid for each child, thus assuring good care. After the children are placed in homes or institutions, they are carefully watched by the Board and personal attention is given so that the children receive the very best of care.

Hop at The Hunterston.

Quite a number of young people from this city went to the Hotel Hunterston Saturday evening to attend the Saturday evening hop. In visitations have been sent out to a number of the younger society set inviting them to attend these dances and the morning and afternoon concerts as well. These weekly events promise to be very popular this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Nevius, of Elmwood place, have been entertaining company from Hunterdon county.

SUPREME COURT WRIT SERVED ON SAUNDERS.

Ex-Mayor Sued for $10,000 by Wesley R. Brokaw.

TROUBLE OVER A PIANO.

SEQUEL TO THE ALLEGED ASSAULT UPON THE PIANO DEALER.

The Row Took Place in Brokaw's Store Three Weeks Ago and Was the Result of a Misunderstanding About Leasing a Piano—Mr. Saunders Held for the Grand Jury by Justice Mosher After Examination.

When Former Mayor William L. Saunders decided to give Wesley R. Brokaw, the East Front street piano dealer, a piece of his mind, he little thought of the trouble that might follow such a proceeding.

The freedom of speech on the part of Mr. Saunders has involved him in no end of notriety, and the end is not yet. The latest act in this little farce-comedy is the action which Mr. Brokaw has just begun in the Supreme Court against Mr. Saunders for $10,000 damages for alleged assault. The papers were served yesterday by Lawyer Irving L. Brad of this city.

The complaint affirms that the alleged assault took place in his store and by reason of the publicity of the affair the feelings of the plaintiff have been injured and his business and social standing damaged to the extent of $10,000.

Mr. Brokaw's troubles began on or about Saturday, June 3d, when he received a call from Mr. Saunders, who requested the piano dealer to send up an instrument to his barn at Washington Park, where there was to be given a children's entertainment.

When the piano did not reach Mr. Saunders' barn at the hour prescribed in the agreement, the latter called at Mr. Brokaw's store to ascertain what caused the delay. It appears that there was a misunderstanding about the kind of a piano and the men got into a discussion. From the argument a quarrel followed. During the heat of the argument, in which Mr. Saunders gave the piano dealer his private opinion of him in a public manner, Mr. Brokaw alleges that Mr. Saunders punched him in the face and knocked off his hat.

Mr. Saunders denies that he struck Mr. Brokaw. He told a Press reporter that what he said was simply to tell Mr. Brokaw what he thought of him in good plain English; that he (Brokaw) had agreed to deliver a piano at his barn between 4 and 5 o'clock on the day in question, but that he had failed to keep his agreement and he did not believe him to be a man of his word. Brokaw had admitted to said that he did not intend to keep his agreement unless Mr. Saunders paid him more money for the use of the piano than had been agreed upon. Mr. Saunders affirms that he then shook his finger in his face and denounced him as an unfit man for honest people to do business with. He denies emphatically that he struck Mr. Brokaw.

However, be that as it may, Brokaw rushed into the office of Justice Nash and secured a warrant for Saunders arrest, charging him with assault and battery. Mr. Saunders was taken in to custody by Constable Mattox. He secured counsel in the person of Attorney John H. VanWinkle, and asked for an adjournment which was given him.

The case was to have been tried Saturday. Friday afternoon Mr. Saunders, through his attorney, waved examination and Justice Nash held him to await the action of the Grand Jury, and $100 being accepted by the magistrate.

This disposition of the case had scarcely been made before Mr. Brokaw's attorney served papers upon Mr. Saunders in the Supreme Court action as referred to above.

Mr. Saunders does not feel at all concerned at the position assumed by his late antagonist. He says he is prepared to defend his rights and will fight the case to the end.

TYPOS TO INSPECT THEIR FARM.

Big Excursion of New York Printers to Herbert Farm July Fourth.

Bound Brook, June 24—Typographical Union No. 6, of New York, is making preparations for a grand time the Fourth of July. A special train has been chartered to leave New York at 9:30 and arrive here at 10:30, which will bring out 400 or 500 members of the union and their families to spend the day with the farmer-printers on the Herbert farm, where 46 of them are now raising potatoes and other vegetables. Dinner will be served at a reasonable price in the hall of the mansion, and in the afternoon speech-making will be in order, the union having several orators in its membership.

Professor Edward B. Voorhees, Director of the New Jersey Agricultural Experimest Station at New Brunswick, visited the farm last Friday and made a careful inspection of it. He declared himself as being very much pleased with what he saw.

The Constitutionalist.

Somerset Senatorship.

The Jersey City News has the following to say of the political situation in Somerset county:

It is reported that the Democrats of Somerset county propose nominating James J. Bergen, of Somerville, to run against Charles Arthur Reed for the Senate next fall. This would be a wise and judicious nomination. Mr. Bergen is one of the strongest men in the party in that county, and he has demonstrated his strength on more than one occasion. He has been four times elected to the Legislature by large majorities for that phenomenally close county. In 1876 he did excellent service on the committee appointed to prepare amendments to the State Constitution, and as speaker of the Assembly during the sessions of 1891 and 1892 he proved himself a man of executive ability. Mr. Bergen has also occupied many local offices in Somerset county, and from 1877 to 1883 he satisfactorily filled the post of Prosecuter of the Pleas. He is in every way equipped to sit in the Senate, and his presence will add strength to that body.

Combine of Railway Interests.

What the people of New Jersey have been fearful of as a result of Legislative enactment for several years past, the formation of a coal combine, has, according to the Newark Sunday Call, been effected by a union of business interests that will assume a phase that required the approval of the Legislature. The Call describes the situation in the following:

With comparatively little noise, the coal combine has been effected, and in a way which can scarcely be reached by the courts. The option held upon the Lehigh Valley Railroad stock of the Packer estate has been exercised, and its ownership now passes into the hands of the Morgan banking interests. Identical control—of that mysterious kind is usually described as "in the interest of"—now exists in all the coal-carrying railroads—Lackawanna, New Jersey Central, Lehigh Valley, Erie, Susquehanna and Western, Reading, Delaware and Hudson and Ontario and Western, the sole exception being the Pennsylvania, which is sympathetic and not large. Four or five men who have agreed to act together, or who are compelled by circumstances to agree, now control the policy of all these coal companies, and it seems likely that they will continue to act unitedly for many years to come. What they will do in regard to coal is a question. The great trouble with this trade-as it is undoubtedly in bad shape—is that bituminous coal is taking the place of anthracite for manufacturing. This is a matter for regret, in the effect upon public health and comfort, but it seems to be established. About all the coal combine can do now is to cheapen production and transportation, without raising prices materially, for to press in price simply means loss of trade.

It is said that Representative Fowler is in line of promotion to be chairman of the committee on immigration and naturalization, as he was second man on the committee in the late Congress and Chairman Danford is dead. If he can get the chairmanship of the banking and currency committee he prefers that assignment.

One of the biggest elastic corporations that has been organized under the laws of New Jersey has just been sprung on the public in the American Isthmus Ship Canal Company, who start business with a nominal capital of $30,000, but are empowered to increase it to $250,000 000.

At this season of the year householders cannot be too careful in exercising precaution against fire. The small boy and his noisy fire-cracker are capable of great things in the conflagration line if they are not watched with a reasonable amount of care.

The various views that are being expressed relative to the railroad facilities that Plainfield possesses are just the sort of interchange of opinion that will contribute to bring about a change, if such a thing is possible.

With a Law and Order League back of him Rev. Mr. Shott, of Scotch Plains, will undoubtedly be able to conduct a much hotter campaign than he has been able to stir up yet in the sleepy old town.

The Newark News observes "that Union county Republicans will prefer J. Martin Roll to Joseph Cross for Senator is possible, but there is no use in being in a hurry to accuse them of it."

DRINK GRAIN-O

after you have concluded that you ought not to drink coffee. It is not a medicine but a food before order it, because it is healthful. Invigorating and appetizing. It is made from pure grains and has that rich seal brown color and delicious taste of the finest grades of coffee and costs about 1/4 as much. Children like it and thrive on it because it is a genuine food drink containing nothing but nourishment. Ask your grocer for Grain-O, the new food drink. 15 and 25c.

POINTS AND MOOT POINTS.

Man is a silhouette seen against eternity.

Self is too small a canvas to waste time on.

Effort should beget smiles; not blood or tears.

It is natural to succeed. Failure is degeneration.

God is infinite pleasure; to be happy is to worship him.

Timidity develops far worse vices than courage does.

NEW FIVE STORY BUSINESS BLOCK

To Rise Phœnix-Like From Bard Fire Ruins.

MODERN OFFICE BUILDING.

SUBSTANTIALLY CONSTRUCTED AND UP-TO-DATE IN ITS ENTIRETY.

It Will Have a Handsome Frontage on North Avenue and Extend Back to Second Street, Where it Will be But Four Stories High—In the Centre Will be a Large Court for Ventilation

The ruins of the Thompson building on North avenue, which was occupied by the Bard Cycle Company, when destroyed by fire some months ago, are being cleared away preparatory to the erection of a fine business block.

The new building is to be a modern one and up-to-date in every particular It will be built of pressed brick and be five stories on North avenue. It will extend back to Second street, where it will be but four stories.

The first floor will be fitted up for stores and the upper stories for dwelling apartments and offices. In the centre of the building is to be constructed a large court, for the purpose of supplying light and ventilation to the upper floors. The building will be provided with an elevator of the most approved pattern, particular attention being paid to safety and speed.

Entrance to the flats or dwelling apartments will be at the east side and separate from that leading to the offices. The architect is A. L. O. Marsh, who has had his plans approved by Mr. Thompson. Work upon the building will be commenced at once. The debris of the fire is being cleared away and the old iron taken to the Pond Tool Works to be melted up.

It is expected that the new building will be one of the handsomest in the city. It will cost upwards of $25,000

VICIOUS DOG'S ATTACK.

KNOCKED DOWN AND BIT A FANWOOD MESSENGER.

Wilbur Miller Quite Seriously Injured by the Brute at Mrs. Hoffman's House at Terrill Road Yesterday Afternoon.

Fanwood, June 27—Wilbur Miller, who has charge of the newsstand at the station had an exciting experience with a savage dog yesterday afternoon. During dull hours at the stand Miller delivers messages for the telegraph operator in the station. Early yesterafternoon a telegram was received for a Mrs. Hoffman living on Terrill road nearly two miles from the station. Miller agreed to deliver it. When he arrive at his destination he was jumped upon by a large New Found land dog belonging to Mrs. Hoffman.

The brute, which has a bad reputation for ugliness, nearly knocked the messenger down before he was aware of his presence, and before he could recover himself the animal had sunk his teeth deep in his arm, lacerating it badly. Mrs. Hoffman appeared upon the scene and with difficulty made the dog release its hold.

Miller fainted from shock and injury and it was some time before he was able to make the return trip. As soon as he reached Fanwood he went at once to Dr. Westcott and had the wound dressed and cared for.

It is not thought that there will be any serious results from the bite, but Miller's arm will be sore for sometime and Mrs. Hoffman may have a suit for damages to defend.

CINDER IN HIS EYE.

Webster Littell, of This City, Undergoes an Operation.

Webster Littell, son of D. W. Littell, of 715 West Seventh street, was Monday taken to the Eye and Ear Infirmary, New York, where he was operated upon for an injury to one of his eyes. Friday while on his way to New York on the 7:55 train Mr. Littell caught a cinder in his eye which gave him great pain. Sunday the eye grew worse and became greatly inflamed and upon the advice of his family he decided to go to the infirmary. Mr. Little is connected with the United States Express Company with headquarters in New York, and he commutes to that city daily. It is believed that he will be confined to the infirmary for for several days, but will not lose the use of the injured eye.

A Lucky Find.

A few days ago Mrs. Page, Mrs. Cox and Mrs. Andrews, of this city, were visiting in Newark. They were walking along one of the principal thoroughfares when Mrs. Page spied what she thought was a new penny. She picked it up and it proved to be a $5 gold piece.

GROWLER IN THE ALLEY.

FINALLY WENT TO MAGGIE BENFORD'S HOME.

As a Result She Spent Saturday Night in Jail After Disturbing Paradise Alley—Trial Taken Place Wednesday

The open wickedness of Paradise Alley are fast becoming happenings of the past, but the Alley enjoys its scandals as well as the rest of the world. There was a little outbreak Saturday afternoon, however, that necessitated a visit from Boundsman Frederickson and the subsequent departure of Mrs. Maggie Benford for the city jail.

In the confabs held at every gateway in the alley the visits of one man on another man's wife were remarked upon. He used to call, it is said, on Saturday afternoons, bringing with him his "growler." Then man and woman were reported to partake together and sometimes get gloriously drunk.

Saturday afternoon, the gossips say, the man came as usual but found the husband at home. He didn't call and the "growler" and its contents finally wound up at the home of Maggie Benford. The police say that Maggie is all right when there is nothing to drink.

When the "Jersey lightning" began to take possession of the actions of Mrs. Benford there was trouble. She was soon plunged in a lively altercation with some of her neighbors and made things lively in the alley. Her son Pete tried to persuade her to return to the house, but she only replied with a rock that nearly knocked the lad off his feet. Then the policeman came.

DUPEE GOES TO EUROPE.

YOUNG PLAINFIELDER CHOSEN ON YALE TRACK TEAM.

Will Go Abroad with the Team to Participate in the Oxford-Cambridge Games—Was at his Home Over Sunday.

Yale is to send a team of her crack athletes abroad this year to represent America in the Oxford-Cambridge games and one of Plainfield's sons has been chosen from the hundreds of students at Yale as one of the team. Charles Dupee, of Rockview avenue, is the young man who has been thus honored.

Dupee returned home from New Haven Saturday and spent Sunday at his home in Washington Park. He returned last Monday to New Haven where he will remain with the team until they sail for England on July 5th. He is looking well and is in excellent health.

Dupee has been chosen to represent Yale in the short dashes after many trials. The honor is a great one and much coveted. Dupee is considered one of the fastest short distance runners in any of the colleges, having covered a hundred yards in ten seconds. He has been in college two years and has successfully passed his examinations for the Junior year. He was fullback on the Freshman team two years ago and first substitute for that position on the 'Varsity eleven last fall. He has always been considered a good runner. He made his first notable victory in the Plainfield High School games several years ago when he won easily from a strong field representing the best scholastic talent in this part of the State.

Summer Kindergarten.

Miss Lue R. French and Miss Elsie Jobs, musical and literary young ladies from Plainfield, N. J., recent graduates of Elliman Kindergarten, New York, are guests of Mrs. C. M. Vermeule, Bangs avenue. They have opened a summer kindergarten in Cooper's building, and a number of little ones are booked for the season. Visitors are welcome at any time.—Asbury Park Press.

Disinfecting the Station House.

Chief Grant has given the station house a thorough disinfection by the use of sulphur candles. Tom Martin and family made a hasty exit and will absent themselves for a short period to give the bugs a chance to migrate.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards Arrive Safe.

Maze Edwards, manager of the Stillman Music Hall, and his wife have arrived safely at San Francisco after a very enjoyable trip by the water route. They will return to Plainfield late in the summer.

CLOSING HIS PASTORATE.

REV. T. LOGAN MURPHY'S LAST SERMON AT HOLY CROSS.

For Nearly a Quarter of a Century He Has Been a Faithful Rector—Affectionate Parting Words in His Discourse.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, severed his connection with that parish Sunday, after a faithful pastorate of about 23 years. The parish of the Church of the Redeemer having been consolidated with that of the Holy Cross, the parishoners of Rev. W. Montgomery Downey will hereafter worship at the Church of the Holy Cross, which will be in charge of Rev. Mr. Downey. Rev. Mr. Murphy preached his farewell sermon yesterday morning. His text was taken from St. John 4:16 —"God is Love."

It was an able discourse and closely listened to by a large congregation. The only personal reference Mr. Murphy made to the close of his pastorate was toward the end of his sermon, when he said in substance that for nearly 23 years he had participated in the joys and sorrows of the members of his church as well as their children. He did not wish to turn back the pages of the past, in which he had striven to do his duty toward God as well as the church. He had received many kindnesses at their hands, had sympathized with them in their sorrows and shared with them their joys. There comes a time, besides, when all must part—a fact he regretted exceedingly, but he viewed in sacred remembrance the many pleasant features of his connection with the church and he felt grateful for the kind assistance which had been rendered him by the members of his congregation.

The affectionate words of the good priest made a deep impression upon the congregation and many were visibly affected.

At the close of the services many stepped to bid God speed to their beloved pastor who is soon to go abroad for his health.

The choir Sunday was augmented by Miss Sara Wood, the contralto soloist of St. James' church, Newark, who rendered beautifully after the oppertory, "Rest in the Lord."

No services were held at Holy Cross last evening. Next Sunday the congregation of the Church of the Redeemer will unite with Holy Cross and services will be held in the latter church, Rev. Mr. Downey officiating.

AN INCORRIGIBLE YOUTH

THOS SELLERS, OF SCOTCH PLAINS, IS A BAD ONE.

Has a Record for Holding-up Young Children for Pennies—Now Involved in Having a Bicycle That was Stolen.

Scotch Plains, June 26.—Thomas Sellers, the incorrigible boy, who was involved in trouble about a year ago for his passion of stopping on the street and robbing small children of their pennies, appears now to have a weakness for helping himself to other people's bicycles. Last week a Cleveland bicycle belonging to Joseph Singer, of Westfield, was found in Seller's possession. Two weeks ago Singer left his wheel in front of Waldole's Hotel. No trace of it could be found until last week when Sellers was seen riding it. Sellers said he had found the wheel in Smith's coal yard. Mr. Singer was satisfied to recover the wheel and would not prosecute the boy.

The boy's parents are respectable Germans, of Fanwood, but do not appear to have control of him. Efforts will be made to have young Sellers committed to a reform school.

Going to Detroit.

The New Jersey Christian Endeavorers will start for Detroit to attend the National Convention on July 3d. The train will leave the Pennsylvania Railroad station at Jersey City 9 a. m., stopping at Newark and Bound Brook, taking the Lehigh Valley route. Tuesday, July 4th, will be spent at Niagara Falls, and Detroit will be reached at 2:30 p. m. Wednesday. For the return trip Detroit will be left July 11th. One night and a portion of a day will be spent at Watkin's Glen.

A Porch Party.

Miss Ellen Osgood, of Myrtle avenue, gave a porch party at her home Saturday evening in honor of her two guests, Miss Lisle, of Smith College, and Miss Hunt, of New York. She was assisted by her sisters in entertaining the guests.

The First Excursion.

The annual excursion of the Sunday-school of the Crescent Avenue church will be Thursday, July 6th, leaving Plainfield at 8 o'clock, and returning from Asbury Park at 5:50 o'clock.

LAWANDORDERLEAGUE FOR SCOTCH PLAINS

Sequel of the Agitation Started by Rev. G. M. Shott.

TO PROSECUTE VIOLATORS.

ANOTHER SENSATIONAL SERMON PREACHED LAST NIGHT.

The League to be Furnished With Finances so That it Can Do Effective Work—Rev. Mr. Shott Advises That Persons Using Profanity be Arrested and Prosecuted—Many Hypocrites.

Scotch Plains, June 26—Rev. Gideon M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, who characterized this town as one of the wickedest places that he had ever seen, is still engaged in carrying his reformatory energies into the camp of sin and iniquity much to the discomfiture of many of the staid old citizens of the community. The perseverance and aggressiveness of Rev. Mr. Shott is induced to a large extent by the knowledge that as soon as the street railway is running from Plainfield to Scotch Plains there will be a far greater influx of people who will come here to carouse. The minister preached another sensational sermon on the morality of the town last night, which was preceded by a meeting of a number of residents who decided to form a Law and Order League for the purpose of fighting the undesirable practices that are said to obtain here.

The Law and Order League is not to be confined to the Baptists, but will take in its membership other denominations, Rev. C. C. Woodruff, pastor of the Methodist church, having announced his intention of aiding Rev. Mr. Shott in his crusade. The league will be organized on a basis that it will have financial resources with which to prosecute the violators of the law in the town.

In his sermon last night Rev. Mr. Shott said that Scotch Plains had saloons enough for a town ten times its size. He made a special point of the presence of profanity on the street of the town, and stated that it was the duty of Christians to cause the arrest of every man they heard talking in an obscene manner, and to prosecute him to the full extent of the law.

The trouble is, said Rev. Mr. Shott, that too many men and women are hiding their immorality and sin under a church membership. He said that he wished the Township Committee would hurry up the lockup that the people voted the money for at the last election, as he could have filled it with six drunks who passed his door in the afternoon. Mr. Shott also indulged in some other sharp statements as well as a great deal of moralizing.

AT CHURCH OF REDEEMER.

Rev. Mr. Downey's Congregation Meet for Last Time Alone.

Sunday the last services of the Church of the Redeemer were held in the German Lutheran church on Grove street, and the rector, W. M. Downey, took occasion to speak in a feeling manner of the consolidation soon to take place between his congregation and that of the Holy Cross church. There was a large attendance at all of the services.

Next Sunday the consolidated church will meet for the first time and Rector Downey will officiate. There will no doubt be a large attendance at the services, and special music will be a feature.

The Limb Broke.

Charles Jason, of 316 East Third street, met with a slight accident Monday noon while picking cherries in his yard. He was standing on a limb that was not very strong and Mr. Jason's weight broke it. He fell a short distance to the ground, but no limbs were broken in his body. He sustained quite a shaking up, and will be a little more careful in the future.

Brunswick Won the Match.

The semi-monthly shoot of the Central New Jersey Trap Shooters' League was held at the Maples, Saturday afternoon. Five teams were represented. The team match was won by the Reservoir Gun Club of New Brunswick. The other Brunswick Club, the Climax Gun Club, the Dunellen Gun Club and the Perth Amboy Gun Club were also represented.

Evils of Cold Water.

Miss Gertude Jones, of 222 West Second street, daughter of J. S. Jones, is still very ill, and a consultation was held this afternoon in the interest of medical science. The cause of her illness is supposed to be the result of taking a large draught of cold water about six weeks ago, while in a glowing perspiration after a long ride on her bicycle.

DOES COFFEE AGREE WITH YOU?

If not, drink Grain-O made from pure grain. A lady writes: "The first time I made Grain-O I did not like it but after using it for one week nothing would induce me to go back to coffee." It nourishes and feeds the system. The children can drink it freely with great benefit. It is the strengthening constituent of pure grains. Get a package today from your grocer, follow the directions in making it and you will have a delicious and healthful table beverage for old and young. 15 and 25c.

MOUNTAINS OF COAL.

Largest Coal Storage Plant in the World is the Lehigh's.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company has never been so busy since the coal storage plant at South Plainfield was established as it has of late. It has been working the force of men day and night for a month past.

This is usually the slow season at the plant, and when the employes were looking for a lay-off their force was actually increased and a night gang was put on, more than doubling the labor.

The storage capacity is 310,000 tons, and this limit has been nearly reached. Coal has been coming to the plant in gondolas, jimmies, box cars and anything to haul it in, and coal is piled up at South Plainfield like a view of distant mountains.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that their is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Throw Your Colors to the Breeze.

Business houses and private residences will be decorated this week in honor of the celebration in this city of the nation's birthday. Most of this decorating will be done by the firm of Lyon & Co., of Newark, an experienced concern in this line. Handsome designs will be put up on the Kensington and City Hotel by this firm. All business houses in the city and all private residences should be decorated by next Monday morning. Don't be afraid to show your patriotism. Remember, this is the last time you will celebrate Fourth of July in this century, so let Old Glory wave and think of the boys in the trenches at Manila. Let everybody decorate.

Among the stores to be elaborately decorated will be those of Crosby & Hill, Morris Van Aredale, J. A. Smith & Brother and Frankle Linke.

National Guard Appointments.

Trenton, June 23—Orders were issued yesterday from division headquarters of the National Guard appointing Capt. Richard B. Reading inspector of rifle practice of the Second Regiment, Capt. Chas. H. Springstead inspector of the Fourth Regiment and First Lieut. Alvin H. Graff, Adjutant of the First Regiment as assistant to Gen. Bird W. Spencer, the State Rifle Practice Inspector. Their duties will be specially required at the Sea Girt camp this season.

The Boots are Not Mates.

Justice Mosher has reserved his decision in the case of Moses Benner, who is charged with wrongfully retaining a pair of rubbers boots belonging to Patsey Christmas. It developed at the trial yesterday that the boots recovered by the constable are not mates. Benner claimed he could not tell of whom he bought the boots Attorney Hatfield appeared for the defendant and W. G. DeMeza for the complainant.

FINE SHOWING IN ROAD IMPROVEMENT

The State Aid Plan Seems to Have Worked Well.

300 MILES PETITIONED FOR.

CONTINUOUS HARD ROAD FROM JERSEY CITY TO ATLANTIC CITY.

The Locating of Roads to Receive State Aid is Purely Arbitrary With the Road Commissioner—New Lines Being Built in All Directions—Instructions for Automobilists and Others.

Trenton, June 27.—"We are rapidly getting ready for the coming of the automobile into New Jersey, and we will have the finest system of continuous roads in the country for the recreation of those who will use them," said State Road Commissioner Henry I. Budd recently, after contemplating a road map of the State and pointing out the through lines that are fast being completed.

It is the pride of the State that in building its many roads that it keeps particularly in sight the early realization of the stone road agitators, for direct roads from the hills of Sussex to the sands of Cape May, air lines of crushed gray stones from the Atlantic Highlands to the rocky ledges of Palisaquarry in the upper corner of Warren county.

The work of road building has been going on persistently. To a casual observer it is detached work, but there need be only a few more years of road-building when heavy long lines can be drawn across the map of New Jersey, which will be royal highways for the general improvement of the communities and for the particular delight of the biker and the rich automobilist.

As it is now, the long-distance rider can take a hard road spurt from Atlantic City to Jersey City. There is an easy run of sixty miles over gray and yellow roads built under State supervision. The run then goes through Burlington county by the way of Moorestown, Jobstown and Trenton. There are several routes to New Brunswick, and from New Brunswick to Jersey City. This is a run of upwards of 175 miles over hard roads, designedly connected. This makes an interesting connection between New York and Philadelphia, and a good run for the automobilists.

There is now a hard road of thirty-five miles across the State from Jersey City to Hoboken, thence to Paterson and then to New Foundland, in the upper part of Morris county. Roads are reaching out from Merristown in this direction, which will give a great variety of landscape for either the bicyclist or the horseless carriage driver.

There has just been finished in Morris county a substantially built road from the Essex county line, which is known as the Danville and Pine Brook road, which opens a fine road to Lake Hopatcong from Newark, and the distance of the run is thirty miles. It passes through a country that cannot be excelled for fine scenery and leads to a classical lake region in the upper part of Morris county. These thirty-mile runs will be gradually extended, until they get well across the State.

It is a feature of the New Jersey Road law, slightly known, that the locating of the roads that shall receive State aid is purely arbitrary with the Road Commissioner. Other States make it obligatory for the States to give aid in road building where it is petitioned for, and in the order of the filing of the application. There has been some nominal criticism on this phase of the law, because it places too much power in the hands of one individual. The purpose of this one man power is explained by the existence of the plan to build roads that will sooner or later connect in a line and make broad highways up and down and across the State.

There are seven lines going out of Camden in every direction. Lines are building across Monmouth which will make pleasant and easy access to the seashore towns from the eastern and northern part of the State. Morris county, where the automobile has already been seen, will have, as soon as connections are made, several long roads that will become famous because of their condition and the beautiful landscape they cut through.

ST. MARY'S CHAPEL.

Ground Was Broken Monday by Rev. Father Smyth.

Ground was broken last Monday morning at Midway avenue and Berckman street for the new chapel of St. Mary's church. The ceremony was very simple, Revs. Father Smyth and Westman each throwing up a shovelful of earth. The chapel has been needed for some time, there being many Catholics living on the East side of the city who were compelled to walk some distance to worship at St. Mary's. In consequence some of Father Smyth's parishioners often worshipped at St. Joseph's church.

The new chapel will be a frame structure. It is expected that the corner stone will be laid on or about July 26 h.

FIRST WOMAN GRADUATE

Miss C. E. Brewer, of Macon, Ga., Now Mrs. Benson, Enjoys That Distinction.

The first woman in this country to receive a college diploma was Miss C. E. Brewer, of Macon, Ga., now Mrs. Benson. The diploma was conferred by the Georgia Female College, the first female educational institution in the United States to glory in the name of college. It was chartered by the Georgia Legislature in 1836, and in 1844 changed its name to the Wesleyan Female College, under which title it has flourished ever since. Year after year it has sent out its Bachelors of Art, coming up to fifty-eight in one year, and with no break, even during the Civil War, while it has bestowed its advantages on hundreds of women who could not complete its full course. A perusal of its catalogue is a complete refutation of the bug-bear that college education unfits for marriage, for it requires close scrutiny to find a name that has not been changed.

When the college opened six young women entered "half advanced" and completed their course, and were duly graduated July 16, 1840. The alphabetical list of the graduates began with Miss C. E. Brewer, and into her hand was put the first diploma for college work ever given to a woman in this or any other country. It stated that the recipient "had completed the regular courses of study of the college, embracing all the sciences which are taught in the colleges of the United States, with such as especially belong to female education in its most ample ranges." The studies of the graduate were Latin, French or Greek, astronomy, physical geography, geology, physiology, mental philosophy, moral philosophy, analysis of English classics and composition and evidences of Christianity. Mrs. Benson is still living, and when the college celebrated its semi-centennial she gave her diploma back to her alma mater, and it now hangs framed on its walls. These facts are condensed from an article in "Harper's Bazaar."

School for Young Housekeepers.

There has just been opened at Worcester, Mass., a school of household economics at which girls and women can learn practical housekeeping under competent teachers just as their children learn the rudiments in the public schools. There is a short course in marketing and lectures on the chemistry of food, history of foods, supplies and care of the house. Special classes at moderate prices are also held for clubs, teachers and housewives, twelve lectures once a week and also for housewives. The pupils are not only taught to cook on proper lines, but also to serve the viands so that they will please the eye as well as the palate.

At present fifty pupils can be accommodated as boarders within the walls, in addition to those living outside. Each has a room to herself, furnished neatly with a white enameled folding bed, the rest of the furniture being oak, very cozy and home like.

Any woman over 18 years of age with satisfactory references and in good health will be admitted to any of the special classes, but for regular course work there will also be required a diploma from high school, or an equally advantageous education to be determined by examination. A free scholarship for every State and Territory in the Union is offered, not by the school itself, but though the generosity of an unnamed patron of the institute, and many of them have already been filled.

The Heart of a Child.

Why was I given a child's wild heart?
I am tired of acting a woman's part—
And the world seems sordid and dull and tame.
It was different in the days of play,
When the soul was brave and the heart was gay,
And one rode away to fairyland on a painted rocking horse.

My friend, you will never understand
How I dream of those rides to fairyland!
Of those long, sweet rides in the firelit room
When one started off with a leap and bound
On one's steed so quaintly caparisoned,
To the silvery sound of little bells that twinkled in the gloom.

My friend, you are fair and strong and true,
With your sun-gold hair and your eyes so blue;
But why have you stolen my heart today?
For it is such a strange and wayward thing—
(And birds that are caged will not always sing),
And a child's heart, what should it know of love?—it only cares for play.

WOMEN'S REALM

MAKING UP REALISTIC.

Some American Girls Who Rouge But One Side of Their Faces.

Did anybody ever hear of a girl who rouged one side of her face, but not the other? It looks as though we were all likely to hear of it before long. The latest notions upon the art of complexion-making tally with the latest notions upon the art of writing, painting, acting, music and the rest. Realism is the thing nowadays, even where unrealities are concerned. Some South American girls who lately came to this city have, as is their habit at home, systematically rouged their cheeks ever since they arrived. They have several times remarked that comparatively few New Yorkers rouge, but they were told that such was the custom of the country. While at a reception not long ago, however, they were amazed to see a girl with a great dash of paint on one cheek while the other was as pallid as nature made it. The sight was altogether so unusual, in any country, that the South American, upon meeting the girl, deliberately asked her why she made up in such a one-sided way. "Oh," said the girl, "I'm rouging according to the latest, the most scientific and most artistic theories upon the subject. With both cheeks equally red it is easy to detect that it's artificial, while one cheek flushed and the other pale leaves the beholder uncertain whether it is the result of nature or of art. I'm rouging realistically, that's all." Whether or not it is true that nature sometimes reddens one cheek and not the other, the South American were unable to say, as were the Americans to whom they related the experience. Certain it is that since then a number of girls have been seen with one blushing cheek and one pale. It looks as though the fashion had begun to work, and meanwhile it has served for first-rate conversational capital for the South Americans when waxing eloquent upon the curious custom of this country.

Lifting the Skirt.

While it is considered bad form for a woman to carry her skirts when walking, there are conditions and circumstances when she must do so, or be hopelessly rougeless and indifferent, which is worse. The nicest way to do this is the question under consideration, and this is one of the keys to the lock of ladyism, and there is as much individuality in this often overlooked detail as in many others. It is in these be-ruffled, be-flounced days that the ultimate ladyhood of woman manifests itself.

In the first place, unless one is a woman of luxury, a piece of dress goods should be kept with one thinking of her service with nothing but her wardrobe to look after, one is not excusable for wearing skirts that in consequence of their all-round exaggerated length are veritable street sweepers.

One's walking skirts should be made to fit—escape the ground entirely individually to this mild extent should not be frowned upon, and then they should be allowed to hang free, unless the sidewalks or crossings are too damp or otherwise dirty, when it would, of course, be most unclean to lift the skirts.

The best way to most effectually and conveniently lift them: Throw the extra back fullness of the skirt over the hand on the side which should be closed, and placed as a handle at one side of the body, and slightly bend the forearm forward. The fullness of the skirt will then be found to remain in place and will not cause the fatigue to the hand and wrist that one experienced in the old way.

This is a decided saving on gloves, since it does not stretch them, or soil them, or cause the hand to become overheated, and skirts lifted in this way look much more graceful than when they are held in the hand.

One's anatomy is also less liable to be put-on-exhibit, for one has an ease and certainty that all the fullness is properly looked after, while at the same time petticoats, ankles and shoes are more becomingly exposed.

STORE HOSTESSES.

THEY AID WOMEN WHO GO SHOPPING ALONE.

The Role of Hostess Is That of Guide and Adviser—Must Be Thoroughly Informed About Latest Fashions, An Agreeable and Chatty Entertainer.

Five "hostesses" are now included in the staff of one of New York's large department stores. Some people call them guides, but the five women themselves prefer to be known as hostesses. If you ask them their mission in the affairs of the place they will tell you that they extend the hospitality of the store to customers. This glittering phase represents a line of duties which will appeal to every woman as exceedingly practical.

Talk of it's not being good for man to be alone! There is one time in all others when it is not good for woman to be alone, and that is when she is shopping. Rather than go forth solitary to a shopping expedition, a woman would take her mother-in-law along. There is, generally speaking, nothing stronger to be said. Nine women out of ten declare, in the moderate terms so dear to the feminine tongue that they simply cannot go alone. One cheek while the other was as pallid as nature made it. The sight was altogether so unusual, in any country, that the South American, upon meeting the girl, deliberately asked her why she made up in such a one-sided way. "Oh," said the girl, "I'm rouging according to the latest, the most scientific and most artistic theories upon the subject. WOMEN'S REALM

A BEAUTY SERMONETTE.

The Grimacing Act is Ruinous to Good Looks—Grow Old Beautifully.

Our faces get just as tired as our hands or our backs or our feet, and then, if we know enough, we long for the soothing touch of fingers trained to knead and pat and stroke our muscles.

The sensation is delightful. Tea velvety balls traveling around our chin, under our eyes, across our foreheads, and each ball carrying along a cool little dab of something creamy and soft and fragrant.

Many's the spell of cross-grainness I have had chased off in this way, says Dorothy Mindil in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Social indulgences must be paid for.

We are obliged to grimace. Some people call it "smiling." We expect our smirks to bring lines.

We look to the artful rubber to keep facial muscles so strengthened that they will resist the strain to which they are subjected.

We are also wise enough to learn a few massage tricks as well.

And how useful we are to get together delicate lotions that will help our 10 fingers to do the work demanded of them.

Imagine how the face of a woman pledged to six euchres a week and a whist or two thrown in must need massaging. Maybe the Philadelphia more cruelly unkind to go of looks than these persistent efforts of ours to be agreeable. We cannot go into society with our faces all expressionless and as one sees them at a dinner party. "But," he said in triumph, the walk of the walks nowadays is the lolling-serenely up and down, up and down, of the jumping jacks, the maid, her foot but touching the ground when straightway it spurns it, and she rises in the air as if all the exhilaration of the altitude at the tape had spent at the side of her boot and pushed her upward."

The following something for the exuberance of the Philadelphian emancipated from toil, there is here a plain indication that the prevailing Chestnut street gait resembles that of the little lambs which skip so gayly. This sort of thing may go in Philadelphia, but it is a pleasure to be able to say that New York women are not hopping airily along the corridors of time. Maybe the "heel skirt" has not yet reached Philadelphia. Maybe, and there are only a few advance issues of that funny feminine fashion, and the women wearing them are the ones who have been in the habit of being the man with the afternoon off. This seems plausible.

But the sheath skirt is universally worn in New York women with any pretensions to swelliness, and if would be a pathetic thing to behold if a brigade of celebrated women should attempt to imitate the long, graceful walk of the Quaker City dames.

Twenty-third street can show just as many women on time, early enough to forsook, to harass, to reproach.

Life may not be such a picnic to any one of us that she desires to cling to earth. We may even long to end it. We should without delay be coached regarding the ironical rule which progress insists shall be learned, namely, that we are expected to be beautiful, wholesome, physically a delight and to please others and not ourselves.

How are our faces seamed? We should not feel the years we have lived responsible, but the lives we have led. Malice and snarling work havoc with the finest faces. Only the lines of resigned sense and happiness and see where we will bring up, go on from time to time, planning reforms without carrying out a single plan, and see how we will come out. There is no dissipation, it matters not how small, that does not leave its impress. I have no pity for the patrician who has a sallow-tinted, bloomless maturity. I have no patience with a shriveled, parchment-like decay, with a lean or a fat old womanhood. Grow old beautifully. If we do not know how it can be done we should lose no time in finding out.

NEW YORK WOMEN.

THEY SCORN THE "BOB-UP-SERENELY" WALK OF PHILADELPHIANS.

Twenty-third Street the Place to See the Style of Walking by Women—Self-Possession Seeming Quite Natural the Chief New York Characteristic.

New York women walk better than they did five years ago. It is the happens to have any antiquated opinions on this subject it is time for him to change them. The tired feeling which pertains unto a New Yorker will make it hard for him to stand at the entrance of some Twenty-third street shop for half an hour and watch the women passing, but if he persists he will get a composite mental photograph of their gait which ought to be trustworthy.

First, then, he will find but what it is to be crazy. He will feel as if he were at the centre of a great human pinball machine, with hundreds of numerable dancers, an doing trip-s chains and "a la mair" lefts and "chas cez" as to their lives depended on it. See, now, the lovely, long, fair ladies' chains, and if the man looking on could take time to observe them and their ways he would find them interesting as well as pretty. The women who are in, but not of, the lower Broadway tide. But the chances are that he won't take that time. Certainly not if he is a man, for the snap in accessories of the way the women walk.

"Ways" would be a better word to use in this case. A Philadelphia man recently took an afternoon's rest from the mad rush of Quaker City existence and went to Broadway and Chestnut to see the feminine gait as it may be seen on Chestnut street. He noted "the swing, the swagger, the side-step, the lope, the mince, the trot and others. "But," he said in triumph, the walk of the walks nowadays is the lolling-serenely up and down, up and down, of the jumping jacks, the maid, her foot but touching the ground when straightway it spurns it, and she rises in the air as if all the exhilaration of the altitude at the tape had spent at the side of her boot and pushed her upward."

The following something for the exuberance of the Philadelphian emancipated from toil, there is here a plain indication that the prevailing Chestnut street gait resembles that of the little lambs which skip so gayly. This sort of thing may go in Philadelphia, but it is a pleasure to be able to say that New York women are not hopping airily along the corridors of time. Maybe the "heel skirt" has not yet reached Philadelphia. Maybe, and there are only a few advance issues of that funny feminine fashion, and the women wearing them are the ones who have been in the habit of being the man with the afternoon off. This seems plausible.

But the sheath skirt is universally worn in New York women with any pretensions to swelliness, and if would be a pathetic thing to behold if a brigade of celebrated women should attempt to imitate the long, graceful walk of the Quaker City dames.

Twenty-third street can show just as many women on time, early enough to forsook, to harass, to reproach.

Life may not be such a picnic to any one of us that she desires to cling to earth. We may even long to end it. We should without delay be coached regarding the ironical rule which progress insists shall be learned, namely, that we are expected to be beautiful, wholesome, physically a delight and to please others and not ourselves.

How are our faces seamed? We should not feel the years we have lived responsible, but the lives we have led. Malice and snarling work havoc with the finest faces. Only the lines of resigned sense and happiness and see where we will bring up, go on from time to time, planning reforms without carrying out a single plan, and see how we will come out. There is no dissipation, it matters not how small, that does not leave its impress. I have no pity for the patrician who has a sallow-tinted, bloomless maturity. I have no patience with a shriveled, parchment-like decay, with a lean or a fat old womanhood. Grow old beautifully. If we do not know how it can be done we should lose no time in finding out.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHITE TRIMMINGS.

Hats This Season Are Usually Relieved by Only a Dash of Some Color.

One sees an all pink or an all blue hat oftener than an example completely of white. This is contrary to established custom. The white head covering without a touch of gayety is in America ideal feminine warm weather wear for Sunday best. We have allowed Paris so to influence our headgear that, with the Parisian, our bonnets, the purest of them, must be dashed, at least with color. For piquancy the French woman sometimes gowns herself in unrelieved white. And it is not difficult to find hats done entirely from white, but they are rarely put forward without inquiry. Of-tenest, you come upon a chapeau of white straw or mulle, decorated with some soft white stuff, and it would seem as if the intention to make it entire white had been excellent. At the last moment a paradise plume or a yellow, a cluster of green leaves, a handful of flowers, is tucked on somewhere, and the whiteness ceases to be total. Trimming is another fact that foundations of any color is in high vogue. And this whether the hat be for dressy or common wear. One of the most original methods of using white is in great mallne rosettes, the only trimming of a black mallne Spanish turban. White behind crape and white chiffon are twisted on outing hats. This probably is the outcome of the wearing of two veils, one for ornament, on straw sailors.

white and gold galloon at the hem, and at either side of the narrow front gore. Corsage of peau de soie has vest of braided bands of crepe, trimmed at each side with braiding and puffed bow sleeves trimmed with lace. Fitted collarette of peau de soie has scalloped edge, and is embroidered with small sprays of forget-me-nots. Stock collar of peau de soie trimmed with chiffon ruching. Material required, peau de soie, 20 inches wide, 12 yards; crepe, 27 inches wide, 7 yards.

The Dear Girls.

"Be mine," pleaded the poetic lover, "and your path in life will be strewn with roses." "Humph and have me getting a puncture on the thorns. Not much." retorted Miss Sprocket, who was an ardent devotee of cycling.—Philadelphia Record.

Reason for Doubt.

"Did you sever your connection with the firm, or were you discharged?" asked the friend.

The man out of a job gave a few minutes to thought before answering.

"I'm a little uncertain about that," he said at last.

"Uncertain?"

"Yes. Of course, I know that if the boys are discharged and general managers sever their connections, but I can't be sure that I was high enough up to sever my connection, and I don't like to think I was low enough to have to be discharged. Perhaps you'd better make it that the firm and I disagreed."

Household Talk

FINE TABLE LINEN.

Men as Fond of Its Attractive Appearance as Women.

Man likes daintiness about his dining table as well as his wife and the other women of his household do. Fine and spotless linen and thin, unchipped china appeal to him even more perhaps than delicious viands. This being so, he cannot blame woman for her enthusiasm over the many bargains now to be had in table linen. The fine sales of tablecloths, napkins, tea cloths, tray covers and the like are more tempting this year than ever before, and that is saying a great deal. The best is absolutely the cheapest in table linen and no thrifty housewife should allow herself to be beguiled into buying linen of inferior quality because of its beautiful design.

Fashion changes in table linen as in everything else, but only to immensely rich can afford to keep up with every little change. If the quality of one's linen is good and it is always well laundered, a few little alterations in the design are small or large. As a rule it is foolish to buy anything not immediately needed, simply because it is cheap, but in this respect table linen is an exception. One cannot have too many tablecloths and doilies, and when one or the other begins to show signs of wear it is well to be able to replace it at once. In this way the stock in the linen closet never gets so low that the family is put to many little shifts when company is coming to find that there hasn't a decent tablecloth or a whole set of napkins to her name, as she naively put it. Just now it is possible to get the full value of all money expended in linen goods.

Speaking of furnishings for the dining table brings to mind the fact that most housekeepers have trouble in removing the stains left on polished tables by hot dishes. No matter how thick a cotton flannel cover is used next to the table, stains will sometimes appear. A little very fine sugar applied to the spot with a wet cloth and a good deal of elbow grease will remove them, and leave the table looking like new. Wood ashes are considered the best for this purpose by those who know say, but coal ashes do the work also.

How to Tie a Bow.

Everyone, doubtless, can tie a bow knot, but there is a little trick about making the bows and ends lie horizontally and have the overknot of the finished bow flat and smooth. The accompanying pictures will show you how it is done.

Country House Decoration.

A good and at the same time inexpensive mode of decorating woodwork in a country house is in transparent wood stains, which can be had in any color. These stains of pink or green allow the grain of the wood to show, and are less expensive than paint, since one coat of stain with a finish of varnish is all that is needed, while of paint at least two coats are required. If later a change is desired, it is an easy matter to paint over the stain. Pine wood or oak so treated gives an effect of lightness and luxury that is very attractive, according to the Art Interchange. In one country house the walls of the dining room were hung with denim of different shades of pink and yellow to match the stained woodwork. The curtains were of the same material, their back with lace, and produced a simple effect that was greatly liked. For hangings, however, or for upholstery there is nothing more serviceable than denim. The divans and pillows should be embroidered with white to lighten the effect.

Chopped Meat Preservative.

If chopped meat be left to itself or awhile, it will turn dark and grey, losing its freshness. The change is due to the action of bacteria, which are found in the meat from the air in the process of chopping. The depreciation of chopped meat is a source of considerable annoyance and loss to butchers, to whom it is important that the meat exhibited on their counters should look fresh and inviting. A powder now on the market is said to keep the meat as if it were frozen. After the meat is dusted over with the powder it retains its appetizing appearance for days, even in the hottest weather, without the use of ice or cold storage. The actual temperature of the meat is not lowered, and the unpleasant bacteria are rendered harmless. It is said that the powder is as safe to use as common salt. It is a single chemical preparation, and does not contain any borax, boracic acid, saltpeter, salt, salicylic acid, salicylate of soda or benbeacite of soda.—Los Angeles "Sunday Times."

A PARTING.

"Good-by, then"—and he turned away,
No other word between them spoken;
You hardly would have guessed that day
How close a bond was broken.

The quick, short tremor of the hand
That clasped her own in that brief parting,
Only her heart could understand
Who saw the tear-drop starting.

Who felt a sudden surge of doubt
Come rushing back unbidden o'er her,
As, at the words, her life without
His presence loomed before her.

The others saw, the others heard
A calm, cool man, a gracious woman,
A quiet, brief farewell unstirred
By aught at all uncommon.

She knew a fatal die was cast;
She knew that two paths hence must never
That one familiar step had passed
Out of her life forever.

To all the rest it merely meant
A trivial parting, lightly spoken;
She read the bitter, mute intent,
She knew a heart was broken.

—BARTON GREY.

A MIDNIGHT TRYST.

"The age of miracles is past," remarked Charley Ingram, giving a meditative glance to his long legs, as if they were somehow responsible for the present dearth of miraculous occurrences, and thus kindly, if unintentionally, affording me an opportunity to admire his resolute profile, the boyish freshness of his complexion, and other attributes that went to make a picture of earnest young manhood.

"The age of miracles is past. Ravens or other thoughtful birds no longer fly about desirous of feeding the deserving poor. I must go to work."

In other words, he must tear himself from my enthralling presence and betake himself to a distant state, there to embark in a mining venture—a plan of ancient date in his life, and upon which we built our Utopia of future bliss.

"I am going, Rose, soon."

I suppose I looked like Grief on a monument turning up her nose at Patience, for he said:

"Oh, you'll get along all right. The dust of my footsteps won't have been blown by the wind before Tom, Dick and Harry will be spooning here."

I left his side and walked to the tall glass suspended between the end windows of the old parlor that had witnessed so much of our love-making. It seemed worth while to take a fresh inventory of my charms, in view of the imminence of my conquests.

"Was it mad?" he mocked, coming behind me and trying to meet my eyes in the mirror. "You see, I envy them—confound 'em! See here, suppose you go into a nunnery till I come back."

"Thanks! not even to oblige your Sultanic Majesty. I'll compromise, though; I will go into a nunnery, if you don't come back."

"Will you?" encouragingly. "I will give you five years of graceless freedom, and if I don't come back in that time, make your vows (in an austere, sepulchral tone), and, coifed and cloistered, pray for the repose of my restless soul, for if I don't come back it will be a very restless soul."

He brushed my cheek with his soft mustache, which, despite his assured carriage and his fierce self-assertion, gave him such a mail, adolescent air.

Then slipping his arm around me, and surveying our prepossessing figures:

"What a strikingly handsome couple we are! You have a way of drawing me into this mirror to harrow my soul with that picture."

"If you could only conjure this old mirror—fix that image there, visible to me only—I could steal in here, and, looking at it, persuade myself that maybe you had not laid your gold mine at the feet of Mammon."

I paused from deficiency of information, not knowing whether senoritas or gentle savages predominated in the gold mine regions.

"What lots of fun we had at this mirror Halloween, a year ago—don't you remember? See here"—with a sudden change of manner—"are you in earnest about my showing up there some time in the future?"

"All right; I will make an engagement with you. Let's see—this is January—any next Halloween, the night of nights. If you want to see me, and you have not forgotten me, look in this glass next Halloween, and my face will appear there as sure as fate."

"Nonsense!"

"Nonsense? You don't know anything about it. Why, I had a grandmother who could do the queerest things you ever heard of. You just come in here on the night of the 31st of next October. Come alone, at midnight; come in the dark, remember; stand and strike a match, light the candle you will have with you, raise it above your head, look right in there, and—can you do anything as heroic as that?"

"Oh, yes, if that's all," I said, flippantly.

"All right; dance, flirt, break as many hearts as you please; but if in the meantime you do not join the great Matrimonial Mess and bring your fickle sex who are inconstant—come in here on the 31st, at midnight, and if there is a bathtub in Boonville, a Chinese laundry, a barber and a habberdasher, you'll see me right there (pointing), fresh as a daisy, and wearing the identical new fourin-hand in Boonville. You promise?"

"I promise; but supposing you have not inherited your grandmother's skill in necromancy?"

"But I have; I know it; I am certain of it. You must think about me, of course; have faith, above all; obey directions implicitly, and—you'll see what you'll see!"

"I generally do," I said, sapiently.

A few days after our memorable conversation Charley bade me goodby, and full of courage and hope, and with many promises and assurances for the future, set out on the long journey to his distant field of labor and enterprise. Silence fell between us, for my parents objected to any correspondence between us. I danced and flirted; the mise en scene of my life called for such diversion, in fact; but on the 31st of the following October I declined the most seductive Halloween parties, in order that, alone, at midnight, in front of the old mirror, I might keep my tryst.

Had he forgotten me, amid strangers and in the ardor of money-getting? Had some new woman already led astray the heart too young to have anchored all its hopes upon one woman, albeit myself?

What did I expect? It was a piece of folly, and yet, on the night of the 31st of October, the mystic night when strange things are used to be thought possible, and weird influences were supposed to rise in their might to weave their puzzling manifestations about wondering, flesh-incumbered mortals—on that night I slipped from my bedroom a few minutes before 12 o'clock, and with a fast-beating heart I felt my way down the stairs, through the hall to the long parlor which opened upon it.

I reached the door, felt for the knob, gently turned it, and opened the door noiselessly. As I did so I could have sworn that someone glided behind it.

I was in darkness, but involuntarily I turned my head toward the door. Had not someone closed it? I could have sworn a few minutes before I locked, and with a fast-beating heart I felt my way down the stairs, through the hall to the long parlor which opened upon it.

Again I turned my head to listen.

My knees touched at last the marble shelf which held the mirror; I stooped, and striking a match, held it over surface, lit the candle with which I was provided, raised it well above my head, and looked into the mirror's depths.

No sound of joyous awe escaped from my lips—hardly, while that look of fascinated horror filled my eyes. My knees gave way like props suddenly withdrawn. I should have fallen, but that a strong man's arms were about me; and I sank, pallid, perforce, upon his breast, being unable to sustain itself.

"In heaven's name, control yourself," he whispered, and neither face nor voice was Charley's.

This adventure ought to have cured me of all desire to keep unhallowed Halloween trysts; but on three successive anniversaries I looked in the old mirror at midnight. I might ask, as I did on the first occasion, what did I expect? and repeat what I had said then; that it was a piece of childishness. But to renounce it seemed like renouncing Charley. I did it half playfully, half loyally, wistfully too, as a sort of memorial service to his image, which still lived in my dreams and threw its radiance over my waking life. As the years went by the sentiment assumed a tinge of superstition, and the little midnight service became obligatory.

What had become of him? I knew not; darkness and silence had swallowed him up. On the 31st of October yields up its dead, and was it not just possible that beside the antique mirror, where he had promised to meet me, laughingly swearing that he never broke his word—was not it just possible some message, some revelation might have come to me?

October had come again, the fifth since Charley had left me. He had had almost five years to cultivate an aura and collect his auriferous deposits.

"See here, Charley," I said, as the last night of the year's sweetest month was waning, "I am going to give up mysticism for matrimony. I'll have to marry to get rid of this awful habit of expecting the 31st of October. I'll have to accept Tom Allin in self-defense. There's insanity in this madness."

I got up from the lounge on which I had thrown myself face downward, and, despite my bravado, there were tears of desperation in my eyes.

The clock was striking the last quarter before twelve. I looked disheveled, and I felt forlorn, and yet, contradictorily, there swept over me something like an emotion of hatred for him when I thought that in all these years he had gay and heart-whole, while I was on the eve of my yearly devotional ceremony—my dark and trembling pilgrimage downstairs. The futility, the imbecility of it made me heartsick.

I pressed my fingers to my eyes fiercely as if to wipe his features from my retina. In vain; I shuddered with delight, for he seemed to be right there beside me, and every trait and charm that had won my soul appealed to it resistlessly again. Indeed it was as if the eloquent page one has learned to love had revealed fresh features, subtler meanings, in type and text.

I glanced at the clock; five minutes gone. Three of my paper, and I pinned a Louis Quinze gown and stuck a bunch of roses (an offering from my pis aller, Tom) in my corsage.

One minute of 12!

Heavens! Suppose I should be too late; suppose he had come and gone—looked in the mirror, and not seeing me, vanished! And yet, if I fell downstairs and broke my neck Charley would be my murderer. To save him from this ghastly responsibility I moderated my speed, but I had been in earnest! I would have slid down the banisters.

I was in front of the mirror now, and a town clock boomed 12. I was so excited that its reverberations shook me like a rough hand. I could scarcely hold the candle (it was blessed, by the way), but up above my head I carried it at ease, while my eyes searched the mirror; and, believe it or not, from its clear depths, as if from the waters of the past, looked Charley.

"Rose!" and the voice was Charley's.

"Oh, Charley," and the arms that enfolded me were Charley's.

A brief interval, all that life ever yields us, was given to rapture, and then realism tramped upon the scene, themembering my first trying vigil. I murmured:

"How did you get in?"

"Just as I did four years ago."

"Four years ago——"

"Fact! I never break an engagement with a lady, even my sweetheart; but I am a little punctual (at times), and as another gentleman had you in his embrace on that occasion I very considerately (as I thought) retired. I took the 4 o'clock train that morning and went back to—well, Dante's Inferno," cheerfully, joyously. "But, strange to say, that man is the cause of my being here."

"Oh, Charley!" with a shudder at that frightful episode; "I don't understand—explain! What did make you come at last?"

"Well, it seemed worth while to make a little journey of two or three thousand miles for the sake of a few explanations. Best reason of all, I wanted to see you, to hold you in my arms. Saddest reason of all, I wanted to get on my knees and beg your pardon. I felt like shooting myself when I knew. It was temperament, and I couldn't stop myself."

"But tell me, how did he—who is he—what has he to do with it?"

"To-morrow, sweet——"

"No, to-night."

"Well, about two months ago a man calling himself Horace Armistead came to Boonville. He was a tall, handsome, melancholy individual, very reckless, very wild—fascinating, though; a sort of careless style about him, a certain nonchalant frankness that would make you share your last crust with him and give him your last red copper. What are you blushing about? Honestly, I am glad that urgent private business compelled him to pass, on a flying trip, incog, but I am anticipating.

"Mr. Armistead very promptly got into a difficulty in Boonville, when it fell in my way to order him a slight service. Six weeks ago or thereabouts he dropped in on me one evening, bag in hand, to bid me good-by, and to thank me for what he was pleased to call my kindness to him.

"He was leaving by the way, he didn't say what was his destination—no matter! Your picture was hanging over the shelf that served as a mantel in my rude quarters (you see, I had left it there, hoping it would make a good impression on you), and as soon as he saw that picture he made a sudden movement toward it—almost a jump it was. He controlled himself and sat down again, but he could look at nothing else.

"'That is a striking likeness,' he said, at last; 'it might have been taken for her—of the most beautiful woman I ever saw. I spent but one hour in her society, but I will never forget her.'

"'Interesting, romantic,' I murmured. 'I thought it would not have been satisfied with one hour; I would have continued the acquaintance.'

"There must have been something compelling in my desire to hear that story, for he added:

"'It happened this way: I was a fugitive. Why? No matter'—and he looked dreamily at the curling smoke of his cigar, as if it might be the wraith of that past to which he referred. 'I was passing in disguise through a strange city. To elude those who were on my track upon me, I stopped at night a certain house in a quiet quarter of the town. I did it in the most natural way in the world; I simply raised the latch of a door which, through some oversight, perhaps, had been left open in the house, a roomy old place, and there didn't seem to be many people about; in fact, it was occupied by an elderly couple and their daughter. Toward midnight I left my hiding place and entered the parlor.

"'I had been there a short time when, providentially, as it turned out, a lady stole in. She had some difficulty in getting about in the dark, but she finally struck a match, lit a candle, and looked into a big mirror that was hanging at one end of the room. What in the mischief she did it for I can't conceive—can you? I have wondered a hundred times what brought her there! It was my good angel, I suppose.

"'I shall never forget her look of terror when, as she held the candle above her head, she saw me behind her. I didn't want any outcry, and I did not want to terrorize her; I put my hand about her, for she could hardly stand, and grasping the candle, I begged her to be calm. When she became so, I threw myself upon her mercy. I begged her to look upon me as a fellow-creature in misfortune; not to judge, not to help me. She answered my prayer in letter and spirit. I left the house, walked out of the city, and attained a place of safety.'

"I don't think I gave a sign of life during that narration; I was a statue, but a statue that would wake to life, rest assured of that.

"'When he was gone—and I wished him Godspeed with all my heart—I thought I would jump on the first train and come right back here, but a better plan suggested itself, and I decided to defer my return a few weeks.

"'I remembered your promise to look in the old mirror on the 31st of October; and just suppose, I said to myself, just suppose I should surprise her, improbable as it seems, before that old mirror on next Halloween! She'll be obliged to forgive me in self-defense.'

THE DREAM OF THE TOY.

The Sandman lost a dream one night,
A dream meant for a boy;
It floated round awhile, and then
It settled on a Toy.

The toy dreamed that it stood in class
With quite a row of boys;
The teacher pointed upon his desk
And cried, "Less noise! less noise!"

Then, looking at the Toy, he scowled
And said, "Next boy—forstell."
"Oh, please, sir," cried the little Toy,
"I don't know how to spell.

"Indeed, I don't know how it is,
I'm sure I am a toy,
Although I seem to be in class
And dressed up like a boy."

"What's that? What's that?" the teacher cried—
In awful tones he spoke;
He came with strides across the floor,
And then the Toy awoke.

There lay the nursery very still,
The shelf above its head;
The fire burned dimly on the hearth,
The children were in bed.

There lay the dolls and Noah's Ark.
"Oh, dear me," said the Toy,
"I just had such a dreadful dream!
I dreamed I was a boy."

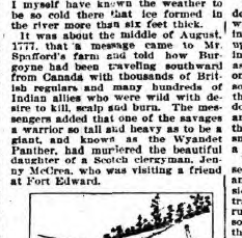
A WILD SLEIGH RIDE.

This happened 15 years old in 1777, when General Burgoyne started from Canada for Albany, and his name was David Spafford. He lived with his father and mother and two little sisters on a farm away up in the Green Mountains of Vermont, where the winters are long and the snow sometimes lies four feet deep for weeks at a time. I myself have lived on those hills, and then it shot down the mountainside with the speed of an express train. The noise made by the whirring runners on the sled, together with the shrieking savage cries of the Indians, and hastening through the barn they saw the escape. Two of the savages fired their muskets at David, and the standing man in the sleigh and was steering it, but they were so drunk that their bullets went wide of the mark. A third seized a long board, and with a fiendish yell threw himself on it headlong, as a boy nowadays will throw himself on a sled. This man, painted, and clinging to the mountainside, was the most natural way in the world; I simply raised the latch of a door which, through some oversight, perhaps, had been left open in the house, a roomy old place, and there didn't seem to be many people about; in fact, it was occupied by an elderly couple and their daughter. Toward midnight I left my hiding place and entered the parlor.



THE INDIAN SEEMED TO LEAP OFF HIS BOARD INTO THE AIR.

Thus it happened that when New Year's Day came David Spafford and his father were living alone in the farm house, taking care of the horses and cows, and hoping each morning that word would be brought that peace had been declared.

One night while they were in bed they heard a man shouting and kicking at the door. David jumped up and let him in. He was a farmer who lived five or six miles further in the mountains. His clothing was torn and his face was covered with blood, and he had answered the call of duty.

"I can't stop!" he cried out. "I only came to let you know that Indians have burned my house and murdered all my family, and I am now fleeing for my life. They will soon be here and you must start at once!"

Then he turned and sped into the darkness. For a moment or two David stood as if stunned. The awful news completely terrified him; but no time was to be lost. He glanced up the mountainside and the woods away off glared with the reflection of the burning buildings. The lad knew it would be simply impossible for his father to escape—old and feeble as he was. He had left him so still in both legs that he could scarcely walk about the house. Yet something must be done at once.

In such a time one's wits work quickly, and David Spafford had his to spare. He suddenly remembered that his father's sleigh was precisely like those worn by the man who gave the alarm. So he worked rapidly and put on the snowshoes and ran back and forth between the house and the barn several times, making half a dozen tracks in the snow. The he took the horses and cows out of the barn and laid them down on them so vigorously that they ran out toward the road as fast as they could go. By this time Mr. Spafford had managed to dress very rapidly.

"Good!" he said to his son. "Now do you think you can carry me to the barn?"

"I'll try," David replied, and taking his father on his back like a sack of flour he succeeded in getting him into the barn and buried in the hay mow. That night proved very cold," said Mr. Spafford, "and if the crust keeps hardening on the snow we have one chance of escape. Haul the bobsled across the barn floor until it is just in front of that door in the rear, then bring our guns here and hide yourself in the hay beside me. It's a slim chance and a big risk, but it is the only one, if we want to save our scalps!"

"I see your idea," the boy cried, and he did as he was told. Father and son had lain there, buried in the hay, scarcely half an hour when, through a chink in the barn, they saw seven Indian warriors surrounding the house. The savages staggered and some of them fairly reeled, for they had swallowed much liquor as well as been quite drunk. Several had bloody scalps dangling from their belts.

"I had scarcely hoped for it," Mr. Spafford whispered, "but they are so drunk they can hardly follow the trail of the snowshoes, and maybe we will outwit them after all."

After prowling around the house some of the Indians went inside, while others came toward the barn; but after glancing at the empty stalls they rejoined their fellows, and all set up a loud shouting. Pretty soon two or three of them rolled out of the house a cask of New England rum, and knocked the head in and commenced to drink heavily. Then some more pulled two or three feather beds out into the moonlight, and ripping them open with their knives, commenced to throw the feathers up into the air, dancing and singing, and every few minutes drinking again and again of the rum. One after another of the savages became so intoxicated as to fall down in the snow, and then they rolled over and over in the feathers which stuck to their bodies, until finally every one of the band lay there, stupified with liquor, unable to move hand or foot.

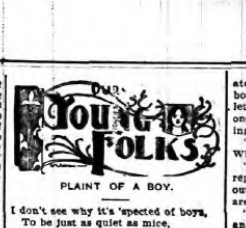
All this time David and his father, hidden in the hay, scarcely dared to breathe, for fear of betraying themselves, but now had come the moment for action.

"We can't tell how many of the savages may be coming along, so we dare not kill these, although it would be an easy matter," said Mr. Spafford. "It is almost daylight, too, and we must be moving. Open the rear door, David, and push the bobsled out on the snow—I guess there is room enough to bear it now. Then help me down, and we will make one desperate effort to get away."

The brave boy crawled noiselessly down from the haymow and did as he was bid. He placed a quantity of straw in the sleigh and wrapped his father up in a buffalo robe, for the cold was intense. Then he stepped in himself, as he did so giving a slight push with one foot. The sleigh moved slowly, but once started it moved more fast, for the barn was a steep valley running down for five miles to the frozen river; and in all that sweep there was not a tree, or so tall and heavy as to be a giant, and known as the Wyandot Panther, had murdered the beautiful daughter of a Scotch clergyman, Jenny McEwen, who was visiting a friend at Fort Edward.

Willie Strutt was playing with the Tinies when his mother called them in. "Willie don't you know those are bad boys for you to play with?"

"Yes mother," said Willie, "I know that, but I'm such a good boy for them to play with."



PLAINT OF A BOY.

I don't see why it's expected of boys,
To be just as quiet as mice,
When everything that's a-growin'
Don't sit still an' be so purcise!

The corn is always a wavin'
An' the oats across the way;
An' I know when I've bin a-fishin',
That the streams sing'all the day.

Fact everything keeps a movin',
An' a-makin' lots of noise,
An' the birds sing just as plain like,
"Come, have lots of fun, little boys!"

An' even the little boy sunbeams
That come from away up in the sky,
Always dance! An' they never get scolded
Or put in the corner to cry.

An' I don't see why it's 'spected of boys
To be just as quiet as mice,
When everything what's a-growin'
Don't sit still an' be so purcise!

BOB'S FRIEND JIM.

To many people the jiggiety-joggiety, jiggiety-jog night is as soporific in its effect as counting imaginary sheep jumping over imaginary fences, or saying one's prayers backward. The through express from Florida to New York had kept up this same steadily and rythmically for some hours. The occupants of the sleeper Oleomargarine were presumably soothed to slumber, when a sharp, childish treble broke in upon the cadenced jiggiety-joggiety, jiggiety-jog. It was a little boy's voice.

"Mamma," it cried; "mamma, Jim has escaped."

Silence. "Mamma, do you hear? Jim has got away." The big man in upper No. 6 stopped snoring and blinked his fat eyes. "Jim got away—" What's that? A vision of a thief danced before his waking consciousness. He put his hand hastily under his pillow and clutched his watch. Ah, Jim had left that, at all events.

"Mamma," the voice began again, "why don't you wake up? Jim has—"

"Shsh, dear," came in a gentle feminine tone, "if we talk, you know, we'll wake every one in the car, and people love to sleep when they're traveling at night."

"Let 'em schleeb, then," grunted a Hebrew from lower No. 7.

"You don't understand, mamma; it's Jim; he's escaped."

"Hush, Bob, go to sleep. You're dreaming. There isn't any Jim. Who's Jim?"

"Why, Jim's my great big alligator, mamma; that one who tried to bite me to-day. He's got out of the box and gone to take a walk in the car, and I'm afraid he can't find my berth again."

There was a wild chorus of "Jim," "Alligator escaped," and a concert of screams. Presto! the scene changed! The quiet car aisle, dimly lighted, hung with the long, flowing drapery we American travelers know so well, was suddenly alive with people. Upper No. 6 tumbled on to the very nose of the Hebrew—lower No. 7—and almost sat astride it in his excitement.

A mother and child in the classic attitude and clinging drapery of Niobe and her youngest posed motionless with terror. Further on a bewildered Adonis of a youth, in pink pajamas slid from his berth. A fair, fat, forty creature was calling in a pretty feminine way from one end of the car. Bob's mother, in her peignor, plunged into Bob's berth.

"Oh, Bob, Bob! not Jim! Don't say it is Jim. He's so fierce. Why couldn't it have been one of the others."

"One of the others!" shrieked the chorus again, changing positions.

"They're in the box, the others," said Bob's mother, addressing the entire car. "Don't be frightened, good people, pray don't; and I really think Jim must have gotten away by this time, he crawls so fast."

"Crawls so fast! oh-h-h!" shrieked a woman.

"Oh, porter, find him; find him!" screamed two girls together; "find the alligator," and the black porter, aided by the more intrepid men, looks under berths, opens travelling bags, feels in ladies' pockets and adds to the general pandemonium.

"Hush! there he is!" cried fair, fat and forty, pointing upward.

"Nonsense, ma'am," says the fat man. "They don't go up; they go down. Look in your shoes. They always go down. Snakes and lizards, and snakes and crawly critters generally."

The fat man was getting back into upper six. "Jim can't get up here, he said, "can he?"

"Oh, yes; they climb," cried ignorant Bob cheerfully.

"No, no, Bobby," pleaded his mother.

"Oh, alligators climb," cried the chorus.

"Crawl and climb," added the fair, fat and forty, hysterically.

"I have him!" called the Jew, excitedly. "Here he is" and he held up at arm's length the wee, struggling, straggling creature.

"Throw him out! throw him out!" called the women. "Throw him out! throw him out!" echoed the men.

"He's found!" shrieked Adonis into the left eye of the minister's spectacles. "He's found, the alligator's found, and he's nothing but a little bit of a thing."

"A little bit of a thing!" cried Bob excitedly. "Then it isn't Jim!"

"Oh, Bob," said his mother, desperately, but Bob was at the fat man's elbow. "No, that isn't Jim. That's—let me see his leg—yes, that's the lame one. He hurt his set fore leg this morning. That's only Joe."

"Joe," moaned the chorus, "only Joe. Who's Joe?"

"He's my lame alligator, I tell you," replied Bob, bravely. "I guess he got out of the box, too. I'm afraid they are all gone."

"Holy Moses!" ejaculated the Jew, and a French maid crossed herself.

"My darling," gushed Niobe, folding her child in the warm embrace of her large arms, "we must pray to God to protect us."

The time had come to take to one's religion.

"What's the matter?" cried Bob. "I tell you it isn't Jim."

"Hush, Bob!" whispered Bob's mother. "Don't mention Jim. Can't you see that it infuriates the mob."

"They're little critters," said the porter. "I'll get back into bed, ladies." "Yes, ladies, get back into bed. They're only little things," called out upper six. "Don't mind them."

People gradually began to get back into their berths, and Bob's mother crept into his with him to cheer him up, and to examine the sheets and corrieets to see that none of the alligator family was left.

"They have not caught Jim, anyway," whispered Bob. "My! weren't they mad? I thought they would lynch us, didn't you?"

"Hush, Bob, go to sleep." Jiggiety, joggiety, jiggiety-jog went the train, and sighs and screams gave way to snores and dreams again.

About an hour later a little voice called: "Look, mamma!" Bob's mother peered from her seat on the mountains, and there, coming down the aisle of the car like a vitalized curio from a Japaneses bazar was Jim, the alligator, His eyes glistened. His wet feet padded slowly along; the lamp light shone on his scaly back, as along the stately majesty he made his way down the car aisle. So his ancestors moved by the banks of the Ganges—centuries ago.

As he passed Bob's berth Bob made a dab at him and breathed, "Jim! Jim!" but a loud cough from upper six made the little boy and his mother both glance up. The fat man was regarding them. He wore a very savage look on his face; his finger was on his lips, and he was shaking his head ominously at Bob. So Jim, the alligator, went on his peaceful way.

The porter saw him and stood respectfully aside. Then the fat man began to laugh and to shake and to laugh again, till the tears came. When they did he leaned over and whispered most familiarly to Bob and his mother:

"I'm crying crocodile tears. Ha, ha, ha!"

"What's the matter?" called Niobe.

"Hush-sh-sh!" came from a dozen berths simultaneously. "Sh-sh!"

"Where do you suppose Jim is going?" breathed Bob into his mother's left ear.

"Hush, Bob!" said his mother. "We shall know, perhaps, in the morning."

But they never did know.

To Lift a Decanter by a Bent Straw.

An interesting trick is to lift a decanter half filled with water by a bent straw. This would seem impossible, but it is not. The decanter should have a narrow neck and wide and rather square "shoulder" part. The straw, which must be a good and whole one, about two and one-half feet long or two feet. This is to be bent upwards one-third of its length, or enough to bring it under the "shoulder" of the decanter, Doubled, it is pushed into the decanter, and then it spreads apart, leaving the long end outside and the short one inside. This end is lifted carefully and as it is it displaces the center of gravity which is brought directly under the point of suspension. It is easy for the performer to have two or three extra pieces of straw, to be sure to find one without crook or break.

Wouldn't Tell a Story.

A boy once applied for a situation.

"We don't like lazy boys here," said the manager. "Are you fond of work?"

"No, sir," responded the boy, looking the other in the face bravely.

"Oh, you're not, aren't you? Well, we want a boy that is."

"There ain't any," said the boy doggedly.

"Oh, yes; they climb," cried ignorant Bob cheerfully.

"No, no, Bobby," pleaded his mother.

"Oh, alligators climb," cried the chorus.

"Crawl and climb," added the fair, fat and forty, hysterically.

"I have him!" called the Jew, excitedly. "Here he is" and he held up at arm's length the wee, struggling, straggling creature.

"Throw him out! throw him out!" called the women. "Throw him out! throw him out!" echoed the men.

Two Sides of the Question.

PLANS FOR HOSPITAL ARE TOO COSTLY.

Board of Governors Decide They Cannot Raise $50,000

QUESTION AS TO LOCATION.

EXPECTED THAT NEW BUILDING WILL BE ON DIFFERENT SITE.

Committee and Architect Are Now at Work Modifying Plans to Meet the Needs of Plainfield for a Community Sick Room—Nothing Definite to Be Done Until After Summer Vacations.

The board of governors of the hospital held a regular meeting last Monday and business of a routine nature was considered. As many of the governors will be away during the coming two months it is not expected that another full meeting will be held until fall.

The building committee reported progress and stated that appointments had been made with the architect, but owing to his illness not much could be accomplished. The fact that the plans as originally drawn and displayed in the window of Armstrong's pharmacy called for an expenditure of $50,000 or $60,000, has led the governors to modify them greatly. The plans were too expensive, and other plans more in accord with the situation of Plainfield and its needs will be drafted.

The committee and the architect are now at work modifying plans to meet the needs of Plainfield, but during the coming summer months not much work will be done, but the committee will still keep at work.

Regarding the location of the new hospital buildings there is a great difference of opinion, which shows that the people can reasonably expect that there will be a change from the present place. There are many disadvantages where the hospital is now located, and many strong arguments are advanced for a change.

The monthly report of the medical director, Dr. M. B. Long, was received. It was in substance as follows: Patients in hospital at last report, 16; number admitted, 15; number discharged cured, 15; discharged improved, 5; discharged not improved, 1; deaths, 0; total number treated, 31; number remaining, 12; dispensary patients, 41; visits, 122.

MARINES COMING, TOO.

JUNIORS TO ENTERTAIN MEN FROM THE CRUISER BROOKLYN.

Franklin Council Has Also Made Arrangements to Care for 1,500 Lodge Brothers on the Fourth of July.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., is endeavoring to outstrip all other organizations of this city in the celebration of Independence Day. They expect and have prepared to entertain 1,500 visiting Juniors. During the past two weeks a committee of this Council have been constructing a float planned by a well-known decoration artist, which for size, originality of idea and completeness of detail will probably be unequalled.

As an additional feature this Council expects to have with them on July 4th a body of marienes and sailors from the first-class cruiser "Brooklyn," which was the flag ship of Admiral Schley during the late war.

The marines and sailors who will be the guests of Franklin Council served during the late war and participated in the naval engagement at Santiago.

The Council hope that the people of this city will accord to this body of men the welcome due to them for their brave and honorable services to this country in its time of need.

NEW ELECTRIC CONDUITS.

Patay Christmas Secures the Contract for Doing the Work.

Patay Christmas, the contractor who is putting in the storm sewer, Monday made a contract with the Plainfield Electric Light Company to construct the new conduit which that company is to lay through various streets of the city, including Watchung avenue, Front street, North and Park avenues, Madison avenue and Second street. The work will be commenced on or about the first of July, or as soon as possible after the big sewer job is finished. The contract calls for the construction of nine manholes and seventeen service boxes. About 75 men will be put to work.

Patriotic Celebration.

The eleventh annual celebration of Independence Day by the Washington Camp Ground Association will be held the afternoon of the Fourth of July in the grove of the reservation belonging to the association, near Bound Brook, where Washington's army was encamped, while the General himself had headquarters at the Wallace house in Somerville. A band concert will be given from 2 until 3 o'clock, after which the patriotic exercises will be held, including an oration by Howard MacSherry, Esq., of New Brunswick. The public in general is cordially invited to attend this patriotic celebration.

A BRAVE OFFICER KILLED

Charged Up San Juan Hill Leading His Men and Met Death.

BURIED WHERE HE FELL

Lay on Furthest Spanish Trench. Killed by a Wounded Spaniard Whom He Would Have Saved.

Lieutenant Gaesche Ord First Furnished the Generals on San Juan Creek Definite Information Concerning Location of the Enemy—A Brother Losing a Hero Dead—Bravest of the Brave.

A great round moon rose slowly over the treetops and cast soft, long shadows over that seeming solitude of death. I climbed the hill of San Juan sad and heavy hearted, to look for the body of my "bunkie," Lieutenant Garesche Ord. For seven weeks we had lived in the same tent in Tampa, and for over a week had shared the hardships and fatigue of the Cuban campaign together. On the morning of the last day of his life he came to me in the creek bottom of San Juan River, as the men of General Hawkins' brigade were marching through to go into action, and with a laughing laugh, begotten of the excitement and the martial spirit which imbued him, he slapped me on the back and said, in a strange whisper, "Dunkel, old man, I'll come out of this either a Colonel or a corpse!" I shook hands with him and wished him good luck, and, as he left me, called after him, "Be careful, Garry."

Poor Garry! I found him that night, lying in the white, pure moonlight, fast asleep, with his head pillowed on his arm, and I imagined, as I patted his face in a fond farewell, that the same old boyish smile rested there. He lay on the furthest Spanish trench of the San Juan hill, dead, killed by the hand of a wounded Spanish soldier in the trench. It seems that Ord was many yards ahead of the line of his regiment charge up the hill, and that as he stood on the edge of the trench he turned and shouted to the men that followed, "Don't shoot the wounded men. Make them prisoners," and at the same instant he fell by a pistol shot from the hands of the very man whose life he attempted to save.

Too high a tribute cannot be paid to this gallant fellow—there were many that day who deserved as much. He knew no fear. His highest aim in life was to support a widowed sister—widowed by the loss of her soldier husband at Wounded Knee—and to emulate the historic military career of his famous father, General Ord.

It was Ord who furnished the Generals who stood in San Juan Creek with the first definite information as to the position of the enemy in front of them. He climbed a high tree and reported to General Hawkins from this lookout point the location of the fort, the direction of the trenches, and the apparent force of the enemy. During this entire time he was under fire from the sharpshooters, but gave no evidence of the slightest trepidation.

It is related that Ord climbed two trees in succession, and on being asked to the left, where Hawkins' brigade was forcing its way to final charge, reporting each time valuable information. Ord's bravery is one which never will be forgotten by those who witnessed it, was the leading in the charge of a handful of the Sixteenth Infantrymen to the top of the hill. General Hawkins gave him permission to organize and get in possession for the night, desperate assault some bodies of soldiers on the right who had become confused by their devious windings in the underbrush. He was next seen after the regiment had "reformed" far in advance of the line, waving his men on in the charge. It was the unanimous opinion of officers and soldiers alike that Ord's name, as hero unquestionably belongs the honor of first scaling the intrenchments of San Juan. He lies buried on the hilltop, under two waving palms, wrapped in a blanket—the soldier's coffin—promoted in the hearts of those who loved him to a rank far higher than the colonelcy he coveted—to the rank of a hero born, a hero dead.—Truth.

Got a Commission After All.

One enthusiastic guardsman in New York was holding a commission as a surgeon before the troops were ordered to camp. It was discovered when his command was ordered out that a surgeon was not called for and consequently he couldn't go as a commissioned officer. He didn't hesitate, but promptly enlisted as a private. His company went into camp and the physician pitched in and did duty as a private without any vain regrets for the commission that he had once held.

In this camp it was discovered one morning that an assistant surgeon was needed for one of the regiments. Thus far whenever a man of any profession or trade had been wanted the commanding officers had found him serving in some capacity in the Guard. So several officers started out to see if a physician could be found to act as assistant surgeon of Ord's regiment. As they walked down the company streets one of them stopped, and pointing to a man in a ragged, dirty blouse, who was digging a trench around his tent, said:

"Well, this is funny! There is Dr. So-and-So dressed up as a private. Hello! Doctor, what are you doing here?"

"Digging," was the laconic response.

"But you are masquerading as a private."

"No masquerade about it," said the physician; "I am a private. I couldn't come any other way and I enlisted as a private two weeks ago. Now I'm here."

The physician then explained how he had lost the opportunity of being mustered in as a commissioned officer and why he had enlisted. There was no question as to his ability and a commission as assistant surgeon was promptly offered to him and accepted.

"That," said the officer, who tells the story, "is a fair sample of the temper of the guardsmen who volunteered."

MODES OF TRAVEL IN CUBA

Difficulties Encountered By Strangers in Going About the Island.

ITS LIMITED FACILITIES.

Accommodations Fair But First-Class Travel Costs Seven to Eight Cents in Gold Per Mile.

The Trains Are Slow, Everybody Smokes, and the Cars Are Crowded With Baggage —The Hen That Paid Its Fare in Eggs—Decadence of the Cuban Volante—Grasping Hackmen.

Getting about over the island is something that puzzles most of the visitors to Cuba, writes Charles M. Pepper in the Globe-Democrat. Many of them come with queer notions regarding the means and modes of travel. Since more are coming a little information on these points may be timely.

It is possible to go from Havana on the railroad directly west to the town of Pinar del Rio, a distance of 110 miles. A railroad also runs from Havana to Guanjay, thirty-five miles out in the northeastern part of Pinar del Rio province. These two railway lines traverse the Vuelta Abajo tobacco region, also the richest portion of the Partidos district, which is in the province of Havana. Coasting vessels make voyages from the city along the north coast, touching at eight or ten outlying villages. From these villages journeys may be made to the hills of the interior on horseback. Sometimes there is a sailing craft that will coast leisurely a short one. On the south coast of Pinar del Rio there is nothing to see except keys and swamps. The only harbor which is entered by light draught vessels is Coloma. From it a very good macadamized highway traverses the fifteen miles to the town of Pinar del Rio.

Railroad travel in Cuba is not luxurious, yet considering that the distances are short it is fairly comfortable. Fare continues very high, averaging 7 cents or 8 cents a mile in gold, first-class, and half as much for third-class, with the second-class mid-way. Americans naturally prefer to travel first-class. The passenger coaches on some of the lines are relics of bygone periods. On others they are modern and adapted to the climate. Everybody smokes without first asking permission of the women who may be passengers. It is a custom of the country and a smoking compartment would not be appreciated. Everybody piles his baggage in the spaces between the seats or in the aisles. Often the regular passenger coach might be mistaken for the baggage car. The reason is that baggage is not checked free. The charges for carrying are quite heavy. No limitation is put on the number of pieces which a passenger is permitted to carry with him in a passenger coach. So he stows away all his belongings, and sometimes perches himself on top of half a dozen valises and telescopes. Live baggage is also permitted. Chickens travel either first-, second or third-class without paying fare. Generally a pair of them is tied together by the legs and thrown carelessly under the seat. Sometimes they get free from their fastenings. The story of the hen which paid its fare in eggs is not a fiction in Cuba. That has been known to happen.

The Cubans and the Spanish residents who talk of the old times mourn the decadence of the quitrins and volantes. They say that these were indigenous carriages, constructed before the age of railways, and holding their own long after the railways came. Twenty-five or thirty years ago the victorias and cabs and coaches of various kinds began to supplant them in the cities. Nevertheless, it probably will be a long time before they disappear from the country entirely, because it will be a long time until Cuba is traversed in all parts by good roads. Except on horseback there is no other means of traveling in the interior of the island. On all the sugar plantations there are volantes stowed away somewhere, and every Cuban family which has a country home possesses one. Some of them are very aged vehicles, yet they do not long after the railway

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

REMONSTRANCE HEADS THE APPLICATION

Opposition to Arlington Avenue Trolley Extension.

HEARING FOR JULY 20TH.

MARTIN ACT COMMISSIONERS' BILLS WERE LAID OVER.

Charges Made Against a Paid Call Fireman for Using Obscene Language While on Duty—City Judge Wants a Better Station House—Steps Towards the City Owning Its Water Works.

A considerable amount of important business was transacted at the regular meeting of the Common Council Monday evening. In the absence of President Andrews, Councilman Smith filled the position. A protest from Eliza Kenyon and other property owners on Arlington avenue asked the Council to refuse to grant a franchise for a trolley on that avenue. Following this protest a petition was received from the Plainfield Street Railway asking for a franchise to operate and locate a trolley on Arlington avenue from Fourth street to the city line according to the route already mentioned. The Council set Thursday evening, July 20th, as the time when the petition would be considered, also that of the objectors.

J. P. Taylor and F. W. Dunn petioned the Council for permission to remove the frame awning from in front of the building at the corner of Park and North avenues, and replace it with a galvanized awning instead. The petition was granted. W. R. Richards and others asked the Council for more police protection in the east end of the city. Secretary Robert M. Clark, of the Fourth of July Committee, asked the Council for a subscription for the celebration, and $100 was given towards the cause.

Thomas Currin complained about assessment for taxes on the property located at 518 East Second street, and that the taxes were paid and there seems to be a double assessment. He asked the Council to refer the matter to the proper committee and have the matter adjusted properly.

Henry Duzenbury, of Hillside avenue, also complained about the assessment of $54.51 taxes on a piece of property owned by him. He claimed that the taxes were paid and there appears to be a duplicate assessment This matter was referred as well as the other complaint.

Alonzo Aldrich and other residents in the West End asked for a fire hydrant on Sherman avenue near Grant avenue, and the same was granted.

C. H. Hand, in a communication, preferred charges against John Cose, one of the fire department call men, for using obscene language and acting in a disorderly manner on June 27th, at the fire in the rear of George Kirch's store on Liberty street. The matter was referred to the fire and building committee.

The bills of the Martin Act Commissioners were received and there seemed to be some misunderstanding regarding the payment of the same. The bills showed no signs of approval by the Court. In a communication Corporation Counsel Marsh stated that the bill of Frank J. Hubard, as clerk of the commissioners, for $850, needed the approval of the court, while it was not necessary for the other bills to be so approved. After much discussion it was decided to lay the matter over till the next meeting.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company reported the location of five hydrants as ordered, making in all 282, and in this connection Mr. Coriell stated that the company had located hydrants to please themselves and not as ordered and directed. He had therefore called a halt and the company is now locating hydrants as directed. Mr. Buckle stated that the company had informed him that they would make any mistakes right.

Frank Lake, as manager for the Eastern Bottling Association, petitioned the Council for a license to bottle liquors, and the same was granted.

The report of City Judge Runyon was received. It showed that during the quarter 102 cases had been treated, and $85 had been received in fines. The sum of $17.01 was disbursed, and a balance of $55.49 was reported. Mr. Runyon also reported on the condition of the city jail and urged the Council to take some steps toward securing better quarters. He cited the fact that the Board of Health had condemned the building and thought the Council should not continue to violate the health ordinances.

In connection with the above Mr.

PATRIOTISM AT THE INN.

An Address Delivered by a Lineal Descendant of the Late President John Quincy Adams—Original Poem.

The celebration of Independence Day at the Mountain Park Inn was of a particularly patriotic nature. The guests at the hotel and a number of invited guests from this city, numbering two hundred in all, assembled in the parlors at 11 o'clock. Mrs. Ambrose Reeves, the proprietress, and her daughter, Mrs. George M. Babcock, received during the day.

John Quincy Adams, a lineal descendant of the President of that name, delivered address appropriate to the occasion. Mrs. Flora Adams Darling, president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, read a patriotic poem of her own composition. She also presented to Mrs. Reeves a picture of the making of the first American flag in behalf of the Betsy Ross Memorial Association.

There were six of the regents of the Daughters of the American Revolution present, who were Mrs. Breckenbridge, of Texas; Mrs. Hollingsworth, of Kansas; Mrs. Charles C. Neighbor, of New York; Mrs. Wilson W. Smith, of Plainfield, and Mrs. Leroy Sunderlin Smith, of New York, the first historian of the Daughters of the American Revolution and regent of the Betsy Ross Chapter. They all spoke briefly.

There was also a baritone solo by Ambrose Reeves, and a short address by him on the relations of America and England. Miss Maud Reeves sang, Miss Helen Berger gave a whistling solo and Louis C. Whiton read the Declaration of Independence. The prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. The exercises were followed by the serving of refreshments.

GAMES AT WESTFIELD.

Celebration in That Place Was of an Athletic Turn.

Westfield, July 5.—The Fourth of July was celebrated at this place in a way long to be remembered by the people of Westfield. It is estimated that there were 2 000 visitors in town during the day. The principal event of the day was the fifteen-mile handicap bicycle road race. The race was run under L. A. W. rules. Charles Embleton, of this place, was the winner. His handicap was 1:30; corrected time, 46:50. Embleton captured first prize, a $75 special racing wheel, and second time prize, another $75 racing wheel. Stewart Roberts, of Jersey City, got second place, handicap, 1:30; corrected time, 47:03; C. Hummer, Plainfield, third, handicap 3:00; corrected time, 47:45. William Embleton, brother of the winner, secured fourth place, handicap 3:00; corrected time, 48:50.

The events under the direction of the I. O. S. and S. O. H. took place on Broad street at eight o'clock in the morning. The 100-yard dash was won C. E. Mitchell; time 12 seconds. Octavious Knight, second; Edgar Fosterthird. The three legged race was won by Joseph Deinaro and Chester Moffett. The 220-yard handicap running race was won by Octavious Knight. The half-mile bicycle race, for boys under 17 years, was won by Charles Embleton. The one-mile handicap bicycle road race was won by Charles Embleton.

BANNER FOR THE JUNIORS.

Presented to Franklin Council by Crew of U. S. Cruiser Brooklyn.

The handsome banner which was carried by the crew from the U. S. Cruiser Brooklyn was presented to Franklin Council, Junior O. U. A. M. after the parade. The presentation was made at Washington Hall by Chief Gunner's Mate Doneiy. The gift was accepted by Vice Councilor Robt. M. Clark, who in a cleverly worded speech, thanked the Brooklyn boys for the courtesy. After the dinner an informal entertainment was given for benefit of the visitors, which included a slack wire performance and musical selections.

A Coming Marriage.

Announcement is made of the approaching marriage of Rush Rhees, a professor at the college at Newton Centre, Mass., and Miss Harriet Seelye, daughter of Dr. Seelye, president of Smith College. The wedding will take place Thursday evening of next week at 6 o'clock, at Northhampton, Mass., the home of the bride.

Big Money for Street Railway.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company's receipts Tuesday were the largest in the history of the company for one day. They were favored with good weather, and the cars all day and in the evening were crowded to their fullest extent.

GLORIOUS DAY FOR THE FOURTH.

Celebration in Plainfield Went Off in Gala Form.

GOOD TIME FOR EVERYBODY.

BUT FEW ACCIDENTS MAR ITS DAY'S PLEASURE.

Naval Reserves and Men-o'-wars-men Accorded a Great Ovation by the Patriotic Multitude—Parade Was a Big Affair—Excellent Address by Dr. A. M. Lewis—Fireworks in the Evening.

Patriotic enthusiasm was displayed throughout the world in more places Tuesday than ever before. Not only in all the States and Territories on this continent, but in Cuba, in Porto Rico, in Hawaii, in the Ladrones and in the Philippines was the National holiday celebrated this year.

It is the most memorable July the country has known since its creation and this year gave us the first opportunity to celebrate the great events which have so recently crowned the Nation's history.

And then, too, yesterday was Uncle Sam's one hundred and twenty-third birthday. This fact is the more interesting when it is taken into consideration that today the Stars and Stripe float over vast possessions upon which the sun never sets, a proud boast that a year ago could only be made by one English cousins.

It may be that a knowledge of this fact is what inspired citizens everywhere and imbued them with a spirit of patriotism that awoke them to the realization of what independence means.

While other cities and towns were observing the day Plainfield was not a whit less patriotic and had planned a monster celebration.

All nature smiled upon their efforts. Old Sol was up with the small boy and scattered his hot rays promiscuously about. Although the weather was warm, still a slight breeze prevailed in the forenoon and for a hot day it was as comfortable as could be expected.

The day was ushered in with the usual noise so characteristic of other Fourth of July celebrations. The small boy was out early; in fact many of the youth of the city and some also who had seen half a hundred Independence days, were up all night. To say that the eagle screamed is putting it mildly. Young America was bubbling over with enthusiasm and he gave full vent to his feelings.

It was not, however, until midnight that the celebration began in earnest. The staid citizen who had got to bed early with the expectation of catching a few hours' sleep before daylight, was woefully disappointed in his calculations.

With the first sounding of the fire-alarm whistle everyone was wide awake. For several moments the heavy tones of the whistle filled the midnight air, its vibrations finally echoing against the Watchung mountains, as did also the sound of the borough fire bell.

Following closely upon the whistle came the booming of cannon, intermingled with the sharp cracks of the thousands of fire crackers that were being exploded all over town, with a refrain from the church bells, that seemed to say, "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

The noise was deafening and those who tried to sleep finally gave it up and many of them arose and consoled themselves by looking from chamber windows, while recollections of younger days coursed through their minds.

At sunrise Capt. McDonald paid homage to the natal day by firing a salute of 18 guns. Before the salute had been finished the sun was well up, smiling approval upon the beginning of the day's demonstration.

The sun was high in the heavens before the small boys' enthusiasm had spent its force and exhausted pater families found a couple of hours' repose previous to engaging in the more important events of the day's celebration.

As early as 8 o'clock the streets of the city began to fill and by 8:45 o'clock, when the men-o'-warsmen from the United States Cruiser Brooklyn reached town and marched from the North avenue station to their headquarters on Park avenue, where they were the guests of Franklin Council No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., the streets were jammed with people.

Every train on the Central east and west and all trolley lines brought hundreds of visitors to town. They came from as far east as Newark and as far west as Phillipsburg, Pa., while the trolley cars from Scotch Plains and those running from New Brunswick, Bound Brook, Dunellen and other places kept rolling into town all morning and depositing load after load of human freight. By the time the parade started there were more people in Plainfield than have been here since the celebration of 1895.

The feature of the morning was the monster parade. Although as regards the number of organizations in line it was not as large as that of four years ago. However, it was fully as imposing and possessed some features much more interesting.

It was nearly 11 o'clock when the parade hove in sight, coming up Park avenue. The balcony of the Revere House was used as a reviewing stand and it was there that Mayor Rockfellow, of this city, and Mayor Smalley, of the borough, together with the councilmen, members of the general committee and invited guests witnessed the column pass.

As the paraders swept into view the sight was an imposing one. First came the bicycle squad of police with Marshal Campbell of the borough at the lead, followed closely by a platoon of eight police on foot in command of stalwart Sergeant Kiely, who courteously acknowledged the generous applause given his command. Plainfield's "finest" made a good impression and presented a soldierly bearing.

At the head of the first division appeared Marshal Smith, his mount being a handsome sorrel and he sat his horse like the veterans he is.

Preceding the Naval Reserves was the Queen City Band playing an inspiring patriotic air.

It was the Reserves—the pride of the State National Guard—who were first to receive the applause of any moment from those on the reviewing stand. They were in command of Captain Irving. As they filed by the Revere House, arms apport, they were greeted with an outburst of applause that evinced the interest which is taken in them. Capt. Irving gracefully acknowledged the compliment by bringing his sword to a present. The Reserves are certainly a splendid body of men and presented a fine appearance.

The High School Cadets, Capt. Geo. F. Edwards, shared the honors with the Reserves, however. Clad in their natty gray jackets and white duck trousers they presented a neat appearance. They marched by with an elastic step and the various platoons kept their distances admirably.

Following the cadets marched Crescent Company, Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias. Their showy uniforms and attractive helmets with red plumes, gave a picturesque aspect to this division that caused expressions of admiration from those on the reviewing stand, and they also came in for a generous share of applause.

Miantonomo Tribe of Red Men was next. Some of the chiefs of the tribe were in full uniform, while in a float made to represent a canoe were seated a number of big braves. To the applause that greeted them the Red Men gave forth a series of war whoops and grunts, characteristic of their native forefathers.

Preceding Franklin Council, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, which headed the second division, came Lawrence Fahn, dressed to personate Uncle Sam. He and the Juniors were enthusiastically received by those on the stand as well as by the crowd which lined the sidewalk on either side of the street.

But to the men-o'-warsmen from the the U. S. Cruiser Brooklyn, in command of Lieut. Steven F. Doneiy, were given the most enthusiastic and uproarious applause of any of the organizations. When it was noticed that they bore aloft a banner containing a portrait of Commodore Schley and the words, "Santiago, July 3, 1898," a shout went up that fairly shook the balcony from its foundation. Both Mayors and the members of the Councils waved their hats and shouted while the lady members of the party shook their handkerchiefs and applauded vigorously. The applause was taken up by those on the sidewalk and for several minutes the cheers and plaudits of the crowd fairly drowned the music of the drum corps. The greeting was as vociferous as it was spasmodic and heartfelt, giving evidence to all who witnessed the inspiring scene that Uncle Sam's fighting tars have a warm spot in the affections of thesecitizens of Plainfield.

The Brooklyn crew—more than sixty of them—drew a handsome float which the Juniors had designed to represent the many possessions of which the Nation can now boast. It was in the form of a large-sized globe, while standing at the four corners—north, south, east and west—were the representatives of Uncle Sam's fighting forces—the soldier and the sailor. Crowning all was a young

THREE FIRE ALARMS DURING THE DAY.

Sailors and Naval Reserves Assisted at One.

PRAY'S BARN DESTROYED.

FIRE AT HOLMES' COAL YARD MADE MUCH EXCITEMENT.

Department First Turned Out at Request of the Police to Extinguish Dangerous Box Fire on North Avenue—Then Came a False Alarm—Holmes' Yard Started in Afternoon—Also Barn on Rahway Road.

Three regular alarms and one still alarm marked the share of the Plainfield fire department in the Fourth of July celebration Tuesday. On one occasion the department found a host of sailors from the U. S. S. Brooklyn and the New Jersey Naval Reserves as active assistants.

At 11 o'clock Monday night Assistant Chief Jennings and No. 2 hose wagon responded to a call from the police to extinguish a high box fire on North avenue which was thought to endanger neighboring property.

Ed Doolv, of East Fourth street, sent in an alarm from box 21 at 1:06 Tuesday morning. He said he heard someone shouting fire. No fire could be found and the department returned.

The wooden covers to the coal trestle at E. H. Holmes' coal yard on Madison avenue caught fire early in the afternoon from a spark from a locomotive or fire cracker. The firemen at the power house opposite sent in an alarm from box 41 at 1:53 o'clock. A great crowd of sailors from the U. S. Brooklyn and some of the Naval Reserves caught the apparatus on the way to the fire. A number of others ran to the scene. They went up the walls liked monkeys without waiting for ladders and aided the firemen in removing the covers and laying in the lines of hose. The sailors thought it great fun and entered into the work with much zest. The fire was easily extinguished with but slight loss.

A spark set fire to some fireworks stored between the blind and window sash at the residence of R. B. Rogers, of Westervelt avenue, Tuesday morning. The fireworks exploded, setting fire to the woodwork. The flames were extinguished with several buckets of water.

The most disastrous fire of Tuesday was that on Rahway road in the afternoon about 5:30 o'clock, when the large barn and outbuildings owned by E. E. Pray were completely destroyed.

Charles Smith, of South avenue, was about the first to discover the fire and he hastened to the scene, when he reached Watchung and Woodland avenues, where Box 29 is located. He found the keyhole stopped up with fire-crackers, and it took several minutes to remove the stoppage. Although the barn and other outbuildings were practically destroyed by the time the department arrived they were able to protect nearby property. No one seems able to explain the cause of the fire. There is a rumor that some boys were shooting off firecrackers, and were making use of a knothole in the barn. This cannot be proven, however. There was a great deal of stuff in the barn not covered by insurance, although there was a partial insurance on the barn. The fire and excitement caused Mrs. Pray to have nervous prosernation, but her condition is not considered serious. Her boy was also greatly excited. Mr. Pray intends to build again at once.

The farmhouse of Abram Smalley, at West Dunellen, was set on fire by firecrackers Tuesday afternoon and totally destroyed, together with the contents. The loss is about $2,000.

To Put Up a Fine Residence.

J. B. Mills has purchased of Mr. Kenyon, of Raritan, the Ulrich property on South avenue, near Nethergood station. The plot of ground is 180 feet front by 200 feet deep. Mr. Mills will build a handsome up to-date house on part of the property to cost at least $5,000, and the balance of the tract he will cut up into lots to suit purchasers.

Mr. Cooper to Start in Well.

George W Cooper took possession of the Somerville postoffice Saturday. Mr. Clark has succeeded in securing an allowance for another clerk, at a salary of $500 per year. This raises the amount allowed for clerk hire from $1,100 to $1,600. This is a nice little present for Mr. Cooper.

Mr. Martine to Orate.

J. E. Martine will speak at the farmers' reunion to be held at Belvidere, this State, August 24th.

W. M. Smith, of Elmwood place, spent Monday with his sister at Orange.

ACCIDENTS OF THE DAY.

MANY SMALL BURNS AND WOUNDS, BUT NONE SERIOUS.

One Boy Loses Some Fingers by Explosion of Cannon Firecracker in His Hand—Revolver Handled Carelessly, Too.

The usual number of Fourth of July accidents are recorded, but fortunately this year there are no serious ones. The following minor accidents occurred:

Among the first accidents reported in connection with the celebration Tuesday was that of Whitfield Frazee, of South avenue. He was discharging a revolver and was using bullets. Accidently the pistol went off and a bullet went through his hand. Dr. Long was called and properly dressed the wound.

Walter Southard, nine years of age, was playing with cannon firecrackers Tuesday morning when one accidentally went off before he was ready for it. One hand suffered greatly from the explosion, as only one finger was left on that member. He was taken to the hospital and had the hand attended to. He will have little use for it when the injury heals.

Last Tuesday a young boy, whose name could not be learned, ran into a cycler while riding his wheel on Front street in front of Randolph's drug store. He was thrown some distance and at first he was thought to be seriously injured. He was taken into Randolph's drug store by Peter B. Hodge, one of the clerks, and after examination he was found to be suffering from sprains, bruises and shock. He was soon able to go home.

A girl named Clark, about nine years old, daughter of Mr. Clark, engineer at the pumping station of the Middlesex Water Company at New Brooklyn, had one of her hands quite severely burned by firecrackers.

May Pruden, the little daughter of Albert Pruden, of East Second street, examined a lighted fire cracker at short range Tuesday. The explosion badly burned her eyes. Dr. Clawson dressed the injuries.

The young son of Charles H. Hand, of Woodland avenue, made too close an acquaintanceship with a fire cracker. His hands were burned.

Whitney Frazee, of South avenue, was cleaning his revolver Monday night. The revolver was loaded. One bullet blew a hole through Frazee's hand, breaking several bones.

A lad named Barkelow, living on Webster place, was shooting a muzzle loading cannon. He thought the gun had been fired and started to investigate. The cannon went off in his face. He will probably loose the sight of one eye.

Neal Compton, Jr., of West Front street, was shooting blank cartridges in a revolver. The revolver happened to be in close proximity to the face of Harold Vanderhoof, of West Front street. Vanderhoof's face was badly burned on the right side. Dr. Boone dressed the wound.

Mrs. Sharkey, of Lincoln place, had need of Dr. Buckley's services Tuesday morning, for accidentally a pistol went off in her hands and sprinkled her face with powder.

A young woman named Polore was treated by Dr. Tomlinson Tuesday for powder in the face and eyes, the result of an explosion. A lad named Nischwitz, of Manning avenue, had his thumb badly injured while playing with a revolver, loaded with a blank cartridge. Dr. Tomlinson attended to his case also.

Rowland Buckingham, the young son of Mayor Rockfellow, of Park avenue, shot himself in the hand with a blank cartridge Monday afternoon. A painful flesh wound resulted.

Historical Trophies.

The United States flags used in Porto Rico, together with three of the captured flags from Porto Rico, were displayed Tuesday from the offices of the Special Commission to Porto Rico, 124 Watchung avenue. In years to come such trophies, as flags actually at the front and those once belonging to the enemy, will be sought for by cities as they now urgently solicit a single cannon, or other large trophy, for their public places.

Mrs. O'Sullivan to be Buried Here.

The funeral service of the late Mrs. Sylvester J. O'Sullivan were held yesterday at 11 o'clock at St. Francis Xavier church, West Sixteenth street, New York, and Rev. Father Denny officiated. The attendance of sorrowing friends was very large. After the service the remains were brought to this city where they were placed in the receiving vault at Hillside cemetery. They will be interred in a few days.

Quiet in the Borough.

Not an arrest nor a case of disorderly conduct was reported in the borough Tuesday.

Alvah Carey, of New York, is visiting Plainfield relatives and friends.

GOLF AND SOCIETY AT PARK CLUB LINKS.

Independence Day Well Observed by Club.

LARGE ATTENDANCE THERE.

PLAY FOR FOURTH OF JULY CUP IN AFTERNOON.

Fred P. Taylor Won it by Good Play—Hillside Men Made a Very Poor Showing—Links Were Rather Dry But Very Fast—Concert and Tea Held During Afternoon—Dance at Night.

This year it was the turn of the Park Golf Club to entertain those who usually flock to the Park Club for entertainment on the Fourth. The Golf Club did it and right royally, too. A tournament, a concert and a tea served to display the charming clubhouse and the excellent links at their best.

There was nothing particular scheduled for the morning. The course was crowded, however, with enthusiastic golfers from the Park and Hillside Clubs, the latter of whom wanted to try a round before playing there in a tournament.

The course was dry, rather too much so for the good of the greens, but very fast. The putting greens were in good shape and ready for low scores. It was rather hot for exact comfort, but a cooling breeze occasionally drifted over the fields, but not with force enough to seriously disturb the drives.

The tournament began at 1:30 o'clock and opened the programme for the afternoon. There were nearly forty entries of whom thirty turned up. Frank Reinhart, of the Hillside Club, who was placed at scratch, failed to appear. It was a men's handicap competition for the Fourth of July cup, eighteen holes, medal play.

The contestants were sent out in pairs as soon as they arrived, G. W. Fraze and W. L. Glenny being the first pair to start. G. W. Cooley who had a handicap of 20, led the first round in 88, which promised some things exciting. Morgan T. Townsend reported 46 for his first nine holes. Both were considered strong candidates for honors if they continued the game they were playing.

Fred P. Taylor was home from Belmar and proved he had not forgotten the game by making the first round in 43, the course record. It was expected that the Hillside players would carry everything before them in the tournament. They were apparently lost, however. Henry Ryder never finished. Neither did A. R. Fisk. Glenny did well, making the eighteen holes in 98. Wadsworth showed poor form and only made 103.

When the Park players began to come in on their second round, it was found that Cooley had fallen off a little in his playing, making the second 54, a total of 105. His best score was 85. Townsend fell off slightly but did well enough to win out from Cooley by one stroke. Then Tayley came in and his card showed him 48 for the second and a net score of 93, just one better than Townsend.

J. T. Scott was low man among the older players, finishing fourth. Glenny came next and was the first of the Hillside delegation. His gross score of 96 was second best, Taylor making the best gross and net scores. There was in fact but one match between Assemblyman Roger F. Murray and Meredith Dryden. The Republican statesman proved himself the better player, but by a very small margin.

From 9 until after 6 o'clock Issler's orchestra from Newark rendered selections at frequent intervals. The music was good and the scene at the clubhouse made it even more enjoyable. The members, their families and friends turned out in force, the women in light summer gowns and the men in bright red coats and golf or duck trousers.

The scores in the tournament were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Fred P. Taylor	97	9	93
Morgan T. Townsend	100	16	84
G. Fred. W. Cooley	105	20	85
G. W. Fraze	117	36	81
W. L. Glenny	98	2	96
G. W. Fisher	108	3	97
G. W. Fraze	101	3	98
J. T. Scott	110	12	98
W. L. Boone, Jr.	106	6	100
W. J. Boone, Jr.	134	34	100
Frank Tomlinson	122	22	100
Parker Mason	107	6	101
Frank Wadsworth	103	1	102
Townsend Bushmore	121	18	103
W. W. Barney	121	18	103
F. W. Dunn	135	32	103
Dr. Endicott	131	24	107
W. H. Dunn	131	24	107
H. D. Hibbard	133	24	109
W. J. R. Thier	126	16	110

LONG DISTANCE TALKING.

The Latest Development of Telegraphy Sending Messages Through the Air.

WIRES NOT NECESSARY

M. Ducretet, the French Expert, Despatches and Receives Communications a Distance of 13 Miles.

Wireless Telegraphy Makes Enormous Strides in Europe—Professor Marconi the Most Successful of Many Experimenters, Only 25 Years Old—Began Work in Italy and Has Now Gone to England.

M. Ducretet can now send wireless telegraph messages a distance of thirteen miles. He is the inventor whose researches in aerial telegraphy have received the encouragement of the French Government ever since the remarkable success of Marconi in England.

U. S. Consul General Gowdy had received instructions from Washington to keep the Government informed of French progress in this important branch of invention, and he applied to M. Ducretet for a summary of his discoveries. In reply, the electrician communicated the above—adding that his messages are dispatched and received at the summits of masts 99 feet high. He says that he has accomplished, in the face of great difficulties, the automatic registration of messengers.

Wireless telegraphy made enormous strides last year in Europe. Although it has been experimented with in this country with more or less success, it is doubtful if many Americans realize that a system covering a distance of twelve miles has been in practical operation off the English coast all Winter.

This is between the South Foreland lighthouse and the East Goodwin lightship. The use of Marconi's system messages are flashed continually from ship to shore and vice versa without the aid of wire. In this way many thousands of valuable property have been saved, since it has been possible for the men tossed in the lightship to communicate to those on shore the plight of vessels that have ventured to close to that graveyard of good ships, the Goodwin Sands. This was notably the case several months ago when the large ship Elbe went aground.

Professor Marconi, the most successful of the many experimenters who have worked on this problem along identical principles, is only twenty-five years old, and his researches have already won him success. He began the work in Italy, his native country, and the Italian Government hastened to pay him a handsome price for his invention for use on war ships. Then the young professor went to England, where he was received with open arms. The lighthouse lightship equipment is one of the results of his sojourn in England.

Confident that he could transmit messages for a much greater distance than twelve miles, Marconi proposed to establish communication of this kind between the English and French coasts. The project met with unexpected favor for a long time withheld its consent from any such enterprise. Viewing the progress of wireless telegraphy in England and Italy, however, and the fact that the German Emperor was dabbling in it for the benefit of his army and navy, the French Government at length withdrew its opposition to the trans-Channel system, which Marconi is now working at, and at the same time gave its assistance and support to a native inventor, M. Ducretet, who had been working along the same lines without much encouragement.

On top of the tall building in Paris where M. Ducretet had his laboratory is reared a mast through the top of which passes a wire which is connected in the laboratory below with an electric conductor, a Ruhmkorff coil and an accounting battery made after a special plan.

The greater the distance between stations the higher must the receiving and transmitting instruments be installed above the surface of the earth. That is because the earth's horizon must soon limit the success of them. Strangely enough, though, it has been found in short distance experiments that even stone walls do not interfere with the current of diminish the precision of messages.

Without entering into technicalities about a system which represents many points of mystery even to scientists, it may be explained for the benefit of laymen that the principle of wireless telegraphy is really the principle by which one tuning fork will give out a note in response to the vibrations produced by the striking of another tuning fork near by.

Gives No Flash.

It is reported that the new French rapid-fire gun invented by Col. Humbert of the navy will be a terror of fire, this he true the French have made an advance in artillery second only in importance to that which marked the introduction by them of smokeless powder, says the scientific American. In the operations around Santiago the only point where our men could locate the position of the enemy was by the flash. If this should be removed the art of war, especially on land, will become difficult indeed. However, for a masked battery of smokeless powder and flashless guns would be positively undiscoverable. The only description of the gun that has come to hand is rather obscure; but it would seem that an attempt is made to cool the hinder portion of the gases below their flash point before they are allowed to reach the open air. The rate of fire has reached a maximum of twenty shots per minute. To accommodate the increased expenditure of ammunition it is proposed to reduce a single battery from four to five guns and increase the number of ammunition wagons.

While the wedding service is going on in Japan, the bride kindles a torch and the bridegroom lights a fire from it and burns the wife's playthings.

THE GRIP MICROBE

SOME DISCOVERIES ABOUT THE PROLIFIC AND TROUBLESOME GERM.

While They Require a High Temperature to Breed, No Degree of Natural Cold Can Kill Them—Valuable Advice for Treatment of the Disease.

The influenza or grip germ has been found to be a bacillus shaped like a rod and about three times longer than it is broad. The bacilli are usually grouped in pairs. These bacilli have never been found naturally except in the human body or its secretions. They are abundant, in cases of influenza or grip, in the lung and bronchial tissues, in the nasal secretions and in the sputum or spittle.

They are found first usually as free clumps of thirty or forty. They get into the system through the nose and mouth. As they require the presence of oxygen or air for their development the breathing tract from the nose down to the lungs becomes their breeding place. They cannot breed below a temperature of 80 degrees, and they flourish best at blood heat—98 degrees. When thrown out of the body in sputum, or otherwise, they remain dormant until they are again taken up into another human system. No degree of natural cold can kill them.

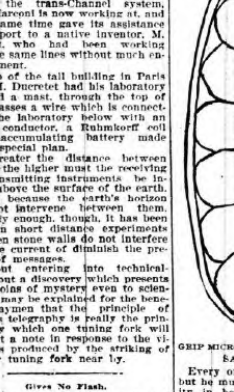
These germs die quickly, in twelve to twenty-four hours, when dried or or placed in water. In human sputum they may live for one or two weeks. They are known to live for weeks months, and probably in years, in the body in cases of chronic bronchitis, consumption and other chronic lung inflamations. They may also grow in the thick secretions of some healthy persons.

This bacillus was discovered by Professor Robert Pfeifer in Berlin in 1892. It may be studied in laboratory cultures, as is bacillus of consumption, typhoid fever, malaria and the germs of other diseases. Artificial influenza germs invariably require blood or haemoglobin smeared over the substance in which they are to be grown. When examined under a microscope they are stained with dyes, as in their natural state they are almost colorless.

MICROSCOPIC VIEW OF THE SURFACE OF THE HUMAN TONGUE.

There is a general impression that grip germs flourish best in the mild, foggy, unseasonable weather of winter. It has been found lately that the weather has absolutely nothing to do with the spreading of these germs. But these germs attack persons during times of sudden change of temperature, because the human system is at such times to be below the normal and unable to resist their onset.

Individuals, for self protection, must rely upon strict observance of those conditions which their own experience has shown them conduce most to their well being. Nourishing and easily cooked food, temperance, plus sufficient sleep and personal cleanliness are essential. We cannot eat the right food, drink the same fluids, or live identical iron-clad rules.



GRIP MICROBE ENLARGED ONE THOUSAND BILLION TIMES.

Every one must judge for himself, but he must certainly avoid irregularity in hours, over-eating, abuse of stimulating drinks, indifference to rain and exposure to conditions that he knows are likely to give him a cold in the head or a sore throat, for the germs of influenza find in a mucous membrane already weakened by inflamation a soil in which they flourish luxuriantly.

It is especially desirable to avoid rooms, or an atmosphere that is foul with exhalations from the human body or other impurities. Sudden changes of temperature must be guarded against by paying particular attention to the clothing, making changes in the matter of clothing rather than in underwear. It might be well also to wash or rinse the nose, mouth or throat night and morning with an unirritating solution of some one of the numerous toilet disinfectants that can be found in any drug store.

As an additional preventive, use quinine for its tonic effects simply, five grains at each of three breakfas or two grains night and morning.

A Lucky Find.

While kicking about in some dirt on the city dump, Leadville, Colo., Frank Burkhart unearthed a cave in which he found fifty sacks of gold and silver ore, stolen from the mines, and valued at $110,000.

SLATE TRICK EXPOSED

The Writing Tests Are Very Simply Performed.

The easiest trick at the wonderful "slate writing tests" is done very simply. After both sides of the slate have been cleaned, the false flap is dropped on to the table, the side which is then uppermost is generously covered with cloth similar to the table top, where it will remain unnoticed, or the flap is allowed to fall into a second slate with which the first is covered. In the latter case no cloth is passed on the flap. Sometimes the flap is covered with a piece of newspaper and is allowed to drop into a newspaper lying on the table, then the newspaper containing the flap is carelessly removed, thus doing away with any trace of trickery.

ORDINARY SLATE WITH FLAP.

Another scheme is to have the writing put on an ordinary slate, then covered with thin silk of the same color. It is fastened at the corner with wax. A thin string is secured under it and fastened to the opposite wrist of the "medium." He extends his arm, the string draws the covering into his sleeve and the slate is passed around for inspection.

Still another method is to obtain a piece of cloth painted with a kind of paint known as liquid slating, which when dry and hard, is for all the world like the real article. This cloth is twice the length of the slate and just the exact width. The two ends of the cloth are united by sewing, so as to make an endless piece or loop. There is a small rod or roller in both the top and bottom pieces of the frame, the cloths being made loose to receive them. Over these rollers runs the cloth, stretched firmly and tightly. Just where the cloth is joined or cemented is a little black button or stud of hard rubber or leather. This allows the cloth to be pushed up and down, bringing the back to the front; and by doing so quickly the writing which is written on the cloth at the rear of the frame is made to come to the front in plain view.

City vs. Country Boys.

The city-bred boy, and we are referring to the great majority, goes to regular labor at so early an age that the last boy, when by our State certain restrictions upon his employment until he has attained a certain age. Yet no complaint is heard of State trouble to investigate, that these laws are strictly observed. Let any one stand in the vicinity of large shops and factories at the noon hour, the evenings, or at the close of working hours, and see the large numbers of very young boys, and girls too, supposed to be under 14 years of age, who are evidently one or two years younger, who work six days in the week, and from eight to ten hours a day, and he will begin to understand what the average boy in the city has to go through before his attendance at school shall begin for the season.

Very few city boys remain at school longer than necessary to pass through the first eight grades of the common school, and few reach that point before they are compelled to leave and begin their life's labor. In this place they pay more attention than usual to the education of the boy, while factory inspection to prevent the employment of boys and girls under 14 years of age, and the compulsory school law, yet not two-thirds of the pupils ever reach the eighth grade of the common schools, and less than 10 per cent of those who attend the common schools ever enter the high schools of the city.

The struggle for existence begins four or five years earlier in the city than in the country. The average country boy attends school longer, has more leisure time, lives better, and has to consider much less than the city boy of existence than the great mass of city boys. We know this to be the case from actual observation. Then the country boy, when he goes to work, is not driven as the average boy in the shop or factory is. As for the seventh and eighth generations of the two classes, it is developed much earlier in the city than in the country boy. The strong men of the country go to the front, and the great manufactories, foundries, blacksmith shops, etc., as the result of continuous and extraordinary physical exertion. The former have a constitution of better health and a stronger constitution. The boy on the farm, and the man, too, has more liberty, leads more sounder health, and their labor is less exacting than if they were living in the city. The boy who leaves the farm to have an easier time will surely meet with disappointment. It is true the city offers greater opportunities to the ambitious and enterprising than the country, but the price for them in health, peace and mind, and length of years is a high one and is sure to be exacted.—St. Louis Republic.

"Jam inside."

AT MANTANZAS

A Glimpse of the Plaza de Armas at the Close of the Spanish-American War.

As we look on the glass de Armas in the phosphoric brilliancy of the big moon and many stars, the aftermath of the war faces us in other forms. We meet the senora, our hostess—a fat, beguiling person who speaks an English as complicated as the coils of a boa constrictor, impossible to reproduce. She walks with us, and tells us who among the crowd are Spanish residents, inwardly savage, hating all and everything belonging to the new regime. She tells us who that ghostly, white-haired woman in sitting on the edge of the mass of people, but with a cold shoulder to them, a mantilla draping her severe profile marked by ardent pride:

"Ah, she is sad. She will never smile again," so says the senora. "She has lost her husband—and—Ah, no. Much worse," and the senora sticks out her lip and looks profoundly sad; "she and her husband are alone save for the boy she has left. Her three daughters are living—yet dead to her—dead, forever. Why? They loved Spanish officers and a month ago went away on the transport with them to Spain—giving up mother, home, country—all. Who can control love?" The senora turns her wise.

The pale, sad woman nods to her once and looks away.

With the close of "The Star Spangled Banner" comes the night, and the crowd divides, filing like thin streams the yardwide sidewalks of the ineffectually lighted streets. From one corner, however, there comes a flare of light. It is one of the relief stations, and the réconcentrados are there for the nightly contribution of food. A faintless crowd waits, the chicken the heart, and arouse the futile, agonizing "why" which never has been answered and never will be. The patience of these outcasts and their quick word of thanks as one displaces another, have no choice, no interest other than the unquestioning hand and fretfully hatever is given, is the strongest evidence of what they have endured. There is receiving of something to keep the breath within them another day.—The Criterion.

Largest Bunch of Islands Known.

The number of islands which comprise the Philippine group to-day is not definitely known. Some years ago it was estimated that about 1,200 islands would cover the number, but now discoveries are made that there are at least 2,000 of them. New ones are being constantly added to the map. Some members of this vast archipelago, as well as the whole of Luzon and the larger islands lying beyond the direct control of the Spanish, have never been explored.

Even the regions governed by the Europeans are still but imperfectly known, and up to date no methodical and detailed study of the Philippines has been made. The charts in use to-day are exceedingly defective, except for the seaboard, in the survey of which the leading maritime nations have co-operated.

Out of the estimated number of 2,000 islands, those known as the principal ones are Luzon, Mindanao, Negros, Samar, Panay, Mindoro, Leyte, Negros, Cebu, Masbate, Bohol, Catanduanes, Polillo, Marinduque, Tablas, Burias and Ticao.

Think of it—17 islands out of 2,000!

Luzon, the largest, has an area of about 41,000 square miles; Mindanao, the next, of about 36,000 square miles; and the five next in size have an area of over 10,000 square miles each. The most reliable estimate places the aggregate area of the Philippines at 114,356 square miles, or equal to the area of Arizona. There remains yet to be explored an aggregate of nearly 27,000 square miles. Luzon, upon which the city of Manila is located, is equal in area to the State of Virginia.

The coast line of all the islands is very irregular and broken, the deep cutting in and forming many gulfs, bays, isthmuses and peninsulas. There are long stretches of coast and passages between the islands, but these are not always navigable. Although situated in the region adapted to the growth of corals, the scarcity of this formation is accounted for by the presence of volcanic fires and the occasional deluge of hot water, which prevent the growth of the polyps.

The constant change in the number of islands is due to the frequent eruptions of native volcanoes, with which these islands are said to be infested.

The Mayon, in Luzon, for instance, is an active volcano over 8,200 feet high. It has been the scene of several eruptions during the present century.

Increased Finnish Immigration.

Reports come from Finland to the effect that the people of that country are emigrating to the United States in large numbers to avoid Russian oppression. Tyrannical rule in European countries has driven millions of people to the United States who have become as good citizens as any in the republic, and Finland in the past years has furnished its full share. The Finns are among the best people of the Czar's empire. They are not Slavs, but are allied to the Scandinavians, and are now and ever since being incorporated into the Russian empire have enjoyed a large measure of home rule through legislative body of their own. As a consequence of the recent edict of the Czar curtailing their liberties the youngest generation is fleeing the empire. As a hardy, peaceable, industrious and intelligent people, in every way calculated to make good citizens, the United States will welcome their coming.

Strange as Fiction.

An Illinois woman, whose husband and deserted her, disguised herself as a fortune teller, called on his mother and informed her that he was in Chicago. Then she went to Chicago, established herself and began detective work. In the midst of her endeavors she had a dream in which she saw her husband in a bicycle factory. The next day she hunted up the factory, took out a warrant for his arrest and had him landed in jail. Circumstances like this are of the cases which make us realize that life is not only stranger but a good deal more interesting now and then than fiction.

When a Porto Rican wants a drink and is not near a spring or a tavern, he climbs a tree and gets it. The tree is a palm and he finds his drink in a cocoanut.

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS.

The Famous Structure That Led to Dark and Horrible Cells.

The Bridge of Sighs spans the Rio della Paglia and connects the ducal palace with the carceri or prisons. The bridge dates from 1597. It is a graceful arch, 36 feet above the water, enclosed at all sides and arched overhead. It contains two separate pass-for trial or judgment. It is in the rear of the palace and hangs over the dark waters of the canal.

The poetic sentiment attached to the bridge, which gave it the famous name it still bears, arose from the belief that many a political prisoner, innocent of wrongdoing, was led over this span and down into the dungeons below, whence there was no escape. So dungy and foul are these cells that they are called "wells." Travelers in search of the hideous always visit them. Their gloom and horror have been painted in words in Dicken's "Pictures from Italy."

Standing on the Bridge of Sighs Byron composed his solid poem on the rise and fall of Venice.

Some question has been raised as to the stability of the foundations of this bridge. It is known of course that the buildings at the city of Venice, Italy were men of extraordinary ability; but their skill exhibited itself more in the artistic than in the engineering side of their profession.

In the latter branch they may almost be looked upon as experimentalists, and in view of the nature of the soil of Venice, the manner in that their structures have lasted five or six hundred years, especially when it is remembered that they did not scruple to add great weight in the way of superstructures to buildings which had been erected for centuries without strengthening the foundations.

Don't Use Blotting Pads.

Said an official at the general writing counter in a big post office: "I have called for two years to use the blotting paper."

Remembering that good blotting sheets could be had for a penny, I inquired "Why?"

"We have more inquisitive than ready-going visitors," he said. "Some who have little or no business to mind take pleasure in acting overseer to others. Five of the folks drop in here purposely to examine the blotting pads.

"Not that the examination is profitable to the examiners in the general sense, but look there—you observe the old gentleman in the blue pilot coat at the central counter? His hobby is to keep himself and his people's eyes open. Today he is quiescent; the pads are new, and offer no amusement.

"I have seen him thus lowered voice: 'Take up pad after pad, place a small hand glass over them, and read what impression the writers have left on the absorbent paper. He is a pest, but we cannot expose him.

"Sorry to say, more than one lady finds amusement in similarly treating the blotters. One, in particular, lingers long in view of the writing counters. Carrying a small folding glass, she seems to delight in reading snatches of communications which the pads have received on their sheets. When disturbed, she pretends to be interested in writing, or filling a telegraph form. Yes, I warn you not to use the official pads too liberally."

Curious Fishing.

The natives of Kottiar are in the habit of fishing every year during the summer ,the dry banks of the Vergei river for fish, which they dig out by hundreds, just as they would potatoes. $40,000,000 of Jewelry.

The estimated value of the sultan's jewels is $40,000,000. If his majesty has any hobby at all, it may be said to be the possessing of jewels and witnessing private theatricals. No professional of note—be he actor ,singer or conjuror—passes through Constantinople without an invitation from the sultan. He always has one of these performances in bank of England notes.

PRIZE SUGGESTIONS.

THE TWO LETTERS BELOW SELECTED FROM "MANAGING HELP."

A Contest Conducted by New York Journal and Prizes Awarded Mrs. Mary F. Lambert, of Allerton, Mass. and Mary Ford, of New York.

I am a servant girl and these are my views: I think every servant should have two evenings and every other Sunday afternoon and evening out. This gives her a chance to see her friends without their coming to the house where she lives. I think she should be allowed to have company when it is her Sunday in. If her girl friends come it is very well to see them in the kitchen, but if a gentleman calls she should no doubt much prefer to see him alone. If there is no sitting room for the servants they ought to be allowed to see their friends in the dining room if it is in the basement and they do not interfere with the household arrangements. But there must be limit to a girl's company. She must not expect to have her friends call too often. I think a servant should have an afternoon off a month or so to do her shopping, as it is late when her work is finished, and if she needs anything she has to get it at the nearest time she can, when they charge much more than they do in the big stores down town. A girl should have a certain amount of work to do every day, so that it can be got up quickly and well she should not be made to put in the time thus saved in helping others of the servants who have lingered around during their work. Each luck to get their portion of work done. That makes a girl feel that no matter how much she does she is never through. On the other hand, if one girl is not able to do her work the others should do all they can to help her. A mistress should never encourage her servants to carry tales for her about each other, and the help should never speak unkindly of their mistress, as those who do so bring a bad name for themselves and never have joined in words in Dicken's "Pictures from Italy."

ROTHSCHILD FREE AGAIN.

Western Convict Liberated From Penitentiary After Several Years' Incarceration.

A DESPERATE CRIMINAL.

Under Some Forty or Fifty Aliases Abe Rothschild Has an International Reputation.

Killed His Wife, Known as "Diamond Rose," in Jefferson, Texas, and Escaped Hanging by the Liberal Use of Money —Jewelers' Protective Association Made It Hot for Him and He Turned Gambler.

The steel bars which have for several years confined Abe Rothschild in the Missouri State Penitentiary have been lifted and the prisoner once again breathes the fresh air of freedom. Apparently his freedom will be of short duration, as, by the terms of his conviction, he is required to leave the country immediately upon being released, or he can be rearrested and tried upon several other indictments which are pending against him.

Rothschild, under some forty or fifty aliases, has a most unenviable reputation, obtained while he was engaged in acquiring other people's property without going through the formality of paying for it. He has been all over the civilized world as a criminal who has had more narrow escapes from capture than any other man. Only one man known to the police all over this country or Europe, Rothschild has the further distinction of having been convicted of murder and escaping hanging only by the liberal use of money and influence upon a second trial.

He is a product of the West, as are most of his associates. He is said to have been born in St. Louis forty-seven years ago.

His first came into public notice in 1877, when he married a woman known in the West as "Diamond Rose" Moore, and induced her to go to Jefferson, Tex., where he registered at a hotel as "A. Monroe and wife, Cincinnati." They remained at the hotel but a few days when Mrs. Rothschild disappeared, and Abe, telling the hotel proprietor that "his wife was visiting friends," took his trunks and went to Cincinnati. A few days after the body of the unfortunate young woman was found in the woods a short distance from the hotel. She had been shot through the head and stripped of diamonds and all valuables.

Abe Rothschild shot himself on the steps of a gambling house in Cincinnati on the evening of January 11, 1877, and upon his recovery from the wound was arrested and taken to Texas for trial. The trial resulted in conviction, but a new trial was granted later it was set aside, and after as last prisoned Rose's crimes Rothschild secured his liberty and the murder of "Diamond Rose" remained unavenged.

He engaged in many swindles in usual modus operandi being to take the name of a prominent merchant who was well rated in the commercial agencies. Then he would send to other merchants in the same business, orders for goods to be shipped to the town where the prominent merchant did business. Then addressing the goods to himself under the name of the merchant he had selected he would inclose a number of drafts for a large amount on himself, telling the bank not to be immediately.

Arriving in the town he would ask at the postoffice for the letter which he would of course expect. He would express surprise to learn of the existence of the merchant of the same name, but would at once call upon him and introduce himself, trading upon the coincidence of the similarity of names. Then he would ask for the letter which he had reason to believe had been delivered to the merchant, and as the merchant would have no reason to become suspicious, he would turn it over.

The rest was easy for a man of Rothschild's unlimited resources. He would ask the merchant to hold any drafts against him by registered mail which were not intended for him, and within a few days would receive the drafts bearing his indorsement ordered and would leave the town. The swindle would not be discovered for at least thirty days when the diamond merchant in the East from whom the goods were sent would send in their statements and the merchant would learn of the huge swindle which had been successfully executed.

The Jewelers' Protective Association sent circulars broadcast warning their members against Rothschild, but succeeded in reaping a rich harvest before publicity made it dangerous for him to work. Then he developed into a gambler and followed the race tracks, making money rapidly.

He was a plunger, and several "killings" in the betting ring were followed by bleak days. Finally fortune and sailed for Europe, where he soon became well known on all the English and French race tracks. Luck finally set against him, though, and after a long campaign he became "broke" and again turned his attention to swindling. He finally fled to Ontario to escape the United States authorities, who were hot on his tracks, but he was arrested and taken to Chicago, where he was wanted on several charges.

It was stipulated when he was extradited that he should only be tried on two charges, and he was convicted and sentenced to four years in the Jefferson City Penitentiary, which he entered as Rose Rothschild has only one eye, an artificial one occupying the place of the other, which he shot out when he attempted suicide after the arrest for the killing of "Diamond Rosale," in 1877

Evolution and Involution.

They afterward thought that the unconscious imbecile purposely selected the conversation for the subject of evolution and environment.

"Certainly," the Easy Figure had assented, "if we assume that climatic conditions operate sometimes to retard the course of evolution, but it is new to me that they have ever reversed the process of development."

"Do they not often make monkeys of the weather prophets?" shrieked the Unconscious Imbecile, failing in a fit to avoid punishment.—Detroit Journal.

GRANDMA AND I.

My grandma talks of the "good old days"
To me and my little brother Ben;
But if you won't tell, I'll whisper to you,
That I'm awfully glad I didn't live then.

My grandma's doll couldn't shut her eyes;
For, you see, they were only daubs of paint,
And her hair was made of raveled yarn,
I tell you, I'm glad that my dolly's ain't!

Such funny books as they used to have,
And the pictures weren't pretty a single bit;
The old New England primer was one—
I guess you'd laugh if you looked at it.

There weren't any furnaces in church,
And sometimes grandma would almost freeze
And she says, when she was a child like me,
She never had seen any Christmas trees.

My grandma is dear, and wise, and good,
And I love her a lot, but anyhow,
I think that the good new times are the best,
And I'm glad that Benny and I live now.

HINTS ON RUNNING.

Alvin Kraenzlein Tells How to Become a Record Breaker.

Alvin C. Kraenzlein, who made a new world's record in the running broad jump, has this to say regarding his wonderful powers as an athlete:—

"From the time when I was a very small youngster I was very fond of athletic sports of all kinds, but at that time there were plenty of boys that could beat me in short and long distance running. I determined to make a study of running, and become the fastest runner in the school. In the first place I read a number of hints given by trainers, and these I adopted as much as was possible. To begin with I was always careful to take care of myself, and I never ruined my lungs with tobacco or my stomach with coffee every morning.

"My training at this time was very simple, but I think very effective. Each morning and night I used to go through the setting up exercises that are used at West Point, which almost every one knows and which so very few practice. Personally I believe these exercises to be the best kind of a home gymnasium it is possible to have, and some of my records, perhaps, may be directly attributed to them. Gradually I kept on running and practising, until I was acknowledged the fastest runner in the school, and I am sure that I felt more proud of this distinction than I have ever any of my later records.

"If you are going to quote me as to my methods, I won't know where to begin, but first of all I would advise any young boy to get his body and mind so that they will work together at all times. By this I mean that the true runner or jumper depends upon his head quite as much as his legs, for the fastest runner when rattled is beaten before the race begins. Another thing, you want to cultivate confidence in your abilities. Go into the race with the idea of winning, and if you lose, have it because the other man could run faster and, what is more, admit it.

"This same admission may be up to him in the future, and you will enjoy your victory more because you had to work and wait for it. Begin your practising by light running, allowing plenty of development for your lungs. Don't strain yourself at the start, but try to build up a physique and acquire a method of running that can be relied upon when you are in a race. Keep your stomach in good order. More races are lost from a bad stomach than poor legs. Add to this good American sound and faithful and considerations practice and you may find yourself a world's champion some day."

NEW SHIRT WAISTS.

Novel Variation of This Garment to Which Women Cling.

Never in my recollection has there been a fashion so long in vogue as that of the shirt waist. And it shows no signs yet of failing to keep its place. Young and old, rich and poor, wear shirt waists, and wear them at all times and in all places.

Simply the changing of cotton ones for silk makes them fit for any but the dressiest occasions. Shirt waists even do not seem to be out of place in the summer in church, though they naturally are of modest color, most often of black pongee or taffeta.

The shape and make vary as much as ever. There are so many different ideas that one's hair would turn gray from old age ere the half could be told. But I noticed a few the other day, and these have the merit of novelty.

One new design has the waist laid in round box plaits to the yoke. This style is prettiest in chambray, linen, pique or dimity in solid color and is made to wear with white cuffs and collar and a leather belt. The yoke is cut to fit the shoulders, and there is a high self collar, over which the white one is to be worn, turned down. The yoke is pointed in the back, and the box plaits are laid in the same way.

A black and white striped cotton crepon had plain inch wide plaits laid down the front. The whole was bloused with a short yoke in the back. The collar and cuffs were of the same. There were a cardinal satin tie at the neck and a heavy cardinal belt with Roman gold buckle. The cuffs were shirt sleeve shape, but with short turned up cuffs of the same at the edge. The simplicity of this made its superior style.

A mohair blouse waist was also called a shirt waist. It was of very dark gray and simply gathered in at the waist. A yoke and cape to the sleeve were made of Bulgarian embroidery in dark red, blue and cream, the work done directly on the material. The only way this can be done is to have a piece of canvas with loose mesh basted over the material. The cross stitch work is then done through both materials, the stitches not drawn very tight. When the pattern is wrought, the linen canvas threads are pulled out, and that leaves the work on the material in high relief. It is quite effective and has an oriental air very pleasing.

Where one wants a washable waist which shall also be dressy and elaborate, one of the line gray and white and pink striped zephyrs is just right. The sleeves have turned up cuffs, and the collar is high and has one portion turned over. Down the front are three flat plaits, between which are two insets made of tucks and fine torchon lace, set on horizontally. This, however elaborate it looks, is to be ironed flat and the lace picked up afterward.

White linen of rather heavy quality was used to make another. This had a stitched plait down the center, with several narrow tucks on each side, leaving spaces, filled in with diagonal tucks, with insertions made of Deimel linen mesh. The effect is very fine, and it shows its value. A high collar with black or red tie belongs with it.

Another mannish shirt waist is of blue and gray madras, the stripes running crosswise. It is laid in folds from top to bottom. A collar and cuffs of the same add to its masculine appearance.

Aside from these new ideas, there are many dainty, crisp waists of white, blue, nile, cream, pink and yellow taffeta, all as crisp as piecrust. These cost ready made all the way from $5 to $50, according to the manner of making and trimming. Some of them have the whole front covered with narrow ruffles of fine ribbon. Others have lace.

Many of the fine waists are made with the queerest shoulders. Where the sleeve is set in the shoulder slopes down almost to the armpit. Some of them are cut so that the fronts, back and upper part of the sleeve are all on one piece with no shoulder seam at all. This style cannot be cut in anything but firm and yet flexible wash silk, as the cloth would without up or down. like cashmere.

SUMMER NOVELTIES.

The National Colors—New Shape In Tan Shoes.

Although red, white and blue are not sported quite as aggressively as they were last year, they are still sufficiently prominent, the national colors entering into shirt waist percales, neckties and ties. During hot weather the chess fan is everywhere evident, and one of the newest ideas among the little Japanese folding fans is the American flag design, in which the 13 stripes follow the curving shape of the fan, while the union is up in the left hand corner. The sticks are of bamboo painted red, white and blue, and the fans are made in Japan for the American trade.

A bright red, tan and a rather deep brown seem to be the favorite shades for summer shoes. The fashion of wearing white or colored footgear during the hot weather has become confirmed, and black shoes are the exception rather than the rule. Tan shoes are certainly cooler than black ones, and those made of white canvas or gray linen are cooler yet. The fashionable toe is very ugly—it is moderately pointed and is stiffened hard, with a sort of thick, bulging effect, which is certainly masculine, but disagreeable and clumsy.

The picture illustrates a black satin costume. The trained skirt has a tunic trimming of jet embroidery. The little coat has a rolling basque and is short in front, where it is embroidered with jet. It opens over a vest of pink silk fastened with crystal buttons. The close sleeves are embroidered with jet at the wrists. The collar and cravat are of white embroidered crape. The hat of black spangled tulle is trimmed with black plumes, a bow of pink silk and a jeweled ornament. JUDIC CHOLLET.

WARM WEATHER GOWNS.

Silk and Cloth For Pretty Summer Costumes.

Among the new taffetas which are used for entire costumes for young girls or for separate bodices to be worn with darker skirts by girls and women are those very attractive ones having a ground of old rose, periwinkle blue, bengal rose, mauve, turquoise or light green crossed and checked by small lines of black and white.

Cloth, formerly considered a fabric for cool weather, has now been so idealized and refined away by manufacturers that it may be worn all summer and is reckoned this season among summer materials. The new cloths are exceedingly thin, light and soft, with an exquisitely satiny finish, and the colors are the most delicate that can be imagined.

Fine shepherd's plaid silk, in black and white, composes some very neat summer gowns, the belt being of silk of another color, to give accent to the costume. Scarlet, dark green and French blue are all used.

The picture illustrates a charming gown of lilac silk crepon. The skirt has a flounce of lilac mousseline de soie, simulating a tunic and lapped at the side by a chou. The Louis XV bodice, with a tight basque growing shorter at the back, is bordered by a ruffle of mousseline de soie and has revers cuffs and pocket flaps of white satin with pompadour embroidery. Jeweled buttons decorate the front. The half length sleeves have cuffs of embroidered satin topped a frill of mousseline. The collar and cravat are of white embroidered tulle. The hat of lilac straw is trimmed with lilac flowers, with yellow hearts and lilac tulle.

Recently Noted Activities of the Unquiet Sex.

By BESSIE QOW BATES

The recent terrible epidemic of smallpox among the Moqui Indians of Arizona was mainly checked through the efforts of a woman physician, Mrs. Mary

McKee, who remained constantly at the agency during the prevalence of the disease attending the sufferers.

Miss Marretta Meade and Miss Augusta Hasemyer, two Chicago girls who went to Havana as nurses some time ago, have volunteered to remain in Cuba during the yellow fever season and to care for the sick soldiers through the hot summer of the tropics.

Miss Johanna Westorf is the first of her sex upon whom the title of professor has ever been conferred in Prussia. She is directress of the Sleswick-Holstein museum at Kiel and was honored in recognition of her extraordinary services in archæology and anthropology

The recent appointment of Miss Lillie J. Martin as assistant professor in the department of psychology at Leland Stanford Junior university is a signal distinction for a woman and a fitting supplement to the honors she won in the laboratories of Europe.

Mrs. May Boyden, a Red Cross nurse in the Philippines, was publicly commended on the field at Malabon by General Wheaton for the fearless manner in which she went about on the firing line caring for wounded soldiers.

Mrs. S. P. Edge, an English woman, enjoys the distinction of being the first lady automobilist.

Miss Anna M. Bowen, who recently finished a course of postgraduate study at the Munich university, has succeeded Miss Harriott Norris as dean of Woman's hall of the Northwestern university of Chicago.

Miss Lettie Y. Welch, a slender, quiet, self controlled young woman, is superintendent of the Arapahoe County hospital, one of the largest in Denver.

Mrs. Emmons Blaine's College of *Pedogogy, about to be opened in Chi*cago, is likely to attract much attention in the educational world. It is proposed that the institution shall meet the demand for trained teachers in all grades from kindergarten to college.

Miss Gerta Pomeroy, a New York society belle, is the champion shot among the Colorado big game hunters thus far this season. She was one of a party who were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish on a tour through the west. At Glenwood Springs a hunting expedition was organized. A big black bear was brought to bay in a rocky ravine after an exciting chase.

Miss Pomeroy was the first to arrive and was given the first shot at the animal. At a distance of about 100 feet Miss Pomeroy shot the bear through the heart, her aim being faultless. The bear was the largest killed in Colorado in several years.

Miss A. McInnes of Harrison, N. J., who served as a nurse at Camp Hamilton, Lexington, Ky., and Camp McKenzie, Augusta, Ga., will go to Manila to attend sick and wounded soldiers in the Philippines.

One of the most expert horsewomen in New York is Miss Marion Halloway, who won five blue ribbons at the recent Philadelphia horse show.

When the Fort Dodge and Omaha railroad was recently completed, the golden spike was driven by a woman, the wife of Superintendent Dixon.

Miss Pearl Griffin is the fearless and aggressive editor of the Perrysville (Mo.)

Daily Review. In this position she succeeded her father, who was shot and killed on account of his editorial opposition to unlawful liquor traffic and local political rings. Miss Griffin fearlessly followed the policy of her father, and, though threatened with violence, continues the publication of the paper, which has become a potent influence in the social and political affairs of that section.

Mrs. Adelaide Wallerstein, known in New York as a philanthropist, clubwoman and society leader, recently passed the regents' examination, preparatory to entering a medical college.

A SUCCESSFUL ARTIST.

St. Louis Girl Who Has Won Praise From the New York Critics.

Few American girls studying art in Paris have attained higher rank and distinction among the best artists and critics of the French capital than Miss Sadie Waters, though but little is known of her in this country. This is perhaps due to the fact that no exhibit of her work has ever been given here and also to her extreme modesty and lack of egotism. She has never courted fame. Her work, however, has found hosts of admirers wherever it has been shown.

Miss Waters is a native of St. Louis, her father the late William Waters, being one of the millionaire business men of that city. Charming in person and manner and inheriting abundant wealth, she might have become a leader of St. Louis' fashionable society, but she chose rather a career in art.

Early in her teens she began attending the St. Louis Art school, where her talent showed itself so unmistakably that her mother decided to take her to Paris. Mrs. Waters and her talented daughter went to Paris in 1889, and the latter at once became a pupil of Lne-Olivier Merson, an artist comparatively little known in this country, but of higher repute in France.

The proficiency of Miss Waters in her studies is shown in the fact that her work was exhibited in the salon within six months after she went to Paris. Her first exhibit was a portrait of Jane Hading in "L'Aventuriere," a miniature on ivory, showing a three-quarter figure robed in fluffy white against a white background. It attracted wide and favorable attention, and every one was amazed to learn that the artist was a young girl whose course of study embraced only a few months. Since then Miss Waters has produced many exquisite compositions on ivory, and is now ranked among the most proficient artists in that style of work.

Miss Waters' most important picture thus far—at least in her own estimation—is her "Vierge aux Lys" ("Virgin of the Lilies"), which was exhibited both at the salon and the Royal academy. It is wrought on ivory, 7 by 9 inches. The virgin is painted from one of her favorite models, a beautiful Italian woman.

Portraits on ivory of Sarah Bernhardt, owned in New York, and of Leon Labbe, the French surgeon, have added greatly to Miss Waters' reputation as a portrait painter.

The home of Mrs. and Miss Waters is the center of much of the artistic, musical and literary life of Paris, and they number among their friends many artists, musicians, writers and actors of prominence. So make Miss Waters' studio their salon.

Mrs. Waters was one of St. Louis' famous beauties in her youth, and is still handsome and stately, with a decidedly patrician air. She is very proud of her daughter's accomplishments, and justly so. Many of the mother's charms are duplicated in the daughter. She is tall and slender, of graceful carriage, and has an expressive and attractive face, wreathed in light brown hair. Her gowns, always designed by herself, are the delight of artists.

A branch of work to which Miss Waters has devoted much attention and in which she has become proficient is that of illuminating. She is one of the very few women who have been successful in this class of work. The first important thing she did in the line of illuminating was a song, "My Love Is Come," by Christina Rossetti. It was for Mrs. Raymond, who was formerly Annie Louise Cary. The music and words were done in pen and ink and the title page and borders illuminated.

Miss Waters has lately been engaged in illuminating a commission service, which she will present to the American church of the Holy Trinity in Paris as a memorial to her father. It is done on parchment nearly 400 years old, given her by a collector at Venice, who took it from an old manuscript book. It will be bound in crimson velvet, with old silver clasps. Those who have seen the work declare it to be very beautiful.

Miss Waters' work brings high prices, her miniatures alone selling for $100 each, and from her art she has made a goodly sum of money, all of which she has devoted to charity, as the fortune of the family is ample.

GLADYS LA TOUR.

Miss May Anderson, a beautiful belle of Palmyra, Mo., has become a disciple of Blackstone, and proposes to maintain the reputation of a family that has given the state many noted lawyers.

Mrs. Edward M. Field, daughter-in-law of the late Cyrus Field and once a leader in New York society, has engaged in the occupation of interior house decorating in that city.

FASHION NOTES.

Many Flowers Bloom Upon Summer Headgear.

Red gowns are more and more in vogue, and there are also charming little scarlet jackets for seaside and mountain wear, made perfectly plain, but very trim and up to date looking. Over a white, navy blue or black gown they are exceedingly effective.

An immense quantity of flowers is worn in hats, although hats are not so universally covered with them as was the case last year. Occasionally the headgear is one mass of flowers, however, one example being a round hat of medium size made of rose colored gauze and completely covered with pink and red roses, so the hat itself could not be seen except at the edge of the brim, and even there its color confused it with the flowers. Bluets are used in the same way, also lilies of the valley and forgetmenots, but the last named flowers are not seen in great numbers this season. Little toques and capotes entirely of flowers are more attractive than the laden hats. For the toques hyacinths, roses, violets and sometimes pansies are employed, very large separate petals of poppies. It is predicted that flowers will again be seen on parasols.

The gown illustrated is of beige cloth, the skirt opening at the left side over a panel of nile green silk with horizontal corded tucks. The left side of the tablier is embroidered with white applications. The bodice, also embroidered and opening at the left side, has a sort of yoke and plastron of tucked silk like the panel and fastens with cords and gold buttons. The cravat is a jabot of white lace, and the sleeves are plain. The hat of beige straw is trimmed with nile green plumes and ribbon, with a show of pink silk under the brim. JUDIC CHOLLET.

THIN GOWNS.

Light and Attractive Materials For Summer Costumes.

Among the lightweight silk goods for summer wear are mousseline satins with delicate printed designs resembling painted decorations, various taffetas, some with broche effects, others covered with open embroidery, still others with a broken surface of checks, stripes or similar ornamentations, and foulard, which has been actively revived and appears plain and with attractive stamped patterns. Silk batiste is also seen and is very cool and attractive.

There are transparent woolen goods likewise in all colors and black. Chief in importance among these are the canvas and wool grenadines, which are serviceable for the seaside, where cottons, linens and silks are apt to become stringy in the moist air. The wash fabrics are charmingly dainty, however, and will be extensively worn during the approaching hot weather. Swiss muslin, white and colored; batiste, pique and percale, are chiefly seen. All kinds of designs appear, but stripes pre-ponderate—wide, narrow, regular and irregular. Checks, plaids and dots are also favorites, floral patterns being less frequent, although there are many charming flower designs to be obtained. Solid colors are largely used, and these and embroidery are so lavishly employed as trimming.

The wedding gown depicted is of white satin, the skirt being plain except for a ruche of mousseline de soie around the edge. The back is in the princess style, but the front forms a draped bodice, with coquilles of old point mingled with orange blossoms. The round yoke and the sleeves are of mousseline de soie shirred with little beadings, the yoke being framed in a garland of orange blossoms.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHAT TO WEAR AND HOW TO MAKE IT.

May Manton's Hints Regarding Seasonable Toilettes.

The box plaited shirt waist retains its popularity and is found among the most stylish of this season's waists. As here represented in pale blue pique with bow tie and belt of black satin, it is at once attractive and becoming, the combination being one of the very newest. Three box plaits of equal width are formed in front and back, the closing in front being concealed under the centre plait. A pretty pointed yoke fits smoothly across the shoulders and unites the front and back portions, under-arm gores completing the perfect adjustment. The turn down collar finished softly is preferred by many but it can be made removable or omitted altogether, the regulation white linen standing collar taking its place, in which case the neck is finished with a band. The shirt sleeves are of fashionable width, openings being made at the back of wrists that are finished with pointed over-laps. Gathers adjust the scant fulness top and bottom, the straight cuffs being made to close with link buttons.

The lower edge can be tucked under the dress skirt, although there is a fancy for wearing this style of waist as here shown over the skirt.

The mode may be developed in all styles of cotton shirtings, percales, madras, cheviot, duck, dimity or gingham. Fine wool serge or flannel in plain, striped or plaid designs are considered very smart for cycling, yachting, shopping or general outing wear.

To cut this waist for a lady in the medium size 3½ yards of material 36 inches wide will be required.

No wardrobe is quite complete without a cape that can be slipped on and off as occasion demands. The model shown is adapted alike to cloth and silk, the ruffles being all lined with light-weight taffeta or India silk, but as illustrated the material is black French poplin, with jabot of white satin, yoke of black lace over white, and bands of passementerie.

The foundation is in two pieces and seamed at the centre back, where there is a slight point, and upon this are arranged the circular ruffles which show little fulness, yet fall in graceful folds. The double jabot at the front is formed by two pieces, one attached to each side, each of which is finished with a double frill of mousseline and a band of white silk passementerie. At the neck is a high flaring collar, within which is arranged a full ruche of black mousseline, but which may be omitted if desired, as the frill alone makes an ample finish. The entire garment is lined with satin in a soft mode shade.

To cut this cape for a lady of medium size seven yards of material twenty-two inches wide will be required.

Sweaters for Wee Tots.

Sweaters for the wee babies are among the sensible garments that should accompany them whenever they take their rides abroad. In case of sudden lowering of temperature, the sweaters can be readily slipped on over baby's clothes. They come in delicate colors—white, blue or pink—and with a little care may be laundered when necessary.

Soothing Lotions for Sunburn.

Two very good lotions for sunburn are composed thus: One pint of milk, one ounce each of carbonate of soda and glycerine, and half an ounce of powdered borax. Use twice daily. The second one consists of milk and oatmeal water, half-pint each, and carbonate of soda one ounce.

School Monies.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Baxter has sent out the statement showing the apportionment of State school monies for the school year beginning July 1st. The monies are apportioned on the number of children in the State, according to the school censes of 1898. The total amount of the State school tax is $2,333,550, to which is added the annual State appropriation of $200,000.

In Union county there are 20,120 school children, which permits of an appropriation of $117,328.12. Somerset county has 7,607 children and will be entitled to $52,699 10. Camden, Essex, Hudson, Passaic are the only counties in the State that possess more school children than Union. Sussex, Salem and Cape May are the only counties that have fewer children of school age than Somerset.

Democrats Are Hopeful.

An Elizabeth correspondent says the Union county Democrats are looking forward hopefully to the prospect of a bitter Republican fight, and are prepared to take advantage of it by nominating their strongest men. They assert that it is evident from the tone of the Republican papers that there is a secret plan by which Senator Cross is to be sacrificed in the interests of aspirants for other offices. Otherwise if his nomination is secure, they ask, why are there so many rumors about? Where opposition to his candidacy? The Democratic county committee has planned an outing to Whitestone, Long Island, August 31, and the members expect by that time to be able to form plans on which the fall campaign can be fought. They hope an opportunity will be given them to capture the Senatorship, and they will direct their principal efforts to this end, especially if Senator Cross should be shelved.

person dressed to represent "Miss Liberty."

This was without doubt the handsomest float in the parade and is creditable to the efforts of the Juniors.

The Goodwill Council came next, headed by the Veteran Zouave drum corps, of Elizabeth. They were followed by a large number of wheelmen with gaily decorated wheels.

The other floats and business wagons were preceded by Mrs. H. S. Thompson, who rode a gaily decorated wheel, designed to represent a yacht.

After the parade passed the reviewing stand the members of the general committee and the mayors and councilmen entered carriages and joined the procession when it countermarched down Park avenue and turned into Eighth street.

Along the line of march the paraders were given a great ovation, especially that line in regard to the crew of the Brooklyn and the Naval Reserves, who were vigorously applauded as they passed through the various streets.

The floats of the business men were were attractive and as they passed elicited admiration and deserved applause. Among the finest besides that of the Juniors was that of Randolph, the druggist, who had an exhibit that was both artistic and beautifully constructed.

Horace J. Martin, the blacksmith had his business practically illustrated by workmen in the actual labor of working at the forge.

Others in the parade whose wagons were handsomely decorated with the National colors were: Frank Linke, with barrels of Ballantine beer. W. D. Manning, coal, with numerous little girls dressed in white, all waving flags. Smalley Bros., butchers, with calves and sheep in handsomely trimmed wagons. Woolston & Buckle, all kinds of paints, etc. There were many others who had gaily decorated wagons, representing their various lines of business.

The rear of the procession was brought up by a wagon upon which was a large sign reading: "Make your city healthy by employing the Plainfield Sanitary Co."

It was fully 1 o'clock when the procession broke ranks and the various visiting organizations were taken in hand by Plainfield's hospitable citizens. The Brooklyn boys were marched to Washington hall, where the Juniors had made preparations to entertain them. If the jolly tars are not sufferers today from eating the quantities of good things provided for their stomachs they can lay it to good digestions.

While the men-o'-warsmen were being cared for at Washington hall the ladies of the Women's Relief Corps were displaying their characteristic noble traits by feeding the Naval Reeerves, who were the city's guests, at the Crescent rink. In the meantime the visiting Red Men had been looked after by the big Chiefs of the local tribes, who saw that they had plenty of "fire-water" and "jerked venison" in the form of the best the city affords. Later the Red Men were placed on board of cars and whirled to Mountainside Park where Miantonomo tribe held a picnic.

The afternoon's amusement consisted of a band concert in City Park and an address by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis and reading of the Declaration of Independence by former Judge Wm. A. Coddington. Wm. Newcorn presided and introduced those who entertained the large crowd present. After Judge Coddington had read the Declaration of Independence P. P. VanArsdale sang the "Star Spangled Banner," the audience joining in the chorus.

Dr. Lewis delivered an oration that was filled with patriotic expressions. He dealt with events leading up to what he said is now the highest ideal of a composite nation, which alone can be gained by self-government, where every man is a king and every woman a queen. Whether we are to push the problem made possible by Admiral Dewey's victory in Manila harbor and complete the great task we have undertaken in the Philippines and give those people independent rights and thus make a permanency of this nation, is the problem of the hour.

The speaker said he believed a solution of that problem would be found by the time the next Fourth of July rolled around.

As if to crown the day's festivities in the evening fair Luna shed a portion of her effulgence upon the scene of the fire works, while over all was spread the canopy of heaven. The blue back ground was studded with countless stars, whose twinkling lights glistened like diamonds and shed their lustre over the face of a peerless night in today second to no other on the globe.

The fire works were magnificient and were sent off without accident. They were looked at by thousands and greatly admired and appreciated. It would be a whiz, zip, sizzle and then boom would follow the explosion in mid-air while the exclaimed multitude exclaimed "Ah!" "Isn't it beautiful!" "magnificient!" etc.

The pyrotechnic display gave good satisfaction. The fact that no rain came to mar the pleasure of the day, was gratifying to all. Owing to the great shower in the afternoon it would have been most acceptable, for the heat was intense, the mercury climbing up into the nineties toward 2 o'clock.

The celebration ended in a blaze of glory and to the satisfaction of all. It was free from fatal accidents and there was little or no disorder."

Celebrated On Historic Ground.

Bound Brook, July 5—In accordance with the usual custom the Washington Camp Ground Association held their eleventh annual celebration of Independence Day on the camp ground, north of the town, on the southern slope of the mountain, yesterday noon. Hon. George LaMonte, president of the association, in a few well-chosen words welcomed the assemblage and complimented the officers and trustees on the improvements which had been made since he had deeded the historic tract to the association two years ago. The orator of the day, Howard MacSherry, of New Brunswick, was then introduced, and the very stirring speech he delivered entitled him to a place in the list of former Camp Ground orators, which includes such men as Rev. A. H. Lewis, D. D., Hon. Asa W. Tenny, Hon. Wallace Bruce and Richard V. Lindabury.

Fine Time at "Sunset Cottage."

The Fourth was gloriously spent at Voehl's "Sunset Cottage." A game of ball was played in the afternoon between the Jersey City and a Plainfield team, the latter winning in a victory of 12 to 3 in favor of the former. A display of fire works was had in the evening. At various intervals large balloons labeled "Sunset Cottage" were floating in the air to the admiration of all. A continuous display of fireworks was had from 7 to 11 p. m.

Superintendent Clark's Resignation.

It was reported the other day, when superintendents were changed about on the Jersey Central Railroad, that the "resignations were made by request." This was not so, in the case of W. V. Clark, at least, the superintendent at Long Branch. It can be said, upon the authority of President Maxwell, that "he resigned his position voluntarily and against the wishes of the management, and the report does him great injustice."

The "Goddess" Took a Fall.

Frank Keller, who personated the "Goddess of Liberty" on the handsome float of the Juniors, was thrown from the top of the globe upon which he stood when the procession was countermarching at Martine's common. Fortunately Mr. Keller was not seriously injured, although he was stunned and slightly bruised. He remounted the globe and again resumed his position after a few moments rest.

Councilwomen Elected.

Lincoln, July 5.—The annual borough election of Lincoln was held yesterday. In Lincoln women are entitled to vote at the municipal elections. Sixty-seven ballots were cast yesterday, of which thirty-one were by women. The women also hold office as Councilwomen. Two were elected. They were Flora P. Wrech and Marian E. VanDyke.

To Build Twenty-Five Houses.

James W. Lanning, of Trenton, has just closed a contract with the Knickerbocker Mortgage Company, of New York, of which Charles Howell Cook is treasurer, for the erection of twenty-five handsome houses on the Middlebrook Heights property, Bound Brook, owned by them. W. W. Slack, a Trenton architect, is doing some of the architectural work.

Getting to Insurance Agents.

MRS. O'SULLIVAN'S INJURIES WERE FATAL.

Husband at Her Bedside When She Passed Away.

HER DEATH WAS PAINLESS.

LAST RITES OF THE CHURCH ADMINISTERED BY FATHER WESTMAN.

Funeral Services Will be Held at St. Frances Xavier Church on West Sixteenth Street, New York, Wednesday Morning at 11 O'clock—Guests at Hotel Hunterston Passed a Sad Sunday.

Mrs. Sylvester O'Sullivan, who was so frightfully burned Saturday while in the store of Crosby & Hill, died at the Muhlenberg Hospital about six o'clock that evening. She was conscious to the last. Her husband had been notified of the accident and arrived about 2 o'clock. He was with her when she died, as was also Mrs. Coleman, wife of the proprietor of the Hotel Hunterston. About 4 o'clock Mrs. O'Sullivan was given an opiate and she soon fell asleep and so passed away apparently without any pain and without a struggle.

As soon as it was apparent that the fortunate woman could not survive her terrible injuries Rev. Father Westman was summoned to offer spiritual consolation to the dying woman. So, in the presence of her husband and her friend Mrs. Coleman, Mrs. O'Sullivan was anointed and the last rites of the Catholic church administered to her.

Previous to falling asleep Mrs. O'Sullivan had expressed a desire to place her arms about her husband's neck. With the assistance of Mrs. Coleman she did so, using her left arm, as that member had not been touched by the flames. The scene between the dying woman and her husband was very affecting. When Mr. O'Sullivan was finally led from the bedside of his dying wife he appeared to be in a dazed condition.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Sullivan had been married about seven years. They formerly resided in New York on West Forty-seventh street, just east of the Windsor Hotel, which was destroyed by fire last April. The couple were thoroughly devoted, and Mr. O'Sullivan seemed to fairly idolize his wife. Mrs. O'Sullivan was born in Spain. Her father was an Englishman and her mother of Italian descent. She was a woman of remarkable beauty and a person of lovable disposition. She had made many friends about the hotel and was the life of the young society people there.

When a Press reporter called at the Hotel Hunterton yesterday he was unable to see Mr. O'Sullivan, who had denied himself to all callers. During the day many telegrams of condolence were received by Mr. O'Sullivan from prominent citizens in New York and other places.

The hop which was to have been given at the hotel Saturday night was omitted, and there was an air of so*lemnity about the house all of yester* day. Every guest who had known Mrs. O'Sullivan, felt deeply grieved at the sad affair and any semblance of hilarity was frowned upon. In the death of this beautiful woman the guests felt that they had sustained a great blow and this feeling so worked upon them that many absented themselves from their meals.

The funeral of Mrs. O'Sullivan was held Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock from St. Frances Xavier Roman Catholic church, West Sixteenth street, New York. Rev. Father Denny officiated. There was a Requiem mass.

Did Not Have a Long Run.

Screams of fire at 10:45 o'clock, Saturday avenue, aroused the men in fire headquarters on East Second street. They found a pile of old lumber belonging to Louis Willett, in the rear of the residence of Albert Pruden, next door to headquarters, all ablaze. There was a strong odor of kerosene around the fire. It was soon extinguished with buckets of water. The fire was discovered by Mrs. S. B. Robinson, of Watchung avenue, who gave the alarm.

Thrown From Her Wheel.

Miss Kittie Albert, of East Fourth street, while riding her wheel on Springfield hill Sunday, took a header and was thrown from her wheel, sustaining severe injuries to her arm.

EPISCOPALIANS NOW WORSHIP TOGETHER.

Congregations Now United and in Charge of Rector Downey.

PLAIN TALK TO HIS PEOPLE.

IMPLORES HIS PARISHIONERS TO HAVE CONFIDENCE IN HIM.

In Sunday's Sermon the New Minister Admonishes All to Do Their Duty and Recognize the Fact That He is the Spiritual Adviser and the Responsible Head of the Church.—Large Attendance.

The consolidation of the parishes of Holy Cross and the Church of the Redeemer went into effect Sunday. The Rev. W. Montgomery Downey, who was in charge of the latter parish, is now installed as rector of Holy Cross. He preached to his new charge for the first Sunday morning. There was a large and representative congregation. The processional hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," sung by the choir with much animation, was also joined in heartily by the congregation.

The rector's sermon was one of his best efforts and seemed to inspire the congregation to close attention. The text was from Hebrews xii, 11.

Comparisons were made with reference to the Olympian games and the contrast of the struggle to properly win the crown offered by Christ to all who sought Him and obeyed His commands. In speaking of the future of the parish Rev. M. Downey said in part:

"There is a broad field here for work and there's great room for growth and expansion. The members of the congregation should evince a greater love for the church than has been apparent in the past. Where the people were happily united by bonds of friendship better results were accomplished and the parish became stronger in catholic faith. A happy consummation could be realized if every man and woman would rise to the true sense of the situation."

*The rector said he wanted no misun*derstanding regarding his position among them. He was there to do his duty and he expected to perform it to the best of his ability, and he looked to the members of *his parish to per*form theirs. "I am here as your rector," he continued, "and as that rector I purpose to discharge the duties of my position as I think my duty dictates. I have been consecrated to this parish and to this people and have no hobbies and no prejudices. I shall stand or fall by own acts. The rector is the spiritual head of the church; while the vestry controls the temporal.

"I am here to do the gre*at*est good to the greatest number—here to save and help you. Trust me and I'll trust you. By putting faith in your rector you will give him confidence. If you have any thing to say to him be not ashamed to go to him and say it to his face, and not behind his back. Let us be friends—brothers. No one will do more for you than your rector who will strive his utmost to maintain peace and harmony. As Christians we should all strive for the salvation of souls.

"Work for the church and not for me personally or for any one man, for Christ alone is our leader and to Him alone should we look up to. The future success of this parish lies in your hands. Are your going to help me, not alone by your prayers, but also by your efforts? . I believe you will. You will find no one more ready than I to sympathize with in your sorrows or rejoice with you in your joys."

In conclusion Rev. Mr. Downey said that his best and last wish was that all might receive God's brightest and richest blessing. He surely believed they would if they would cooperate and work together for Christ, the church and His people.

The rector's words made a deep impression upon the congregation and were apparently favorably received. At the close of the services a number of the congregation remained to shake hands with Mr. Downey and assure him of their approval of his words and to express to him their desire to give him the support he asks and the encouragement that is justly due him.

Appointed an Aide-de-Camp.

Peter D. Meyers, of Post No. 187, G. A. R., of Brooklyn, and the father of Patrolman Nicholas Meyers, of this city, has just been appointed an aide-de-camp on the staff of Col. W. C. Johnson, who is acting commander-in-chief of the G. A. R.

WOULD BAR TROLLEY.

STRONG OPPOSITION AGAINST ARLINGTON AVENUE EXTENSION.

Several Big Property Owners do Not Want Street Railway on the Avenue—Engaged a Lawyer to Fight it.

The Arlington avenue extension of the trolley which has been painted with such rosy hues may not be realized after all. It has been discovered that there is likely to be a strong protest from a number of property-owners along that avenue.

Lawyer Winfield S. Angleman has been retained by some of the largest owners of land along that route and arrangements are now being made to fight the introduction of the trolley through that avenue. It is claimed that the Board of Education had no right to grant a right of way through the avenue pass the school, as they do not represent the property and are only acting for the people at large who do own it.

Other objections to the trolley are that the street is too narrow and that it would damage the property very much to have a trolley go through a street that is so narrow. The objectors are determined that the trolley shall not pass through the street and they say that they will carry their objections to the highest court to win their point.

John Kean Said to be Willing to Sell Trolley Interests for $300,000.

The North Jersey Enterprise says it has been informed upon excellent authority that the Biker syndicate has offered Senator Kean $280,000 for his street railroad in Elizabeth. On the other hand Mr. Kean has offered to sell the road for $300,000. Both *sides are firm and neither will split the dif*ference.

This apparently leaves the Westfield and Elizabeth Railway Company only a small sum to expend in getting through Roselle borough. They can afford $20,000, but if compelled to go any higher it would seem as a cold blooded business proposition that it would be better to make their peace with John Kean.

Meanwhile, nothing has been accomplished by the Council. Nor is it likely that anything will be accomplished before the middle of July.

MERVIN R. HUGHSON IS DEAD.

Formerly Resided in This City—Funeral Held Monday Afternoon.

Word has been received in this city of the death of Mervin R. Hughson, formerly a resident of this city. Mr. Hughson died near Chester, Hunterdon county, where he had been living for sometime past. For the past three years he was confined to his bed and was a great sufferer. Death came early Friday morning last.

Mr. Hughson resided in this city about ten years. A portion of the time he conducted an oyster place in the Marsh Building on Somerset street. He also worked for some time for Henry Clay Randolph, on his farm on the outskirts of this city. He was an uncle of Mrs. C. Frank French, of Washington avenue. The funeral services were held this afternoon at 1 o'clock from the church at Chester.

A Sure Sign of Prosperity.

That the United States has prospered during the past two years is beyond question. A sure sign of it is found in the enormous passenger traffic being done by the great transportation companies, both by land and water. One of the most popular trips for tourists in this country has always been the Hudson River by daylight. The Day Line steamers Albany and New York are now in commission. These beautiful steamers, the finest and fastest river steamers in the world, are in their usual well nigh perfect condition, and offer to travelers the maximum of pleasure and comfort. Being the only Day Line of steamers on the Hudson between New York and Albany, it offers to tourists the only opportunity of viewing the magnificent scenery for which the Hudson is renowned.

Miss Shinn's Appointment to Burma.

Miss Julia G. Shinn, who has been spending several months at Hazelline House, Newton Centre, Mass., preparatory to her work as a foreign missionary, has been appointed by the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of Boston to go to Burma. The Father Lights Society of a Baptist church at Brookline, Mass., has assumed her support on the foreign field. Miss Shinn is now at her home in Lakewood, N. J., and *expects to sail for Burma in Septem*ber."

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

RIOT ON TROLLEY CAR.

DRUNKEN ITALIANS PUT OFF AFTER A HARD FIGHT.

They Were Hooting and Yelling and Frightened Passengers—Black and Blue Eyes and Bloody Noses Resulted.

Bound Brook, July 3—There was a bloody riot it car No. 25, of the Brunswick Traction Company line last night, between a gang of drunken Italians and the railway employes. The car was bound from Bound Brook to New Brunswick and left the former place at 7:15 o'clock. It was filled with passengers, many of them being women and children. The two rear seats were occupied by ten brawny Italians who were badly intoxicated. The Italians were very noisy, and though warned by Conductor Boyle, of New Brunswick, to keep quiet, they paid no heed to his orders. When the car reached the John Y. Field farm the Italians were acting so disorderly, swearing and yelling, that the women passengers became frightened.

Boyle stopped the car and ordered the Italians to get off. They hooted and yelled at his orders, but did not move. Then Boyle, assisted by Motorman Brinker and Motorman Smith, of the Dunellen line, was going to New Brunswick, started in to expel the Italians from the car. A fierce fight ensued between the railway men and the Italians, which waged for several minutes, during which the Italians were finally pitched into the gutter. Several of the Italians received blackened blue eyes and bloody noses, and the railway men also suffered severely in the melee. As the car speeded away from the place where the unruly passengers had been dumped the Italians threw stones at the trolley vehicle. Several of the passengers narrowly escaped being hit by the missiles.

No arrests have been made.

SOCIETY AT THE HUNTERSTON.

Informal Euchre Party for Guests and Townspeople.

Social activity has resumed its way at the Hotel Hunterston after an interval of quietness out of respect for the late Mrs. O'Sullivan, whose sudden death came as such a great shock to the guests at the Hunterston where she had been a leader. The regular Saturday evening hop was given up last week for that reason.

Monday evening an informal euchre party was arranged by Mrs. Coleman and proved a pleasant feature. There were a number of local society folk who were present. The party was followed by the usual evening concert by the orchestra while some of the guests took the opportunity to dance.

There was quite a batch of guests who came out to spend the Fourth at the hotel and consequently the day proved a lively one. There were the usual concerts during the day and an informal dance was of particular interest to the young people during the evening hours.

THE COUNCIL MEETING.

Buckle said that the jail had recently been disinfected and is now in better condition.

During the past month eleven sewer permits were granted and sixteen building permits. A communication referring to the appointment of Edward C. Vail to a regular position in the fire department was read, and was referred to the fire and building committee.

Mr. Mellick, from the committee on the collection and assessment of taxes, reported that in relation to errors found in the work of assessment of the Martin Act commissioners, that they were being satisfactorily ex*plained and no difficulty would be ex*perienced in making proper corrections of the same.

Mr. Hetfield offered a resolution to the effect that the laws and ordinance and fire and building committees confer with the Plainfield Water Supply Company with a view of purchasing the plant and system in this city, as per suggestion offered by Mayor Rockfellow in his first message to the Council.

Mr. Barrows offered several resolutions before the meeting adjourned One was to the effect that proposals for macadamizing be received at the meeting to be held Thursday evening, July 20th, for macadamizing East Second street, Putnam avenue and Richmond street. Another resolution gave the Plainfield Street Railway Company the right to extend their turnout on Watchung avenue to East Second street providing they macadamize. This is done so that the increased number of cars can meet at the station.

Another resolution provided for the return to George White of his bond given as security for the macadamizing of Sycamore avenue by July 1st.

The closing act of the Council was the appropriation of $30 on a motion of Mr. Backle. This money is to be used to repair the town clock and keep it running and in repair for one year. Mr. Moraller will do the work. The Council then adjourned to Thursday evening, July 20th.

ON LOCAL GOLF LINKS.

Mrs. C. W. McCutchen received. They were assisted by the Misses Caroline Randolph, Grace Cooley, Katharine Dwight, Dorothea Wells and Margaret McCutchen.

In the evening the Park Club held one of its popular dances at the club house on Washington avenue. The young people were out in force. The patronesses were Mrs. W. J. Roome, Mrs. J. T. Scott, Mrs. Samuel Townsend and Mrs. W. L. Saunders. Mrs. Saunders was to have been present but the illness of her husband detained her at her home.

Tu sday was a quiet one at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club grounds, made so by the fact that at the last moment the officers decided to declare off the big tea and social features for the afternoon, on account of the joint contest between some of their members and the Park Golf Club for a silver cup. This had a tendency to make everything very tame at the club, and few enthusiasts visited the grounds throughout the day. Those who did make a visit found a very cool and inviting spot.

One big feature of the day was the breaking of the season's record by Willard Wadsworth. This player is one of the best in the club and of late his work has been exceptionally fine. He won over the course yesterday with a gross score of 81, and with a handicap of 1 his net was 80. This is practically the best score ever made on the course and the best this season. All of the other scores were close and showed remarkable playing. The event for the day was a "straight" handicap play for a silver cup and a set of golf balls, and both prizes were won by Mr. Wadsworth. The score in detail is as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Willard Wadsworth	81	1	80
W. T. Kaufman	99	18	81
W. F. Murray	102	18	84
Owen Fleming	95	10	85

This afternoon at 3 o'clock there will be a match game on the Hillside course between the crack team from St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., and a team from the home club. The visiting team played at Morristown Monday, and today they are the guests of Roy Cox, of West Seventh street, who attends the school. F. O. Reinhart, of this city, is a member of the visiting team and will play today. The home team will be composed of the following members: Willard Wadsworth, W. L. Glenney, C. W. Fisk, Frank Talmadge, Parker W. Mason, Morris Dumont and A. R. Fisk.

NEARLY BURNED TO DEATH IN A STORE

Tragic Accident in Crosby & Hill's Establishment.

HOTEL GUEST THE VICTIM.

RAN CRAZED ABOUT THE STORE FOR SEVERAL MINUTES.

Mrs. Sylvester J. O'Sullivan was the Victim—Supposed to Have Stepped on a Friction Match That Set Fire to Her Filmsy Summer Dress—Terribly Burned and Sent to the Muhlenberg Hospital

A frightful and perhaps fatal accident occurred Saturday a m. in the big department store of Crosby & Hill on Front street. The victim is Mrs. Sylvester J. O'Sullivan, who, in company with Mrs. Coleman, the wife of Major F. W. Coleman, proprietor of Hunterdon Hotel, was engaged in shopping. Mrs. O'Sullivan had left her friend, Mrs. Coleman, and walked toward the rear of the store.

Suddenly and without any warning of what was to happen Mrs. Coleman and the customers and clerks in the store were startled by unearthly shrieks. Shriek after shriek echoed through the big store.

The next those in the store knew a woman, her clothing all ablaze, ran screaming, shrieking down one of the aisles, staggering and clutching at her burning clothing. The sight so startled the saleswomen and the many customers that for a few seconds everyone stood spellbound. The sight was an appalling one and horrified all who saw it.

In a moment the salewoman realized the awful situation and at once recognized the unfortunate woman as the lady who had been seen to enter the store in company with Mrs. Coleman.

Back and fourth the woman staggered, the flames, which wrapped her frail form, leaping upward toward her neck and face. In less time than it takes to tell it Mrs. Sullivan's clothing was a sheet of flame and the handsome dress she wore was falling from her person.

One of the girls, with commendable presence of mind, rushed upstairs and notified Manager Carson of the awful affair. Mr. Canon hurried down and took in the situation at a glance. As soon as he could reach the woman he threw her a tablecloth which he hastily snatched from the stock. Wrapping the cloth about the burning form of the frenzied woman he finally succeeded in extinguishing the flames, but not until Mrs. O'Sullivan's clothing had been entirely burned from her body, and the unfortunate woman had been fright fully burned.

In the meantime some one, thinking the store was on fire, sent in an alarm from box 12, corner of Front and Somerset streets. The department responded quickly, but their services were not needed. Chief Doane and Assistant Chief Jennings and several members of the department assisted in carrying Mrs. O'Sullivan upstairs, where she was attended by Dr. Probasco. Subsequently she was removed in the ambulance to the hospital.

Exactly how the terrible accident happened no one can be found who appears to know.

Mrs. O'Sullivan was seen walking about the store looking at various articles. She finally reached the woodenware department, which is in charge of Lizzie O'Keefe. It was while Mrs. O'Sullivan was looking at some tooth picks that shd discovered she was on fire. Miss O'Keefe, the saleswoman, also noticed the fire at the same moment that Mrs. O'Sullivan shrieked at the sight of the blaze. Lizzie made a grap at the dress and attempted to snatch the garment from its waist. She made but the one clutch, when the frenzied woman made a dash for the front of the store, screaming and shrieking all time attempting to tear away the burning dress.

Up and down the aisles ran the frightened woman the blaze from her dress throwing off sparks and leaving a cloud of smoke in her wake.

Once when she reached the front entrance Isiah Curtiss, of 823 New Front street, Netherwood, who was with his wife on the opposite side of the street, saw the blazing woman and rushed across. He caught hold of the woman and partially succeeded in putting out the fire, but the unfortunate creature eluded his grasp and again rushed toward the back of the store. In his herioc efforts to save the woman Mr. Curtiss was severely burned about the hands and arms.

It is believed that the accident was brought about by Mrs. O'Sullivan stepping upon a snapping match while in the store. Another theory is advanced that Mrs. O'Sullivan's dress, which was en train, had caught up a stub of a lighted cigar in the street before entering the store and that her dress had caught fire from that, the fire have been smoldering for some time before bursting into a flame.

When Mrs. O'Sullivan left the Hunterston hotel with Mrs. Coleman she wore a light organdie costume with a leghorn hat.

Mrs. O'Sullivan is the wife of Sylvester J. O'Sullivan, vice-president of the New York Bonding Company, of New York. She has been a guest of Hotel Hunterston for about a month. Mrs. O'Sullivan is a beautiful woman, of the brunette type, tall and of fine physique.

When Mrs. O'Sullivan arrived at the hospital she was put under the influence of morphine, and the charred remains of her garments removed, showing a horrible condition of the flesh. It was badly burned, with the exception of one arm and part of the face, from the ankles up to the top of her head, the hair also being badly singed and burned. It is not thought that she breathed any of the hot air from the flames. The doctors do not believe that she will survive the injuries.

Rumors circulated to the effect that Mrs. O'Sullivan's dress became ignited from an oil or gasolene stove are without foundation. No stove or lighted lamp is to be found in that part of the store and none was there at the time of the accident to Mrs O'Sullivan.

PRETTY JUNE WEDDING

POPULAR COUPLE MARRIED IN THE GROOM'S HOME.

Miss Katherine Melcher and George Weida the Contracting Couple—Delightful Reception in Summer Garden.

One of the prettiest June weddings was that of June 28th when Miss Katherine Melcher, daughter of Augustus Melcher, of Elizabeth, was united in marriage to George Weida, of West Front street, by Rev. George Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church.

The wedding took place in the parlors of Mr. Weida's home. In one corner there was a pretty bower of flowers beneath which the popular couple were joined in wedlock in the presence of a hundred relatives and friends, mostly from out of town. The familiar wedding marches from Lohengrin and Mendelssohn were played by the orchestra as the bridal party entered the parlors and after the ceremony.

The bride was gowned in white organdie, with trimmings of white satin ribbon and carried a bouquet of bridal roses. She entered the parlors leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away in marriage. The bride was also attended by Miss Julia Hammer, of Elizabeth, as bridemaid. Her gown was white organdie over pink. The best man was Frank Haurand, of this city.

The ceremony was that used in the German reformed church and after the couple were wedded all then adjourned to the summer garden in the rear of the residence where a supper was served under the direction of Mrs. Markthals, of Elizabeth. The garden was decorated with Japanese lanterns and flowers. A feature of the reception was the dancing which took place in the garden.

The bride remembered the bridemaid in a pleasant way and presented her with a handsome opal ring, while the groom presented his best man with a cority scarf pin. The many valuable presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Weida attested in a measure to the high esteem in which they are held by their friends.

Among those who assisted in receiving with the bride and groom was Mrs. Charles Laury, formerly of Somerville, but now of Plainfield. Mr. and Mrs. Weida will reside on West Front street, where the wedding took place.

SAVING TO LAWYERS.

Revenue Stamps Not Required on Certificates of Search.

Since the enactment of the revenue law, and up to within a few days ago, the Supreme Court of the State affixed a 10 cent stamp to each certificate of search. Every abstract of title has to have one of these searches annexed, and the number turned out each day by the clerk is enormous, so that the stamps became a big item in the charges against the lawyers and title companies.

Assistant Supreme Court Clerk Charles N. Codding, of Westfield, went over the revenue law carefully soon after his appointment a few weeks ago, and gave it as his opinion that the revenue stamps could be left off the certificates. He drew up a statement of the case and submitted it to the treasury authorities at Washington, and they have sustained his view of the matter.

The saving that Mr. Codding has thereby effected for the patrons of the office amounts to considerable, and they have been complimenting him upon his success.

Dr. Hedges Elected Secretary.

The annual meeting of the Medical Society of New Jersey was concluded at Allenhurst Thursday. In the election of officers Dr. E. W. Hedges, of this city, was made corresponding secretary of the society. He was also placed on the standing committee.

ON THE FIELD OF EL CANEY

Thrilling Account of the Battle By Lieut. Wallace, U. S. Infantry.

A MEMORABLE MARCH.

Bodies of the Dead Soldiers Lined the Road and War Became a Stern Reality.

The Awful Rain of Bullets From a Spanish Stone Fort—Rivers of Lead Flowing in Each Direction—Cannon Fused the Range and Structure Was Quickly Demolished.

Lieut. William Wallace of the Seventh United States infantry, a nephew of Gen. Lew Wallace of "Ben Hur" fame, tells of his experience in the trenches of Santiago de Cuba as follows:

"At 4 a. m. June 24 we moved forward and marched about six miles over the worst road imaginable. All the roads here are of the same character. They were originally foot and mule paths, but centuries of rain has made them deep gullies scarcely wide enough for one man and his pack to march in single file. We passed a beautiful cocoanut grove about 8 in the morning. Everyone was nearly exhausted by that time. There were no horses or mules yet and I was myself carrying a pack. I believe it was the intention to camp here during the day, but the Spaniards thought differently.

"The rough riders (riders by courtesy only, since all were on foot) were exceedingly anxious to get into Santiago first. They thought they could simply walk over every Spaniard in sight and get there before dinner. The general needed an advance guard, so they, supported by the First and Ninth cavalry, were detailed as such.

"We had not been in camp more than half an hour when furious firing was heard far to the front. The Seventh, which throughout was at the head of the column was hurried forward, followed by the rest of the brigade—the Twelfth and Seventeenth infantry.

"No one who made that march will ever forget it. Exhausted to start with, the men soon began to lighten themselves of their packs. The road was simply lined with packs, blankets and haversacks. You could have walked afterward all the way on government blankets. Hour after hour we kept it up and at 2 o'clock we came to a halt where the morning firing had taken place. The firing, however, had ceased.

"The rough riders with our cavalry had driven the enemy back. The appearance of the infantry caused them to further retire. Why, I do not know, but 200 of our men could have held such a position for a week, perhaps a month. It was here we saw the first evidences of war. Our dead soldiers lined the road and the wounded were being taken to the hospitals a little in the rear. I can never forget the sight, and from that moment the picnic part of the war ended for me. War has been a stern reality at the sight of those dead soldiers.

An hour's rest here and again we are pushed to a better position. Another hour and we were in it finally. At 5 o'clock we went into camp for the night. On June 25, 26, 27, 28 and 29 we moved about, but never far. We did picket duty and our front was the assembly of troops in the rear. June 30, at 4 p. m., the brigade was formed, and in a pouring rain we set out. But where to we had not the slightest idea. At 9 that evening we had marched around to the north side of the city, about three miles east of El Caney.

"At daylight, July 1, we were ordered forward without breakfast, toward Caney. At 7 some firing was heard in the front and the march was hastened.

"The worst of it all was, that no one seemed to know where the fire was coming from. There was, as I afterward saw, a stone fort on the left and a block house to the right. The bullets were coming thicker and thicker. Death was all around.

"The order finally came to advance. The company crossed a bullet-shower, and held in good order. I never expected to get across alive. Very soon all the companies were all behind the crest commanding the town. The fun began when all the companies commenced to fire into the town. It was rivers of lead flowing each way. The fusilade was awful, yet to rise so much as to your knees was certain death. Finally, after a whole day of useless firing, the cannon got the range of the stone fort and silenced it. This was the key to the Spanish position, and after its fall the firing grew less heavy. At 5 o'clock the Spanish firing ceased altogether, and a little later we were withdrawn."

The Naval Engineer in Battle.

If you were sealed up in a heated iron tank floating on the sea and hammered at by missiles which now and then let in daylight and splinters, you would be in a position as they can't stop to think about it. Keep that head cool, smother it in oil, down it in water! Keep it cool, or the game's up! That is the way an engineer on the spot would be where they fall, but the men in the engine room have to keep the splinters out of the machinery. Steam pipes are injured. Send 'em on. Crawl behind the boilers, and stop that steam leak! Impossible to shut off anything Scalded? Never mind. It's all in the day's work. Don't let the water down. Pass the coal lively. And while you are about it, put out that fire in the bunkers. In the lower engine rooms the thermometer shows 130 degrees in front of the ventilating blowers; in the upper engine rooms, 190 degrees.—Engineering Journal.

STORY OF KANG YU WEI.

Romance in Which Fate of Chinese Empire and Great Powers Were Involved.

JUST ESCAPED DEATH.

Empress Dowager Fearing His Influence Over the Emperor Offered Reward for His Assassination.

Under Kang's Influence the Emperor Issued an Extraordinary Series of Edicts Many of Which Were Equivalent to a Revolution—Increased Liberty for the Press—Edict for Free Schools.

The story of Kang Yu Wei, the great Chinese reformer, is one of the great romances of the age. It is a romance in which the fate of the Chinese Empire and the high politics of the great powers of the world are involved.

Kang gained the confidence of China's Emperor and almost brought about a reform of the Celestial Empire on modern lines. Then he was checkmated by the Dowager Empress and condemned to death. Only with the aid of British war ships did he escape. There is now a reward for his assassination.

A child of the common people, whose father was a small shopkeeper, and whose grandfather was a coolie, Kang rose from obscurity by force of brain and determination alone.

When the reform movement began to break out openly in China, a year or two ago, Kang appeared at the head of it. He was a very Dr. Parkhurst. In company with the Rev. Mr. Reid, a Presbyterian missionary, he organized a club and started the first newspaper ever published in Pekin, except the Official Gazette, which has been going for 3,000 years. They called the new paper Chinese Progress, and had all times, much to the alarm and indignation of the Empress Dowager, the Princes and all conservatives. He became a sort of tutor to the Emperor.

Kang read to the Emperor the life of Peter the Great and inspired him with a desire to emulate that remarkable monarch, who lifted Russia out of barbarism. Through Kang the Emperor also became familiar with the development of Japan, and resolved that China should not be left behind its near neighbor in the march of progress. The Emperor became so much interested in Kang that he had them read to him twice, and Kang's visits to the palace sometimes lasted eight hours, exciting intense anger and jealousy among the Court officials.

Under Kang's influence the Emperor Kwang Su issued a series of extraordinary edicts. One of them granted the people liberty to write home for everybody, and said that "The Board of Censors will hereafter be delighted with the special duty of receiving and presenting to His Majesty all petitions that may be presented by scholars not in office or men of the people, persons hitherto debarred from addressing the throne, except through their respective Viceroys or Governors. The Board of Censors is warned not to put obstacles in the way of persons who wish to communicate with His Majesty, for only through such sources can the Emperor learn the exact state of affairs throughout the empire."

This proceeding was regarded as equal to a revolution by the Conservatives. Mr. Kang was in great danger, but nevertheless he went ahead. He persuaded the Emperor to sign another edict recognizing the freedom of the press, which was issued on August 9, 1898. In this edict newspaper writers were granted "the special privilege of writing on political subjects in order to enlighten those in authority, and ordered that no effort to be examined as to their knowledge of modern history.

He further brought about the abolition of all sinecures, bows and arrows as weapons in the army, and also the use of fireworks and bad odors.

Wang Tu Ho, for a quarter of a century Tutor and Grand Man at court except Prince Kung, had been the Emperor's tutor, and had great influence with him. He was the leader of the conservative party, and undertook to oppose Reformer Kang, but he met with disaster. He was stripped of his offices and honors, banished from Pekin and forbidden to ever enter the gates of the city again. Several others who attempted to oppose the young Canton reformer met with similar fate. It is believed that he, with the assistance of Kang Yen Hoon, brought about one of the numerous degradations and banishments.

One of the great objects of Kang's policy was to bring about honesty in the financial affairs of the empire. The Empress Dowager was the greatest thief of public moneys, and it was Kang's boldness in this direction that led to his final downfall.

In 1887 the sum of $42,000,000 was set aside for the creation of a navy. After the battle ships had been partly paid for the Empress Dowager appropriated the rest, spending a large sum on the repair of the Echo Garden. Later another $42,000,000 was set aside for the construction of railroads, which she also largely misappropriated.

Kang fled from China, being threatened with assassination by the Empress Dowager's emissaries.

TROLLEY FINALLY REACHES PLAINS.

First Car Was Run Friday Afternoon.

THE DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

A SPREAD AT EMERY'S FOLLOWED THE OPENING.

Two Open Cars Made the Trip—Line All Completed to Terrill Road—Temporary Trolley Wire Used Remainder of the Distance—Roadbed Was Remarkably Smooth all the Way.

The hour of awakening for Scotch Plains is at hand. After slumbering for centuries on the fertile plains at the foot of the Watchung Mountains, the quiet hamlet has at last heard the shrill clang of the trolley car gong and the hum of the motors beneath. The trolley has reached the Plains after five years of effort. Friday afternoon marked the first appearance of that active agent of modern civilization in Scotch Plains. It was celebrated in rousing fashion with a trolley party and spread.

According to the understanding under which the Plainfield Street Railway Company secured the franchise for the line to Scotch Plains, the line should be open and cars running before July 1st. So it was necessary to do a little hustling to have the line ready for use Friday afternoon. To celebrate the opening of the line, Superintendent John Adelmann, of the street railway, arranged to take a large party of prominent citizens of Plainfield and Scotch Plains over the line and give them a spread on their arrival at the end of the new extension.

Two cars were gaily decorated with the Stars and Stripes for the occasion and gathered their load of passengers at the North Avenue station at 2:24 o'clock. The cars were open ones, Nos. 19 and 20.

Superintendent Adelmann was the master hand that directed operations. He was everywhere. Col. Hine, of the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company, came here from Westfield to do honor to the opening of the new line. He and his two guests, Captain Alsdee and W. P. Martin, of Newark, occupied the front platform of the leading car. H. C. VanEmburgh, engineer for the trolley company, accompanied them. Former Councilman Leonard Spangenberg and John B. Brown represented the stockholders of the trolley company among the guests. L. W. Serrell, Jr., of the company and also contractor, was there to see the start, but could not join the party.

Among the other distinguished guests who graced the occasion with their presence were Postmaster E. H. Bird, Councilman J. F. Buckle, Councilman Frank H. Smith, Councilman Henry Liefke, Justice Elmore D. Moffett, Justice Vincent W. Nash, Justice J. E. Mosher, Former Justice William Newcorn, Former Councilman W. A. Westphal, Former Councilman L. B. Woolston, H. E. Bowen, John D. Runyon, Charles W. Runyon, manager of the N. Y. and N. J. Telephone Co., Harry C. Runyon, Andrew Love, Sr., Alex. Mallison, T. A. Ouming, J. W. VanSickle and "Count" J. K. VanNess.

A delegation from Scotch Plains, headed by Town Clerk E. L. Hand, Town Committeeman Theodore Brookman, George R. Nichols, William C. Stansbery, Frank Allen, William S. Emery, C. N. Flanders, Judge Joseph Clark and Judge George Schick, came down to join the party and be able to tell their townsfolk that they were on the first car to enter the Plains.

After everybody was seated and those who couldn't be seated, owing to lack of space, found standing room, the party was taken for a ride over the line to Dunellen and return. Then the start on the Scotch Plains line was made.

The cars have been running out to Netherwood avenue regularly for the past few days. That part of the line was passed without incident. When the cars reached the property of "Count" VanNess, the guests began to stand up and look around. The line was all completed through to Terrill road, the city limits. Beyond there, the trolley wire had not been regularly fastened to the cross wires and hung slack, supported by bare iron wires instead. The cars were compelled to go slowly after that and Scotch Plains came in view and the trip to the very end of the line was made without accident.

Everybody noticed how smoothly the cars ran without bump or jolt and there was general commendation for the construction of the line. There were several hundred laborers at work along the track and they cheered the cars as they passed. Edgar I. Serrell, superintendent for the contractors, met the cars and accompanied them to the end of the line. The double track was completed as far as Terrill road and the excavation made for the second track the rest of the way.

Those who expected that Scotch Plains would turn out with some wild demonstrations of great joy at the arrival at last of the trolley, were sadly disappointed. A solitary American flag waved from a house near the terminal to mark the approbation of the villagers. But as one of the guests remarked: "Scotch Plains is asleep yet. It will take the trolley a little time to wake it up."

Then the hundred and fifty men climbed out of the cars and followed Col. Hine and Engineer VanEmburgh to Emery's hotel, where the good things awaited them. Two kegs of beer, sundry bottles of soft drinks and a variety of sandwiches and other eatables were awaiting them in the garden in the rear of the hotel. They drank success to the new line and spent a genial hour eating, drinking and talking together.

At 4:30 o'clock the guests gathered at the cars again and were photographed. Then came the ride homeward, while the people of Scotch Plains remained to talk over the great event.

READY FOR BUSINESS.

NINE RECEIVED DIPLOMAS AT PLAINFIELD BUSINESS COLLEGE.

Commencement Exercises Held Last Friday in the College Rooms—Address by Rev. Mr. Gardiner—A Pleasant Time.

Nine young women have just completed the thorough course of study at the Plainfield Business College and last Friday received their diplomas in formal recognition of their good work and readiness to begin a business career. The commencement exercises of the college were held last night in the hall, City National Bank building. A programme preceded the presentation of the diplomas. A reception to the graduating class and their friends followed.

The hall was crowded to overflowing by the relatives and friends of the nine young women who had come to honor this event that marked the close of study and the beginning of business duties. The Ladies' Orchestra was present and rendered a number of pleasing selections between the other parts of the programme. Martin Korff, violinist, gave two solos during the evening.

There was the introduction, and then after an interval of music, an essay by Miss Elizabeth H. Voorhees, of Somerville, the honor member of the graduating class. Her subject was: "Woman's Debut in the Business World." She handled the subject excellently and her essay was listened to with interest.

The address of the evening was by Rev. George Gardiner, pastor of the Grace M. E. church. It was not long enough to tire, and it combined wit and humor with the more serious parts of his talk. He spoke a few words of advice to the graduates and bade them take advantage of the opportunities that the excellent course they had just concluded gave them.

A well given recitation by Miss Elizabeth E. Hoagland was followed by a short speech by Rev. A. A. Phelps to the graduates and the subsequent presentation of the diplomas.

Miss Elizabeth H. Voorhees, of Somerville, took both commercial and shorthand courses and made an excellent showing in both. The other two graduates from the commercial course were the Misses Elizabeth D. Kepler and Matilda Bennett. The graduates in the shorthand course were the Misses Carrie S. Boice, Harriet F. Lewis and Clara Shepherd, of the city, Mayme M. Myers and Jennie Martin, of Bound Brook, and Margart Borroughs, of Bayonne.

An informal reception followed to which all were invited. It was held in the other class rooms where refreshments were served and a very pleasant social hour was spent.

Rev. A. A. Phelps, the principal, and his assistants were present and received the congratulations of all at the successful showing made by the young women under their instruction.

THEIR LAST RECITAL.

Creditable Practice of Miss Marsh's Piano Pupils.

The pupils of Miss Anna O. Marsh met Thursday morning for their last monthly gathering of the season. The primary class opened the programme with exercises on the table, clavier and piano. Their work was very satisfactory, and proved the excellence of Virgil method and the inestimable value of the Virgil practice clavier.

Solos followed, interspersed with duets, duo and quartettes. The latter were a minuet by Boccherrin and the Hallelujah chorus from the Messiah by Handel. A few guests from the families of the pupils were present, and enjoyed the rendering of the programme.

The pupils of Miss Minnie S. Marsh gave their closing monthly recitital yesterday afternoon, and rendered an interesting programme.

Lorraine Water Company Absorbed.

The Lorraine Water Company, which was organized several years ago by S. D. Drake, has passed into the hands of the Union Water Company. The business of the Lorraine Company will be carried on from the office of the Union Water Company.

GRADUATION AT THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

Interesting Closing Exercises Held Friday Night.

HONORS WERE AWARDED.

TWO SCHOLARSHIPS FOR ST. ELIZABETH'S ACADEMY.

Misses Frances Hillman and Anna Ryan Won First Honors—A Splendid Talk Given to the Pupils by Father Smyth—Many Received Honorable Mention—Patriotic Operetta Was Produced.

The graduating exercises of St. Mary's Parochial School came to a close last Friday, and were attended with even greater success than on the previous evening. The attendance was very large. The programme was carried out with precision and in a perfect manner.

The first part was devoted to the presentation of an operetta entitled "Old Glory, Or the Boyes of '76." There were two acts, "The Boys in Council," and "The Tramps." In part second the boys did some fine drilling. All were dressed in the Continental uniform, presenting an attractive picture. The cast of characters was as follows: "Gen. Putnam," A. McKeon; Col. Slocum, A. Traynor; Major Sniffin, H. Shannon; Joe Mason, T. Carty; Nat Hale, H. Kearns; Hiram Tucker, T. Parent; Silas Story, J. Conway; Simple Peter, T. Mack; Tom Payson, J. Traynor; Hans Schneider, J. Kyle; Red Rube, M. Kiely; Weary Ike, W. Lawlor; Spider, J. Garrity.

Following this play Miss Anna Anna Daley gave a vocal solo entitled "Ask Me No More." She received hearty applause, as did also the vocal selection, "Life Has No Power," by the Misses Daley, Frances Hillman and Mamie Harding.

The next number on the programme was a lawn tennis drill given by the following young girls: Madeline McIntyre, Bessie Shea, Nellie Hannigan, Loretta Flanagan, Jessie Somers, Mamie Brady, Mamie McCauley, Maggie Tracy, Susie Goff, Lizzie Day, Katy Ryan, Lillie Kotzler, Hannie Lanahan, Minnie Fisher, Mary Hillman and Agnetta Fairis. These girls were drilled by sister Mary Esther. The costumes were arranged by Mrs. Frank McInerney. The drill was finely given and reflected great credit on Sister Mary Esther.

At this time Rev. Father Westman presented the honors to the graduates. The first honor graduates were Miss Frances Hillman and Miss Anna Ryan, both of whom secured gold medals, and by their hard work have secured the four years' scholarship at St. Elizabeth's academy at Madison, this State, this making four scholars from this school to win such scholarships. They were in competition with scholars from some forty various schools. Others to receive honorable mention were Miss Mary Doll, Miss Julia Lutz, Miss Mary Burke, Master Henry Shannon and Miss Anna Daley. There was also a long list of scholars in the lower grades who received honorable mention.

The presentation of honors was followed by the valedictory by Miss Frances Hillman, which was an excellent address and showed great care in preparation and execution.

One of the features of the programme was the address to the graduates by Father Smyth. He praised them for their earnest efforts and wished them success as they leave the school. He spoke of the excellent opportunities in the school for advancement along educational lines, and spoke words of praise for the Sisters, who are instructors.

The last number on the programme was the singing of the "Graduates Farewell," which was composed by Miss Frances Hillman, after which the exercises came to a close.

During the evening Miss Mary Smith presided at the piano and Miss Kate Flynn at the organ. The musical numbers were well given and the singing was enjoyed by all.

Chinese Prescriptions.

The taking of a first dose of Chinese medicine is an ordeal which can be better imagined than described. It is invariably a bitter concoction, but of these only some 600 are in general use. Whether the patient takes the remedies of the Asiatirian or the native, he is requested to present himself every day before the doctor for another pulse examination, so that every change in his condition of mind may be noted and the prescription may be varied accordingly.

The Chinese are clever chemists in the line of pharmaceutical preparations, and prepare many medicines for their own use in the form of pills and powders; but these are employed by the Chinese physicians in treating the aliments of white people only to a limited extent. The reason given is that the simple, hot decoctions of the fresh root or plant are the best form, because the most readily assimilated into the system.

SUMMER CAMPAIGN ON THE CITY STREETS

Great Activity Noticeable in Street Department.

WHERE REPAIRS ARE MADE.

PARK AVENUE PRESENTS THE MOST STRIKING COMPARISON.

West Seventh Street Receiving Much-Needed Repairs—Boundary Streets are "Turnpiked" by Contractor—Culverts Repaired and Rebuilt—Deplorable State of West Fourth Street, West of Plainfield.

The regular summer campaign on the city streets is continuing with vigor. A number of the streets have been put in condition and others are being labored with with the prospect of good results.

Park avenue presents the greatest comparison of any thoroughfare in the city. Between Seventh and Fourth streets, Park avenue is the admiration of every horseman and wheelman who drives or rides over it. North of Fourth street Park avenue is something to be dreaded, thanks to the new storm sewer and former excavations. Wheeling over it has become singularly thrilling.

West Seventh street, between Park avenue and Division street, is the present abiding place of the steam roller, and that street will soon assume an appearance as of old when it was such a favorite ride for local cyclists. The street, west of Division street, is in need of repairs which will be made later in the season. Park avenue, south of Seventh street, is receiving a new top dressing of crushed stone that will greatly improve it.

A number of the dirt roads, which are boundaries of the city, are receiving temporary improvements through the joint efforts of the city and Fanwood borough and township. Terrill and Cushing roads and Woodland avenue are being "turnpiked" by Michael Walsh, who holds the contract for the work. Leland avenue, which is also a dirt road, has been included in the job although not a boundary line. The city road machine is on duty there. The roads are being cleaned, leveled and properly crowned and the gutters scraped.

An old culvert at the intersection of West Seventh street and Central avenue has been replaced and put in working order. The large culvert under Netherwood avenue, near the old railroad embankment, has been rebuilt and an extra 24-inch pipe laid there in case of emergency to carry the little brook there under the roadway.

West Fourth street, between Plainfield and Grant avenues, is in decidedly poor condition. The Plainfield Street Railway has completed the job of laying its track on the new grade established there, which was below the old level of the tracks. That made the removal of considerable earth necessary. That part of West Fourth street never was very good, but the dirt that has been left in uneven heaps and now makes rather mountainous riding, is far worse than before. The extra earth is to be removed some time, Street Commissioner Gavett says. Wheelmen who pass that way usually take to the sidewalk.

A SURVIVOR OF THE MAINE.

One of Uncle Sam's Skilled Gunners is Visiting in Plainfield.

Alfred Johnson, a survivor of the battleship Maine, which was blown up in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, is visiting in Plainfield at the home of William H. Clum on East Sixth street. Mr. Johnson was injured so badly in the explosion that he was in the Chelsea Hospital at Boston for a considerable time; in fact he has never fully recovered from the terrible injuries he received on that memorable night. However, he recovered sufficiently to again enter the service and was on the Marblehead during the bombardment of Santiago, being first gun captain on that cruiser. Since the war with Spain Mr. Johnson has been honorably discharged, after a service in Uncle Sam's Navy of about twelve years, during which time he has visited almost every country on the globe. Mr. Johnson is of fine physique and before the casualty to the Maine was of robust health. Since being retired he has made application for a pension, and it would seem as though he certainly deserved it.

HAS BECOME A SOLDIER.

Fugitive From Justice Now En Route to the Philippines.

Charles Bogart, who, while under arrest charged with an assault, escaped from Constable Gjettleson about two weeks ago, has been heard from by his brother in this city. Bogart is now in San Francisco with a regiment in the Regular Army, having enlisted a few days after his flight from the clutches of the officer. This information will be good news no doubt to the gullelees constable, who has been unmercifully guyed by his friends since he allowed Bogart to outwit him.

THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

Benefits to Commerce Which Will Follow the Opening of the Canal.

WILL OPEN NEW FIELDS.

Only Forty Miles Divide the Two Great Highways of Commerce.

Reasons Given for the Construction of This Great Junction of the Seas—Reports of Mortality on Isthmus Greatly Exaggerated—Colored Laborers Can Work the Year Round Without Danger.

The case for the severance of the isthmus which unites the northern and southern American continents, and this divides the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans, is presented by a glance at the map of the Western Hemisphere, and, to the mind of one capable of discerning the trend of events in the days in which we live, is established by a study of the same map.

The Atlantic and Pacific form the two great highways of the planet. To them all others are subsidiary—adjuncts, or in the relationship of attenuated extensions—whatever their character, their dimensions of their position. At the Central American isthmus these two great through routes, upon which the commerce of the world and the progress of the nations depend, are divided by a neck of land, which, at any rate on one of the proposed lines of operation, is but forty miles in width—but five miles longer than the channel excavated by local enterprise for the Manchester ship canal.

If it were necessary to emphasize by any particular claim of special advantage, the general benefit to commerce which would accrue generally follow the opening of the inter-oceanic canal, we would base that particular claim, not upon the shortening of the distance between the eastern and western seaboards of the United States, or upon the political gain to accrue from the reduction of distance between the naval outfitting ports on the northern Atlantic and the Philippine islands—though these results would be important—but on the effect which would be produced upon the tropical districts of the west by the construction and working of the canal.

There are two reasons for the construction of this great junction of the seas—reasons so many and so weighty that they have impressed men of persistency and enterprise for generations past, from Hernando Cortes to Ferdinand de Lesseps; men who were in advance of their time, men who saw clearly when other men were blind, men who agreed as to the necessity for the junction, but who differed as to the manner in which it should be effected. Out of their differences rose the different schemes propounded from time to time; for a canal on the Darien line; for a canal on the Panama line; for a waterway formed of junction canals at either extremity and of an existing inland sea on the Nicaragua line; for a ship railway on the Tehuantepec line, which was the project of the late Captain Eads; and others of lesser importance.

Of these schemes but two survive—the Panama canal and the Nicaragua waterway—and their respective promoters and supporters struggle for the mastery.

The termini of the canals are Colon on the Atlantic coast and Panama on the Pacific. A line joining these two points would run approximately north-west and southeast. The distance between them is 42 miles measured on the Panama fly, and 49 miles, measured on the line of the canal.

It is commonly reported that, in the course of the construction of the Panama railroad, which was carried out by an American company, and of which the route is nearly identical with that of the proposed canal, the laying of the upper or the Atlantic slope of a Chinaman were operations which were conducted concurrently by the constructing company. There is much of plausible exaggeration about the statement, but undoubtedly the mortality was very heavy in those days, as it was also in the days of the old canal company.

It has been proved by trial that colored laborers can work all the year around in the isthmus; that, of the number employed, at least 97 per cent may be expected to be at work in per fect health at one time; that yellow fever and the other dread ailments of tropical swamps are not indigenous to Panama; and that, with ordinary care Europeans may live there for years together without experiencing, by reason of such residence, any serious increase of the peril of death in which all men always stand.—The Engineering Magazine.

GOOD WORK OF JUNIORS.

REVIEW OF PAST YEAR AMONG YOUNG ENDEAVORERS.

Reports Showed That Much Progress Had Been Made — Enjoyable Programme Concluded the Meeting.

The annual meeting and closing exercises of the Junior Christian Endeavor society of Trinity Reformed church was held Thursday afternoon. The annual reports showed progress. The secretary, Lida A. Wyman, presented her report, which stated that the society started October 6th, 1898, with fifty-eight members, but during the past year it has increased to ninety members. The birthday committee succeeded in collecting 16 cents. The social committee held two cake and candy sales during the year. The sum of $20 was realized from the first one for the sinking fund of the church, and the second one netted $15 for Dr. French's Memorial Fund. The missionary committee succeeded in raising $13 14 from the "Treasure Houses," which amount was given to Miss Winn, a missionary. The flowers and scrap-book committees also received mention for excellent work accomplished.

The report of the treasurer, Morris Brokaw, showed that from all sources $61 50 was raised, and that $50 was disbursed, leaving a balance on hand of $2 55.

This concluded the reports and a very enjoyable programme was then presented by the Juniors, including recitations as follows: "God's Loving Child," Beaulah VanWinkle; "The Apple Tree," Perry Holder; "The Jewels," Elsie Tier; "The Balance," Anna Holder.

The last part of the programme consisted of an exercise in which faith, hope, charity, peace, justice and patience were represented. The part of queen was taken by Hazel Martin, while Mary Vail, Anna Bodine, Catherine Gray, Ida Tier, Violet VanWinkle and Mamie Davenport took the other parts with equal excellence.

The closing number was a song entitled "Good-Bye," by Anna Holder and Anna Randall, after which the society joined heartily in singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." The society will not meet again until next fall.

LOCAL DEMOCRATS ALIVE

PROPOSE TO DISPUTE THE SWAY OF ELIZABETH LEADERS.

Big Political Picnic Planned to Stir up Enthusiasm in Party Ranks—The State Leaders to be Invited.

For the first time in several years the Democrats of the territory around Plainfield are preparing to take an active part in county politics this fall. In years gone by the Democrats of Plainfield have been content to send a small delegation to the county conventions in Elizabeth in order to keep up appearances, but the delegations seldom figured much in the proceedings. Several of the younger members of the party are bestirring themselves now and propose to send a delegation to the county convention this fall that will try to make a combination with other sections of the county to defeat the heretofore certain rule of the Elizabeth leaders.

One of the instruments devised to bring about such a result by stirring up an interest in the party is the holding of a big political picnic in the vicinity of Plainfield the latter part of July or the first of August. The project is already assuming shape and the first of next week a meeting of those interested will be held to set the ball in motion. In order to make it an important function it is not intended to restrict it to a Union county affair, but also to engage Somerset county Democrats in the scheme—that is those who live in North Plainfield.

The picnic will be held at some convenient point for both places—possibly the historic Washington rock on Watchung mountain—and distinguished Democrats from all over the State will be invited to attend. Here, it is calculated, an impetus to party interest will be given, and out of it a strong organization will grow.

Several Plainfielders are grooming themselves for nominations to some of the important offices to be filled at the next election and when the proper time comes the organization will take up the claims of one and go to the convention prepared to nominate him for the office.

Franklin Council Officers

At the meeting of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., held Thursday evening, arrangements were made for the members to attend the annual field day exercises to be held at Waverly Park in September. The following officers were elected: Councilor, F. Harpense; past councilor, Ephriam Compton; vice councilor, Robert M. Clark; recording secretary, Horace G. Adams; financial secretary, T. A. Kurzhals, Jr.; treasurer, A. G. Adams; trustee, Robert M. Clark.

BANKS PLEA TO CLEARING HOUSE.

Protest Against Paying Charges for Handling Business.

COMMITTEE WILL ARGUE.

PRINCIPAL BANKS OF NEW JERSEY IN THE MOVEMENT.

United States Senator John Kean One of the Committee That Will Visit the Officers of the Clearing House—The New Jersey Banks Want to be on to the Discretionary List of Clearing House.

The banks in the larger cities of New Jersey, with the exception of those in Newark, Jersey City, Hoboken and Paterson, have organized a move on the New York Clearing House, in protest against payment for the collection of their checks in New York, or, in other words, they want to be placed on the discretionary list of the Clearing House and not to be considered country banks, and have to pay for their banking.

Many of the banks have sent petitions to William A. Nash, chairman of the Clearing House Committee, and they will follow this petition by the personal visit of a committee of five presidents, appointed at a meeting held in Newark recently, which was attended by twenty bank presidents.

This action on the part of the banks is the result of the recent rule adopted by the New York Clearing House charging one-tenth of one per cent on all country checks, except those from correspondents in certain cities which, for special reasons, have been placed on the free or par list. This rule went into effect nearly three months ago, the Clearing House deciding that no change in its operation should be made for at least three months. This limitation will expire July 3d, and the bankers are hopeful that the Clearing House will then remove the ban from many New Jersey cities.

At the meeting of bank officers representing banking institutions in the northern part of the State, Bird W. Spencer, president of the People's Bank and Trust Company of Passaic, was chosen chairman, and a committee of five was appointed to see the authorities of the clearing house committee. This committee is composed of Senator E. C. Stokes, of this city; Bird Spencer, of Passaic; Donald McKay, of Englewood; Theodore Little, of Morristown, and United States Senator John Kean, of Elizabeth. This committee will visit New York Saturday.

FRIENDS SERENADED HIM

FREEHOLDER MOBUS AND BRIDE RECEIVED A VISIT.

They Did Not Expect It and Were Greatly Surprised, But Soon Recovered and Acted as Hosts in Fine Humor.

When Augustus Mobus, a member of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders from North Plainfield township, and a prominent Democratic politician of that bailiwick, went to the home of George Hauser, of Duer street, Wednesday night, and was quietly married to Miss Annie Mary Kunzelman, it was his desire to keep the wedding quiet for a few days. But that he signally failed to do so was evidenced Thursday by the din made by a party of seventy-five friends who learned of the marriage yesterday afternoon and determined to give Freeholder Mobus and his bride a serenade that they would not forget in many a day.

Armed with drums, fish horns and a number of cannon firecrackers, the party met after darkness had set in and proceeded to march to the home of the newly married couple in Washingtonville. Here they suddenly rent the air with all sorts of hideous noises to apprise the couple that the secret was out and that they must accept congratulations. The din was kept up for several minutes, and then the groom decided that there was nothing to do but accept the inevitable and so he went forth and invited the serenaders in.

The house was soon filled with merry-makers and Mr. and Mrs. Mobus adapted themselves as hosts in short order. Refreshments were provided in plenty and a general good time enjoyed till a late hour.

Realty Changes

The following real estate transfers have been recorded from North Plainfield in the Somerset County Clerk's office:

Wm. H. Stiles et ux., to Charles B. Holmes, $2,800; Wm. S. Stiles et ux., to Charles B. Holmes, $2,500; Charles B. Holmes et ux., to George Lingard, $1,800; George Lingard to Charles B. Holmes, $1; Andrew E. Kenney et ux., to Wm. Lunger, $1; Martha Lunger and husband to Elizabeth Kenney, $1; James D. Cleaver to Louis H. Schenck, $1.

Pythians Elect.

There was election of officers at the meeting of Peter Denaco Lodge, No. 74, Knights of Pythias, Friday evening which resulted as follows: Chancellor commander, David Bowden; vice chancellor, Robert L. Lee; prelate, J J. Crouse; master of work, Robert Kenney; inner guard, Alfred Jacobson; outer guard, Peter Stratton.

AN INSTRUCTOR WEDDED

A. B. MEREDITH, OF HIGH SCHOOL, QUIETLY MARRIED.

Ceremony Took Place at Home of Bride, Miss Adelaide Spencer, Near Boston Mass.—Will Shortly Return to Plainfield.

When Albert Barrett Meredith, science instructor at the Plainfield High School, returns to his duties in this city, next September, he will be accompanied by a wife. Thursday afternoon Mr. Meridith was quietly married to Miss Adelaide Spencer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Spencer, of Stoneham, Mass., at the home of the bride's parents. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. W. H. Meredith, of Lowell, Mass., father of the groom, at 4:30 o'clock, in the presence of only the near relatives of the young couple.

The summer will be spent by Mr. and Mrs. Meredith at the mountains and seashore. In the fall they will come to Plainfield and take up their residence here.

Miss Spencer was a graduate of from Wellesley College in 1897. Mr. Meredith graduated from Wesleyan College with honors in 1895. He has been in the Plainfield High School for two years, and has brought the scientific department of the local High School up to its present state of efficiency, which is considered the best in the State. He has also introduced the elements of natural science in the primary and grammar grades. He has a number of friends in this city, where he has made himself well liked.

UNITY LODGE ELECTS.

Two Prominent Pythians Were Guests of the Lodge Last Night

The annual election of officers in Unity Lodge, No. 102, Knights of Pythias, was held last week. It resulted as follows: Chancellor Commander, James Stansfield; vice chancellor, Edward Smith; prelate, Charles Randolph; master of work, Edward Chappell, master at arms, Andrew Drew; inner guard, R. H. Loughlin; outer guard, Frank Rathbun.

Past Chancellor Deming, of Erie Lodge, Cleveland, O., was present at the meeting and told the Plainfield Knights the methods in vogue in Ohio. Past Chancellor McLane, of Ashland Lodge, New York city, was present and entertained with several recitations.

Patriotic Sons Elect.

The following officers have been elected to serve Washington Camp, No. 38, P. O. S. of A., for the ensuing year: President, George Taylor; vice-president, Harry Leek; master of forms, Harry Soden; conductor, Harry Baker; inside guard, Herbert Taylor; outside guard, John Ayres; delegates to State convention at Jersey City, Daniel VanWinkle, I. N. Wyckoff, Frank VanWinkle, Harry Leek and George Taylor.

Mizpah Lodge Election.

The following officers have just been elected by Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, U. O. of I. O. L.: Past lady, Mrs. Daniel Page; noble lady, Mrs. Ira Riker; vice lady, Mrs. Pearson; lady reporter, Mrs. Angleman; recording secretary, Mrs. Snyder, chaplain, Mrs. Corwin; treasurer, Miss Bennett; financial secretary, Mrs. Bush; warden, Mrs. Bird; conductor, Mrs. Myers; guard, Mrs. Waldron.

WANTS SALE OF LAND STOPPED.

Transfer Said to Have Been Made to Defraud Creditors.

Charles T. Gall has secured from Judge Kirkpatrick a rule to show cause, returnable July 10th, why Mary E. Canary et al. should not be restrained from selling a property in Piscataway, Middlesex county. It is alleged that she obtained the property by transfer from her husband, Thomas C. Canary, now deceased, without consideration, the transfer constitution a fraud on creditors of Canary. Canary ran the Bijou Theatre, New York. He rented it at $27,000 a year, and a judgment for $6,000 was obtained against him for balance on rent due. It is claimed the property was transferred to Mr. Canary so it could not be seized under this judgment.

Country Roads Improved.

Never before have the roads of Washington Valley and that vicinity been in such good condition. The recent rains have laid the dust and the careful distribution of crushed stone during the spring has made a smooth surface. There are a few bad roads, of course, but the general improvement through all that section is quite noticeable.

Farmers' Picnic.

The Hunterdon county farmers will hold their annual picnic August 16th and 17th, when the politicians will gather as usual to start their booms for the fall elections. Hunterdon this fall elects a Sheriff, two Assemblymen and a Surrogate, and there are a score of candidates.

Father Westman Supervising.

The new chapel being erected in the east end of the city by St. Mary's church, is being built under the supervision of Rev. Father Westman, who has general oversight of the construction.

A GREAT FISH EXPOSITION.

The Centennial Celebration Commission of Ohio Plans a Novel Building.

FISH WITHIN A FISH.

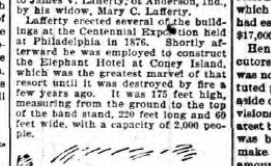
Interesting Story Comes to Light By Renewal of Patent for Such Buildings Issued to Lafferty.

First Building of This Recorded in History the Celebrated Trojan Horse—United States Patent Office Evidently Thought Lafferty Was Not Infringing on Patent Rights of Ancient Greeks.

The great Elephant Hotel, for years the greatest of the many attractions of Coney Island, is to be eclipsed in Ohio. The Centennial Celebration Commission of that State has planned to erect a building for the fisheries exhibit for the centennial in the form of a gigantic black bass. In size, method of construction, appearance and every other way it will be greatly superior to the famous elephant.

An interesting fact has come to light since the announcement of the building of this novel structure in the application for a renewal of patents issued to James V. Lafferty, of Anderson, Ind., by his widow, Mary C. Lafferty.

Lafferty erected several of the buildings at the Centennial Exposition held at Philadelphia in 1876. Shortly afterward he was employed to construct the Elephant Hotel at Coney Island, which was the greatest marvel of that resort until it was destroyed by fire a few years ago. It was 175 feet high, measuring from the ground to the top of the hind stand, 220 feet long and 60 feet wide, with a capacity of 2,000 people.



FISH WITH FISH EXHIBITION INSIDE.

The Elephant was so successful financially and otherwise that companies were at once formed in Chicago, Los Angeles and other cities to construct similar buildings, and in order to protect his interests at Coney Island Lafferty took out a patent on the construction of buildings in the form of animals, birds and fish. The patent was granted on the understanding that but one similar structure had ever been erected. Up to the present time there has been no other, except an elephant, on a smaller scale, built by Lafferty at Atlantic City.

The one exception was the historic Horse, of Troy, the proof of whose existence is vouched for by Homer, Virgil and others. The Trojan war, the greatest in the history of Greece, lasted some ten years, ending about 1184 B. C. Paris, son of King Priam, of that city, fell in love with the wife of Menelaus of Sparta, the beautiful Helen, and captured her, taking her to his native city.

He was the same Paris who, according to legend, bestowed the golden apple upon she Queen of Beauty, in the Judgment of Paris, that brought Greek nation was incensed and sought revenge. Nine years were spent in planning to take the city, and then an army of 100,000 men set sail with 1,186 ships for Troy. Headed by Agamemnon and Achilles they held a siege for nine years.

A dissension among the leaders almost brought about a catastrophe, which was averted by the strategy of Ulysses. He induced the entire army to set sail, ostensibly for home, but really for a nearby island, behind which they hid from the Trojans. They left behind a monstrous wooden horse, in which one hundred warriors were concealed.

The Trojans, seeing the enemy disappear, opened their gates, to find the horse all one their hands. Who said that he had been left behind. He also stated that the horse was a gift from the Gods.

The horse was hauled through the city gates by the Trojans, who at once proceeded to celebrate their victory. At the height of the festivities when all vigilance had relaxed, the Greek unlocked the doors of the horse, the warriors tumbled out, murdered the sentries, and the army let in at the gates to the Grecian army, which awaited them outside.

The patent office authorities evidently believed Lafferty was not infringing upon the rights of the heirs of Ulysses, and granted his patent. Mrs. Lafferty now hopes to have the patent renewed, so that the Ohio Centennial Commissioners will be obliged to pay her a royalty.

The building, as planned by them, will be twice larger than the Coney Island elephant. The entrance will be through the open mouth. There will be two floors devoted to the fisheries exhibit, and the space will also be given over to dancing floors, restaurants and other concessions.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

Love with women is like poker with a man—he does most of his winning while learning it.

Women know more about love than they do about loving; men know more about loving than they do about love.

Married men are rare whose pride is not humbled by the fact that it is to think they might have been refused when they proposed.

Every other woman you meet has either a misogonary scheme that she is interested in or else a kitten that she wants you to take care of.

There is no surer way for a man to make a girl think she has got to have another man than for him to make her think he thinks he has got to have her.—New York Press.

DEMAREST HOUSE TO BE SOLD AGAIN.

Vice Chancellor Orders First Sale Set Aside.

ADEQUATE VALUE NOT PAID.

SON OPPOSED TO ACTION OF HIS STEPMOTHER.

She Was One Of the Executors and in Settling Up the Estate Bid in the House for $6,000 Whereas it is Valued at About $17,000—Vice Chancellor Orders It to Be Sold Again.

Vice Chancellor Stevens, at his chambers Thursday in Jersey City, listened to argument in the action brought some month ago by Henry M. Demarest, of this city, to set aside the sale of the Demarest property at the corner of Crescent avenue and East Seventh street.

When the property in question was sold upon foreclosure proceedings it was bid in by Mrs. Elizabeth Demarest, the widow of David M. Demarest, for $6,000. This figure was considered ridiculously low for the property, which conservative real estate men had estimated worth from $12,000 to $17,000.

Henry M. Demarest, one of the executors of the estate, believing that he was not getting his just dues instituted proceedings to have the sale set aside on the ground that by the provisions of his father's will, Mrs. Demarest being one of the executors, she was bound by right and justice to make the property bring as large an amount as it would. This he claimed had not been done.

Henry M. Demarest, the petitioner, retained the services of Reed & Coddington, of this city, to bring the proceedings that would result in setting aside the sale. Mrs. Demarest's advisers were Messrs. Charles DeHart Brower, of New York, and Cowles & Carey, of Jersey City, while Cally & Swazy, of Newark, and Attorney Seymour, of New York, looked after the interests of interesting creditors.

Several adjournments have been taken, the case having been in the courts for several months.

The case came up for argument Thursday at the Vice-Chancellor's chambers and was here argued for the petitioner by William A. Coddington, who took the position that the amount received for the property at the foreclosure sale was scarcely one-third of its value and if the case was a valid one the petitioner was being unjustly defrauded of his rights and was entitled to a greater share of the proceeds of the property in question.

The case was contested by Mrs. Demarest's attorneys on the grond that there was not an inadequency of purchase sufficient to set aside the sale.

After listening to arguments on both sides the Vice-Chancellor took the view as presented to the petitioner's counsel and rendered a decision in favor of the petitioner. The property must be again advertised and a resale effected.

In consideration of the array of legal talent pitted against Judge Coddington, the decision of the Vice-Chancellor is a signal victory not only for the position assumed by the petitioner but also creditable to the legal tact and skill of the able attorney from this city.

The entire Demarest estate is estimated to be worth about $60,000 and is one of the most valuable in the State.

MASONIC ASYLUM OPENED.

Plainfield Masons Visited Their New Brunswick Brethren.

Temple Commandery, No. 18, Knights Templar, of New Brunswick, had a formal opening of their new temple last week. About twenty-five Sir Knights from Trinity Commandery, of this city, went by special trolley car to attend the affair. Representatives of other commanderies in the State were also present. After a short parade through the principal streets of the city the Sir Knights gathered in the new asylum, where Eminent Commander Thomas Biddle delivered the address of welcome to the visiting Sir Knights. Addresses were also made by other members of the commanderies. A feature of the function was the presentation to Temple Commandery by the ladies of New Brunswick of an elegant silk banner suitably inscribed. A collation was served and dancing was indulged in, though the Sir Knights from this city did not remain to participate in the terpsichorean art, but reached home on a special trolley car supplied by the Brunswick Traction Company, about 12:30 o'clock. The visiting Sir Knights were highly pleased with their visit.

Will be in Hospital a Month.

D. W. Littell, Jr., who is now confined at the New York Opthalmic Hospital under treatment for a serious injury to his eye caused by a cinder entering it, is doing as well as can be expected. It will probably be a month before he will be able to leave the hospital.

GOOD GOLF PLAYING ON GOLF LINKS

Scores in Competition for McCutchen Cup.

FINE DAY FOR THE SPORT.

MEN'S FOURSOMES PLAYED ON HILLSIDE COURSE.

Arthur Peck, C. S. Roome and J. T. Scott carried off Honors for the Afternoon on Park Club Links—Glenny and Wadsworth Won the Silver Cups Offered in Men's Foursomes at Hillside Links.

It was simply ideal weather for golfing Saturday afternoon and there was a large attendance at the links of the Park Golf Club in consequence. The course was rather dry, perhaps, despite the recent heavy rains, but it was in fair condition and plenty were out to enjoy it.

Most of the members who spent the afternoon on the links did not enter their scores for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup. Only seven were recorded and the honors of the afternoon went mostly to the younger set. Careful play and a fat handicap set Arthur Peck at the front of the line. Clarence S. Roome's gross score was one stroke less, but a smaller handicap put him second.

J. T. Scott scored a point in the competition for the cup for the first time. Usually he has not been entering his scores in the competition. Saturday, however, he was playing in good form and nearly beat Roome out for second place in the day's play.

E. T. Douglass, Meredith Dryden, Gus Faber and the other players of the club, who have been so prominent in the race for the cup, were not present. G. W. Cooley was, however, but did not record his score.

There were a number of visitors at the course, some of whom played around. They found the clubhouse a delightful place and the view from it a charming one. Tea was served as usual, Mrs. J. C. Peck and Mrs. J. H. Howell presiding.

The scores for the McCutchen cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Arthur Peck	109	17	92
Clarence S. Roome	100	10	90
James T. Scott	124	25	99
F. D. Hibberd	122	18	104
G. W. Faber	113	5	108
E. T. Douglass	142	30	112
W. J. Bushnell	130	17	113

The smallest crowd of the season visited the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club course Saturday afternoon and there was comparatively little interest. The fact that so many of the members are out of town enjoying their vacations accounted in a large measure for the small attendance. The event of the day was the men's foursomes for active members only. Eighteen holes, medal play. Twenty entries were received, but there were two players who failed to put in an appearance, F. O. Reinhart and J. H. Wharton. The silver cups were offered as prizes by the club and the winners were W. L. Glenney and Willard Wadsworth, with a net score of 85. There were several good scores made by the contestants. The course was in excellent condition, making play a pleasure. The absence of any social features about the clubhouse made things appear very tame. A few of the members remained in the evening for dinner and enjoyed the cool breezes. The scores made in the men's foursome are as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
W. L. Glenny Willard Wadsworth	97	9	85
J. Whitney Bonbright Howard Beebe	94	6	88
W. T. Kaufman F. C. Ard	100	11	89
F. C. Talmadge G. A. Chapman	102	13	89
A. J. Handwerk M. S. Ackerman	109	17	92
W. Rushmore W. J. Murray	110	18	92
Reeve Stockton C. W. Fiske	100	6	94
O. W. Wharton W. Baker	110	12	94

MAD DOG AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

A Mongrel Cur Bit Several Persons—Killed With a Baseball Bat.

Scotch Plains, July 3.—A mad dog ran amuck in Scotch Plains yesterday and made it lively for pedestrians on the streets for a few minutes. The dog was a mongrel stranger and suddenly appeared on Park avenue snapping and frothing at the mouth. The first person it came in contact with was Arthur Chapman. The dog immediately snapped at his arm and laid its teeth deep into the flesh. Chapman hurried to the home of County Physician Westcott and had the wound cauterized. The dog made several more attempts to bite people, and succeed in scratching the flesh of Lynus Walpole and the young son of John Miller. By this time John Thys appeared upon the scene with a baseball bat, and succeeded, after a hard struggle, in dispatching the life of the brute.

Preached in Trinity Church.

Prof. Henry D. B. Mulford, of Rutgers' College, New Brunswick, preached very acceptably to large congregations Sunday morning and evening in Trinity Reformed church.

THE TOWN OF ILOILO

A Place of Great Commercial Importance With a Brisk Coasting Trade.

The town of Iloilo, which was the storm center of the recent revolution in the Philippines, stands on a low sandy flat on the right bank of a river. At the end of this flat is a spit on which a fort is built, and close to which there is deep water. Vessels of moderate draft (15 feet) can ascend the river a short distance and lie alongside which communicate with the merchant houses, touching their doors, just as the switch lines of the railroads do at Cuppies' Block, for example. Large vessels must anchor outside near the spit.

Iloilo is a town of great commercial importance, and a brisk coasting trade is carried on from it. The better class of houses in Iloilo are built from strong wooden posts, two or three feet in diameter, that reach to the roof; stone walls to the first floor, with wooden windows above, and an iron roof. The poorer class of dwellings are flimsy erections of nipa, built on four long posts. The roads and bridges are in a deplorable condition and almost impassable in the rainy season.

The Philippines have Australian coal, and general merchandise from Europe, but most sailing ships arrive in ballast.

The exports are sugar, tobacco, rice, coffee, hides and sapan wood. It is also the principal place of manufacture of pina, jusc, and sinamoya, a tissue greatly in use among the Philippines. In 1883 20,000 tons of sugar were exported, principally to America.

Typhoons do not occur regularly, but in most years the tail of one passes over the place, which suffers also from the visitations of locusts.

Iloilo lies on Guimaraw Island, which forms with Panay Island the Strait of Iloilo. Inampulugan Island, in Guimaras Strait, is the most remarkable in the strait. Between this island and Guimaras there are six steep rocks with flat summits, on some of which are trees; to the northward of it are two little islets connected with it on the southeast by a bank having one and three-quarters fathoms water on it; between this bank and the reef off Pandan (on the coast of Negros) is a channel of one and one-half to nine fathoms deep; but the one-half to eight fathoms deep; it is the least dangerous passage to take, but care must be taken to avoid a bank of 4 fathoms shown on the chart, between Pandan and the islet of Nadulao; as also a bank of sand with one and one-half fathoms over it, of four cables extent, which lies three miles southeast to south, southeast of Ilampulugan.

Best People in the Philippines.

The bulk of the population of the Philippines is of Malay origin, and the Philippine Malays are a superior race to many other Asiatic peoples. Orderly, amiable, courteous, honest and exceedingly superstitious they are easily influenced upon profession of Christianity. Like most tropical people, their efforts are intermittent rather than steady; their wants are readily provided for, and they take life easy. The inhabitants of the island are composed of the same heterogeneous mixture of races, including Malays, Aets, Negritos, pure blacks, Chinese, Japanese, Indios, Moors, Europeans, and mixtures of each with the others. There are nearly as many different tribes as there are islands, and it is said that 500 languages and dialects are spoken in the islands at the present day. The inhabitants are generally tractable and amenable to government, and generally not hostile to foreigners, but the inaccessible parts of the island there are still tribes of unsubdued savages whose number is estimated at about 300,000. A good deal of music, dancing and amusements of all kinds, they are born gamblers, and cock fighting is their great national sport. Every town has its cockpit, and in the largest the spectators may be numbered by thousands. This amusement is heavily taxed by the Spanish Government, which is taken of the taste for gambling by running a lottery for the benefit of the Government.

Probably not more than 15,000 or 20,000 Spaniards, or people of pure Spanish blood, are permanent residents and the number of Chinese traders is not large. The majority of these are at Manila, where the English have established a club in the suburbs, which has become the center of foreign social intercourse.

Without doubt, the most primitive of the Philippine peoples are the Aetas or Negritos, a race of blacks of almost dwarfish stature. They are believed to be, and with good reason, the true aborigines of the island. Who, even at the time of the early Spanish conquest, had begun to go to the wall under the fierce struggle for existence with the more powerful tribes. At present they are well-nigh extinct, and promise to become entirely so. These people are confined to the higher mountain ranges in Luzon and Negros, although a few are found in Mindanao.

The Roman Catholic is the established Church in the Philippines, and most of the ecclesiastical authority is vested in the hands of the various religious orders—Dominicans, Augustines and Franciscans.

People of Porto Rico.

Professor Robert T. Hill has presented an interesting side light on the people of Porto Rico by discussing them from an ethnological and anthropological standpoint. The Porto Ricans of the upper class are of pure Spanish blood, the point of connection and consolidation they are the descendants of military men, who during the long period when the island was a mere garrison, formed alliances with the native women. These people maintain the pride of their descent, with all the stateliness of grandeur, and many of them are opulent. This class of people, with pure blood and Spanish feelings, opinions and prejudices so widely different from that of the Americans, the British or French Islands, although numerically inferior, forms a distinctive feature of the population. It constitutes the commercial, professional and planter classes.

The "cabbies" of St. Petersburg have recently been supplied with a book of tickets by the Municipal Council for the purpose of providing every "fare" with the means of making a note of any complaint he may desire to make against the cabby. The latter, at the conclusion of the fare, is obliged to tear off one of the tickets for him. The tickets bear the number of the cab and the tariff of charges.

SILVER-PLATING FOR BOYS.

How to Make a Simple and Cheap Battery from Electric Light Carbons and Zinc.

How would you like to try copper and silver plating?

"Oh, I can't do that," cries the boy on the back seat; "it's too hard."

But it isn't hard. As a matter of fact any boy can learn how to do electro-plating with very little trouble or expense, for he can make his entire outfit himself. And when he has mastered the art he should be able to make a good deal of pocket money from plating spoons, keys and other objects for his relatives and friends.

A few weeks ago the Record told how a boy could make a simple and cheap battery out of electric-light carbons and bits of zinc. Either this battery or any cheap battery will do. The writer knew of a boy who made a battery in a big glass tumbler by using fruit jar zincs, and which was found in the attic, with ordinary vinegar for the active agent. A very weak and slow-working battery is better than a strong one for use in electro-plating, because a strong battery is likely to work too rapidly, with the result that copper is thrown off.

The amateur electro-plater would do well to try copper-plating first. At a drug store buy a small quantity of blue vitriol, which is a common copper salt, and dissolve the crystals in water. The solution will be a deep blue.

SILVER PLATING.

Now provide a large, deep tumbler or a fruit can and into this pour the vitriol. Bring over the wire that is connected with the zinc in your battery and to its end tie an old iron key or button hook. Allow this to sink into the vitriol solution. The end of the wire that projects from the copper or carbon of your battery should also be immersed in the liquid. In a few hours the key or other object will be beautifully coated with the copper. It is a process exceedingly interesting to watch.

Copper-plating may be used to advantage in many cases, but it is not particularly pretty. Every boy will find more pleasure and profit in plating with silver, notwithstanding the fact that it is more expensive. A solution of cyanide of silver should be used. It is made ready for the plating bath in exactly the same way as the vitriol, except that a small silver coin should be suspended from the end of the wire that runs to the carbons or copper, as shown in the illustration. With this solution all sorts of small objects can be plated with great ease. It will be well for the young electro-plater to bore holes in a cigar-box cover and place it over the tumbler containing the plating solution, using one hole for each of the wires, thus keeping them firmly in place while the electric current is doing its work.

The Dog and the Telephone.

The following dog story comes from Toronto: "One morning not long ago I started out to see a friend who lived a mile or so from the rectory, taking with her our little brown cocker spaniel. When she left she quite forgot the dog, and as soon as our friends discovered him they did all they could to make him leave, but he was loyal. Some hours passed and he was still there, so they telephoned to us to let us know his whereabouts. 'Bring him to the telephone,' said my sister. One of the boys held him while another put the trumpet to the dog's ear. Then my sister whistled and called 'come here at once, Paddy.' Immediately he wriggled out of the boy's arms, rushed at the door, barking to get out, and shortly afterwards arrived panting at the rectory. This is what might be called a modern dog story, is it not?"

He Repented.

A story comes from New Haven about a black spaniel that abstracted a feather duster from his owner's house and while playing with it tore out all the feathers. The dog, after being shown the featherless handle, was given a whipping. He then disappeared and about a year afterward walked bravely into the house with a bran new duster in his mouth. He walked up to his mistress and meekly deposited the new brush at her feet. By the mark on it she saw that the dog had stolen it from a neighboring store.

Stamp Worth a Fortune.

If by some stroke of good fortune a boy or girl should find a 2-cent postage stamp of one of the earliest issues in the Hawaiian Islands he could sell it for enough to pay all his expenses during a four-years' course in college and have a snug little sum left to begin business after his graduation. This stamp is said to be one of the rarest in the world. It is roughly printed on poor paper, but a dealer will pay $1,750 for a specimen of it. It makes it a pretty valuable piece of paper.

A droll inventor has just made a machine by means of which a man can lift his hat by merely contracting his brows, so that in case he meets a lady friend he can make an automatic bow. Not only has the inventor spent a good deal of time on his device, but he actually has had it patented. For a society man who has a great many friends it would certainly be a very good thing—he and the armless men could use it to great advantage.

AN OLD SUPERSTITION.

Many Stories Prove That Rats Will Leave an Unseaworthy Vessel.

The old superstition, which has grown into an adage, that rats desert a ship which is no longer seaworthy, is still an article of faith with the fresh water sailors of the great lakes. Sundry well-authenticated instances seem to justify this belief. The vernon was a three-master, which did a tramp business. Built in Buffalo in 1850, she was for many years regarded as one of the best craft on the lakes. Late in the fall, about fifteen years ago, she unloaded a cargo of grain in Buffalo, and reloaded with package freight for Chicago. She was about to sail one round November night. Just before the lines were let off, one of the seamen saw a rat run over the hawsers to the wharf. In a moment another was seen. The seaman called others of the crew to see the unusual sight. Between fifty and seventy-five rats poured out of the ship and took refuge along the wharf. The crew refused to sail, but the captain was obstinate, shipped a fresh crew, and sailed forthwith. The ship was lost with all hands, except a boy, a few passenger steamer, foundered in Lake Erie in November, 1897. Out of her crew of twenty-one men nineteen were drowned. Just bfore the vessel left her moorings a swarm of rats crawled over the hawsers to the wharf. This was known to part of the crew, and four men deserted at the last moment. Similar stories are told of other wrecked vessels, and an old lakeman says: "It has been proved a hundred times. There are a whole lot of things in this world that we don't know anything about. But we live to the very fliers of a ship. They see what we can't see. When the timbers are hollowed and the seams open, these little animals know that the ship is unsafe, and they desert it."

Music in the Sierras.

Travelers in the Sierra forests usually complain of their want of life, especially of birds. "The trees," they say, "are fine, but the empty stillness is deadly; there are no animals to be seen, no birds. We have not heard a song in all the woods." And no wonder, going in large parties with mules and horses, making so much noise, dressed in outlandish, unnatural colors, every animal shuns them. Even the frightened pines would run away if they could. But nature lovers, devout, silent, open-eyed, alert, looking and listening with love, sitting still and hearing the news of days, as their genius directs, find no lack of inhabitants in these mountain mansions, and they come to them gladly. Not to mention the large animals or the small insect people every waterfall has its ouzel, and every tree its squirrel or bonita, or bird—tiny nuthatch threading the furrows of the bark, cheerily whispering to itself as it deftly pries off loose scales and examines the curled edges of lichens, or Clarks crow, or jay, examining the cones, or the singer-oriole, tanager, warbler, resting, feeding, attending to domestic affairs. Hawks and eagles sail overhead, and grouse walk in happy flocks below, and the song sparrow sings in every bed of chaparral. There is no crowding, to be sure. Unlike the low Eastern trees, those of the Sierra in the main forest belt average nearly 200 feet in height, and of course many birds are required to make much of a show in them, and many voices to fill them. Nevertheless the whole range from foothills to snowy summits is shaken into song every summer; and though low and thin in winter, the music never ceases.

Prompt Mr. Scott.

A certain Mr. Scott, of Exeter, Eng., whose business required him to travel constantly, was one of the most famous characters for punctuality in the kingdom. By his methodical habits, combined with unwearied industry, he accumulated a large fortune. For a great many years the landlord of every inn in Cornwall and Devon that he visited knew the exact day and hour he would arrive. A short time before he died, at the advanced age of eighty, a gentleman who was making a journey through Cornwall put up at a small inn at Port Isaac for his dinner. He looked over the bill of fare, and found nothing to his liking. He had, however, seen a fine duck roasting on the fire.

"I'll have that," said he.

"You cannot, sir," replied the landlord, "it is for Mr. Scott, of Exeter."

"I know Mr. Scott very well," replied the traveller. "He is not in your house."

"Very sorry," said the landlord, "but six months ago, when he was last here, he ordered the duck to be ready for him this day, exactly at 2 o'clock."

And to the amazement of the traveler, who could see the duck from the window, the old gentleman was at that moment entering the inn yard, about five minutes before the appointed time.

A Curious Collection.

One of the most remarkable collections or souvenirs ever made is a collection of male opera hats by one of the actresses of a London company. She owns no fewer than 216 of these articles, for it was her whim to make every young man who was introduced to her give her his opera hat as a souvenir. She not only keeps them in their pristine condition, but converts them into all sorts of other things, such as photograph frames, work baskets, and some are even used for the purpose of holding flower pots.

The Chinese are said to remove the pulp from oranges and substitute various jellies. The closest examination fails to reveal any opening or incision in the skin of the fruit.

SUMMIT IS BADLY SWEPT BY FLAMES.

Heart of the Business Section is Wiped Out.

LOSS WILL BE $150,000.

FIREMEN SEEMED UNABLE TO STAY THE FLAMES.

Inadequate Water Pressure and Unskilled Firemen Unable to Stop the Fire Till Fourteen Stores Were in Ashes —Origin Thought to be Incendiary— Forty Families Are Rendered Homeless.

Summit, N. J., July 3.—Inadequate water pressure and the necessity of depending principally on men unskilled in the work of fire fighting resulted early yesterday morning in the most disastrous conflagration in the history of Summit, and one of the most disastrous that ever occurred in Union county. The fire broke out in Union avenue, in the heart of the business section of Summit, and as entire block of fourteen large stores was totally destroyed.

It is suspected that the fire was of incendiary origin, as the block in which it occurred has been on fire five times in the last year. Forty families were rendered homeless, and the business of the place is seriously interfered with.

The fire originated in a barn in the rear of a row of houses at about 3 o'clock yesterday morning. About 100 persons who lived in the apartments over the stores were driven to the streets in their night clothes, and saved practically nothing. There were several narrow escapes and gallant rescues by firemen and citizens, but no one was seriously injured.

The burned buildings have long been looked upon as fire traps, and very little insurance was written on them by the insurance companies. The fire has caused a great deal of anxiety in this place, as the residents fear a return of a siege of incendiary fires, such as threw it into a state of panic at about this time last year.

In every church here yesterday appeals were made by the pastors for contributions of clothing, food and money to relieve the distress. The loss is estimated at $150,000.

MISSING LINK IN ROAD.

LINCOLN BOULEVARD IS NOW OPEN FOR TRAVEL.

It Makes a Continuous Hard Roadbed Between Hunterdon County and Jersey City—Parallels the Central Railroad.

The missing link in a continuous macadamized roadbed from White House, Hunterdon county, to Jersey City, is finished in the opening of the Lincoln boulevard, the avenue running east from Main street, Bound Brook, through New Bound Brook to Lincoln, a distance of 4,000 feet. It is paved from curb to curb and runs parallel with the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Saturday afternoon a number of local dignitaries met at the office of S. D. Drake, in Lincoln, and drove over the Lincoln boulevard. At the new bridge at Raubcore creek a party from Bound Brook were met, and impromptu speeches delivered by Mayor Drake, of Lincoln; Mayor Brokaw, of Bound Brook; W. B. B. Mason, editor of the Bound Brook Chronicle; W. D. K. Wade, of New Bound Brook; W. W. Smalley and others.

The new road will be accepted by the township committee of Piscataway. It will shorten the distance between this city and Bound Brook.

GUESTS AT THE HUNTERSTON.

Bright Prospects for a Successful Season at This Handsome Hotel.

There is every indication that the handsome Hotel Hunterston at Netherwood, will have a prosperous season. Already there are a large number of guests at the house and a number are expected this week. However many of those who are comfortably quartered there have made arrangements to remain through the season. Among the guests are the following: Dr. and Mrs. A. E. Gallant, Geo. V. N. Dr. Coles' Gift to New Orleans University

Dr. J. Ackerman Coles, of Scotch Plains, in his desire to promote a love for art, has made a gift to Tulane University, New Orleans, of a life size portrait bust of Cicero. It was cast at the Barbedienne foundry, in Paris, and is a copy of the original in the Louvre.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constantly increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer of the person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been. I see no objection." The druggists, knowing how well the Tabules benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a special advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules commended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call, a dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were a dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should appear her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, where the sufferer may be benefited in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers may help some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been. I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how well the Tabules

A new style packet containing FIVE RIPANS TABULES has been placed on sale at many drug stores throughout the United States and Canada. The object of the five-cent carton (12 tabules) is to put the Tabules within the reach of all who may wish to try the remedy. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price is sent to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York. A dozen cartons (144 tabules) may be had for 60 cents. Ripans Tabules are the best known antidote for constipation, sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, bad complexion, foul breath, flatulency and all stomach troubles. One gives relief.

BIG CELEBRATION WINDS UP AFFAIRS.

Fourth of July Committee Meet to Pay its Bills.

THE COST WAS OVER $1,000

TO CELEBRATE THE NATION'S BIRTH-DAY IN PLAINFIELD.

Heads of Various Committees Met Last Night and Audited All Bills—There's Enough Cash to Settle All Claims—Resolutions of Thanks Tendered to Various Persons and Organizations.

The general committee of the Fourth of July celebration held its final meeting in Red Men's Hall last Tuesday. In the absence of Chairman William Newcorn, who is out of town, Mayor Rockfellow presided.

The Mayor, as chairman of the subscription committee, reported that cash to the amount of $1,034.62 had been subscribed and paid in. There was also $6 which he expected from another source to be added to the above amount, which would bring the sum total up to $1,038.62. This amount, he said, did not include the $100 which the Common Council had offered, providing the committee needed it to liquidate the expenses of the celebration.

The report of E. M. Laing, chairman of the finance committee, showed bills outstanding to the amount of $1,020.16. The more important expenditures included $145 for music, $95 to W. H. Brokaw for building grandstand for the fireworks, and $25 to Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis for his splendid address. There are a number of smaller bills to come in, but it is believed that there is sufficient funds in the hands of the finance committee to pay all bills, and there may be a small balance to use as a nucleus for a future celebration, without calling upon the Common Council for the promised $100, but which Mayor Rockfellow said they had no right to appropriate for the purpose for which it was intended.

Some discussion was precipitated owing to the bill of W. H. Brokaw for building the grand stand. The original agreement with Mr. Brokaw was $70, but as the stand he had constructed was not considered safe by Chief Donne, who is the inspector of buildings as well as fire chief, some members of the executive committee had authorized Mr. Brokaw to strengthen the stand which he had agreed to do for an additional $25, although he strenuously maintained that the stand he had at first built was perfectly safe and capable of holding as many people as could be seated upon it.

In consideration that Mr. Brokaw had fulfilled his part of the contract, it was the sense of the members of the committee that he should be given the extra allowance of $25, as had been promised him.

No action was taken upon the letter of H. P. Baldwin, general passenger agent of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, which stated that the railroad company was compelled to decline making any concession in railroad fares on the Fourth of July, in view of the low rates which are at present in force.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this general committee be and they are hereby tendered to the people of Plainfield and North Plainfield for their generous contributions, thereby assuring the decided success of our celebration; to Mrs Wm. White for the use of her grounds for the fireworks display; to the Woman's Relief Corps of the G. A. R. for their lavish entertainment of the visiting Naval Reserves; to Miantonomo Tribe, No. 113, I.O. R.M., for the use of their meeting rooms, and to all who assisted in making the celebration the largest and grandest in the history of our city.

Similar resolutions were also offered and adopted with reference to Dr. M. S. Simpson, Charles M. Ulrich, chairman of the executive committee, and Wm. C. Smith, chairman of the parade committee.

After giving the finance committee full power to settle all outstanding accounts, the general committee wound up its affairs by adjourning sine die.

BEFORE THE GRAND JURY

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS MAY BE VIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED.

Facts Regarding Mrs. Porcella's Death to be Laid Before the Inquest—Prosecutor English Talks Very Severe.

Elizabeth, July 12.—Prosecutor English, of Union county, who has just returned from a trip through the great lakes and Northwest, informed a reporter yesterday that the facts regarding the death three weeks ago of Mrs. Santiago Porcella, of Cranford, would be laid before the October Grand Jury.

Mrs. Porcella, who was the wife of a wealthy importer, died of hasty consumption after having been treated for several weeks by Christian Scientists. Before her death she abandoned Christian Science treatment and placed herself in the hands of physicians, but the disease could not then be checked.

"These alleged Christian Scientists," declared Prosecutor English emphatically, "are not better than a pack of frauds, and the death of this woman under the circumstance surrounding it was an outrage. I don't know whether we have a law in Jersey to punish such persons, and it may be that a special law will have to be enacted to cover the subject, the same as has been done in some other States.

"One thing, however, is certain, and that is the Grand Jury will make a searching investigation into the Porcella matter, and if the facts elicited by the Grand Jury are the same as published in the newspapers; then if there is any way to bring the perpetrators in the affair to justice, it will be done. I have not had a chance since returning to fully look up the law, but will do so before the Grand Jury meets."

SQUIRE'S LIVELY CANVASS.

Making Strong Efforts to Secure the Nomination for County Clerk.

Elizabeth, July 12.—Assemblyman George A. Squire is making a most vigorous hustle for the County Clerkship nomination. He is visiting all parts of the county and claims to have pledges of support from unlooked for sources.

The Assemblyman expects to encounter strong opposition in this city from the friends of Senator Cross, who is after a renomination, and also those of Assemblyman Houston, who wants to be Sheriff. As the Senator is the first to be nominated, and next comes the County Clerk, it looks as if the struggle, so far as Elizabeth is concerned, will be between Squire and Houston, as it is now pretty well conceded that Senator Cross will be renominated, as there is no formidable candidate against him. Should Squire then secure the County Clerkship, the Sheriff would almost surely have to come from outside of Elizabeth, as this city cannot reasonably expect to secure all three offices. Both Squire and Houston fully understand this, and hence Houston's friends will do their level best to throw the Clerkship nomination either to Rahway or Plainfield, both of which places have candidates, and thus clear the way for the nomination for a Sheriff being given to Elizabethport.

The Foundation of Health.

Just as the strength of the building depends upon its foundation, just so does the comfort and strength of man depend upon his feet. With sound feet his step is elastic, his eyes clear, his complexion fresh, his handshake magnetic. Before such a man the weaklings and nervous go down in the struggle for riches and honor like chaff before the wind. Feet deformed and distorted from corns and bunions, enlarged great toe joints, etc, make us almost helpless and miserable, for when the feet ache we ache all over. Geo. B. DeRevre, proprietor Revere House, says: "I actually feel ten years younger since my corns and bunions were completely cured by Specialist Brown's painless method."

Mr. DeRevre states that he had his feet treated by some of the very best doctors in New York but could never get a permanent and lasting cure until treated by Mr. Brown's improved system. Geo. Egel, Grandview meat market, says that his bunions were so painful he could feel the pains to his knees. He was advised by cured friends to see Specialist Brown at 145 West Second street. Mr. Egel says after a painless treatment he never had an ache or a pain in his foot since. The market is at Somerset street and Grandview avenue. P. H. Brown's Plainfield visit will close July 22d.

HOW THEY KEPT INDEPENDENCE DAY

Celebrating Fourth of July in Santa Clara, Cuba.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS MARCH

CUBANS CHEER TO THE ECHO THE FLAG AND THE TROOPS.

A Plainfield Boy Attached to the Second United States Cavalry Tells of the Enthusiasm Displayed by the Natives, Who Helped to Observe the Day—City Gaily Decorated With Flags.

The enthusiastic manner in which the National holiday was celebrated in Cuba this year, may be gained from an interesting letter recently received by the editor of The Press from Frederick W. Bowden, a former well-known Plainfield boy, who is a member of the band attached to the Second United States Cavalry, now stationed at Santa Clara, Cuba. He says:

When it is realized that the Cubans never witnessed a Fourth of July celebration as only Americans know how to celebrate, one can imagine how much interest they manifested in the monster mounted parade which Uncle Sam's soldiers made on that memorable day.

Though the weather was extremely hot, old Sol blistering everything with its hot rays, the soldier boys were early astir. They were up with the lark, reville being as early as 5:15 o'clock. After a hearty breakfast the boys saddled their horses and by 6:50 were ready to start.

The superb band of the Second Cavalry, under the leadership of John H. Scully, never looked better or played more inspiringly. Their instruments shown like silver, while the nahki suits and horses of the troops were the pink of neatness. The parade, which started early and passed through the principal streets of the city, was one of the largest ever seen there. Every man in the parade was mounted, even to the members of the band.

Every public building and all private residences were handsomely decorated, palm leaves and bunting being everywhere, while "Old Glory" and the Cuban flag were conspicuous on every hand, and both cheered to the echo.

When Leader Scully's musicians struck up Sousa's inspiring air—"The Stars and Stripes Forever," the crowd of natives lining the streets set up a tremendous shout, and as the troops passed over the line of march the applause was spontaneous and hearty.

Along the streets, following closely at the horses' feet, were hundreds of Caban children shouting as the ran: "Americano Mucho Whano," meaning "the American is Very Good." Guns and pistols were fired and the greatest enthusiasm possible prevailed. Men cheered and handsome Cuban women waived their handkerchief and parasols at the troops as they passed the homes of these greatful people.

At one street as the parade came in sight the soldiers were met by a Cuban brass band playing the "Star Spangled Banner." While this band could not execute the popular air quite as correctly as did the splendid band attached to the Second Calvary, nevertheless, their efforts were so well directed as to cause the soldiers to liberally applaud them.

The parade was a splendid one and greatly pleased the natives, who appeared to be as enthusiastic over the celebration of the day as were the soldier boys, some of whom, however, would have liked to have been at home on that day.

The day's festivities were brought to a close by a grand ball, which was attended by the officers of the Second Cavalry and the elite Cuban society of Santa Clara. The music for dancing was supplied by the orchestra of the Second Calvary.

The entire celebration was as interesting as it was creditable to the soldiers and Americans who were instrumental in bringing it off.

DRUNK PARIS GREEN; HE CANNOT LIVE.

Queer and Probably Fatal Beverage of Dunellen Man.

HE SUFFERS INTENSE PAIN.

AMBROSIA MARIENSCHENK IMBIBED THE POISONOUS FLUID

He Prepared it for the Purpose of Killing Potato Bugs—Found By His Family in Intense Agony—Fought the Doctors When They Tried to Save His Life—Final Act of Many Incidents.

What will probably be the last act of a long series of queer deeds was performed Tuesday afternoon by Ambrosia Marienschenck, a well-known character of Dunellen, when he drank about a half-pound of paris green while under the influence of liquor.

Mr. Marienschenck has a small garden at his home and has always taken a great deal of pride in raising potatoes. Early Tuesday afternoon he went to his garden, after mixing a large quantity of paris green, and sprinkled the deadly stuff over his potatoe vines. He had partially gone over the patch when, without any apparent reason, he raised the vessel containing the poison and drank a quantity of it. It is said that the quantity he drank would equal almost a half-pound of the stuff.

It was about 2 o'clock that the family heard terrible screams and groans and following the sound traced it to one of the bedrooms upstairs. There they found the old man groaning and in terrible agony. He cried as best as he could for a drink of water. As quickly as possible the water was secured, but all attempts to hold the water down were fruitless. As the man's condition was becoming serious, Dr. Brakeley was sent for. When the physician arrived he made a hasty examination and determined that something must be done with haste.

The doctor prescribed the proper medicine, but he could not get his patient to take it. He fought like a tiger and refused to take anything but water. After many efforts were made to get the medicine in the man's stomach, Dr. Brakely decided to use a pump. In the meantime, a member of the family had sent word hastily for Dr. Whitford, of New Market, and when he arrived the two physicians went to work and used heroic measures to rid the stomach of the poison. Their efforts were attended with some success but the physicians expressed little hope that the man would recover. He had become so thoroughly saturated with the poison, and it was so difficulty to get the proper medicine in him, that it was feared that the poison had accomplished its work before the effects could be counteracted. Another bad feature was the quantity of liquor drank by Marienschenck. This had a tendency to work against any medicine that might be given. The physicians succeeded, however, in easing the patient of pain.

Mr. Marienschenck is a native of Germany and during his residence in Dunellen has been at different times the central figure in many scrapes. On more than one occasion he has driven his family from the house by means that were forcible. When sober he is considered a good father, husband and neighbor, but when under the influence of liquor he is generally considered a dangerous man.

The latest report received from Dunellen is that Mr. Mariencheck will probably not live during the day. He is suffering intense pain and is only partially conscious.

BIG CAR WORKS TO REOPEN

Extensive Plant at Elizabeth May Manufacture Automobiles.

Elizabeth, July 12—The New York and Brooklyn Car Works at Elizabethport, which have been closed for a year, are about to reopen, it is said, and run on full time. The works will employ a large number of men, as it is said an order has been received for 500 cars.

It is also reported that the company will manufacture automobiles. The plant was formerly that of the Fowler Car Company, and is a large one. For some reason it was never successful and was only a short time in operation. It afterwards passed into the hands of the Brooklyn and New York Car Company.

Pittis' Estate Sale.

The postponed auction sale of the Pittis estate on Central and Field avenues will be held this afternoon on the premises, 912 Central avenue, by Special Master in Chancery Reed. The time of sale will be 2 o'clock. This property is very desirable and will be sold without reserve.

BABIES' CAMP WILL BE OPENED NEXT TUESDAY

All Interested in the Work Are Invited.

WAGON TO MEET TROLLEY.

SUBSTANTIAL STRUCTURE FOR THE SHELTER OF LITTLE ONES.

Efforts of The Daily Press to Raise Money to Carry on the Noble Work Have Been Generously Rewarded—Nearly $250 Contributed—Contribution of $7 From Several Young Women.

The Babies' Camp of the City Union of King's Daughters is now almost a reality. The substantial little wooden structure on the side of the mountain has, in fact, been already completed. Tuesday afternoon the camp will be formally opened to the public, who will be invited to be present on that occasion and inspect the arrangements made for the care of the little ones.

The efforts of The Daily Press in behalf of that worth charity have been very successful. Contributions have been steadily pouring into this office and have been turned over to the treasurer of the City Union. The money has been well spent but there is still more needed to complete the work so well begun.

The camp will be all ready for occupation Tuesday when the formal opening will take place. Arrangements have been made to have a wagonette meet the trolley at the Somerset street terminus and carry the guests to the babies' camp on the mountain. There will be a committee from the City Union present to receive the guests. All the friends interested in the good work are cordially invited to be present on the occasion of the opening of the new camp.

A bevy of bright young people, desiring to do all they could, arranged an entertainment for the benefit of the baby camp which was given Tuesday afternoon on the veranda of the home of Emil Woltman, 660 West Seventh street. The whole affair was a most creditable one and the young people by their efforts were able to make $7 for the camp. The entertainment consisted of tableaux and recitations chiefly, while an occasional song or duet added interest to it. The following tableaux were given: "A Spanish Child," "The Violet," "October," "Little Jack Horner," "June," "Faith, Hope and Charity," "Once I Was a Bachelor," "Little Bopeep," "Goddess of Liberty." The following recitatations were also given: "Maidenhair," "The Gingerbread Man," "The Raggedy Man," "Little Lizette," "Good Advice." Other features were a scarf dance and vocal duet.

Those who arranged the affair and took part were the Misses Ellena Woodcock, Rosa Woltman, Grace Weeks, and William Fladders, John Douglass and Jerry Manning. After the entertainment a committee called at The Press office and contributed the $7 profits for the baby camp and on behalf of those in charge of the camp received their thanks.

A check for $33.15 was sent by The Daily Press today to Mrs. Carrie M. Myers, treasurer of the Camp Fund for the City Union of King's Daughters, making a total of $220.63 already turned over to the City Union. Today the fund stands as follows:

Amount sent to Mrs. H. M. Myers, treasurer Camp Fund	$220.63

NAVAL RESERVES CRUISE

Will Go To Sea on the Converted Cruiser Prairie.

The battalion of the east and two divisions of the battalion of the west, New Jersey Naval Reserve, will start on their annual summer cruise next Wednesday on the converted cruiser Prairie.

On leaving Hoboken the Prairie will steam to Sandy Hook, thence to the eastern end of Long Island, where target practice and boat drills will be given. She will then proceed to sea and arrive in Hoboken on July 27th.

Miss Rocap, of Central avenue, is summering at Patchogue, L. I.

Mrs. W. N. Tier, of Bank place, is the guest of Brooklyn relatives.

Mr. Morgan, of Georgia, is visiting Plainfield friends for a few weeks.

Alvah Carey, of New York, is visiting Plainfield relatives and friends.

Lewis Kline, of Boston, is visiting relatives in Plainfield and the borough.

Mrs. Garret Eick, of East Third street, is improved from a severe illness.

SOLDIERS' BURIAL PLOT.

VETERANS OF THE CIVIL WAR TO HAVE A RESTING PLACE.

The Hillside Cemetery Association Has Kindly Donated a Piece of Land Where Deceased Soldiers and Sailors Will Rest.

After months of untiring energy and painstaking efforts on the part of the members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., that organization has finally succeeded in securing a suitable site for a soldiers' and sailors' lot in the handsome Hillside Cemetery.

Some time ago a committee, consisting of E. D. Moffett, Capt. J. Frank Hubbard and Col. Mason W. Tyler, was appointed by the Post to look into the matter of securing a plot of ground, which will be a proper place in which to deposit the remains of deceased soldiers and sailors of the Civil War. Through the efforts of this committee the Hillside Cemetery Association has now kindly donated a plot of ground for this purpose.

At Tuesday's meeting of the Post, the committee reported the result of their efforts. A resolution of thanks to the Hillside cemetery association was tendered on behalf of the members of Winfield Scott Post.

The plot of ground which has been donated is 60x20 in size. It is located on the right of the main entrance to the cemetery, being on a knoll and commands a fine view of the surrounding country.

The plot will be dedicated at an early date, but no definite time has been set for the services.

In the near future the members of the local parts expect to erect a monument on the plot, which will greatly add to the beauty of this picturesque city of the dead.

MRS. ALBERTSON EXPLAINS.

Says That Her Husband Was Suffering Pain From a Bad Tooth.

Mrs. William Albertson, of Park avenue, writes to The Daily Press today to explain the circumstances of her husband's commitment to Bellevue Hospital in New York, which was reported in this paper yesterday. Mrs. Albertson says that the statement given out that he was intoxicated is grossly inaccurate. She says that he has been suffering intensely for the past month with a bad tooth. Monday he went to a dental office on West Twenty-third street to have it extracted and while there he was badly injured in the operation performed.

He was unable to control himself owing to the excruciating pain and the doctors bundled him off to the hospital without reason. He returned home Tuesday afternoon and was greatly mortified to read the report that had been given out by the New York authorities. She says the report that he is a drinking man is untrue.

Library Directors Meet.

A special meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the Library last Tuesday. There were present Messrs. M. Tyler, Rowland Cox, J. C. Dumont, Alex. Gilbert, W. H. Larrabee, J. Evarts Tracy. In the absence of the secretary it was moved and carried that Miss Adams act as secretary protem. It was moved and carried that the bills presented for the general library be paid from the library fund, and those of the Babcock scientific library be paid from the Babcood fund. After the transaction of some miscellaneous business the meeting adjourned.

Injured Italian Lives in Westfield.

The Italian who was struck by a train near the freight house Tuesday morning has been identified as Augustine Eit, aged 23 years, a resident of Westfield. He is not married. He was on his way to Plainfield when he was struck by a train. These few facts are all that can be ascertained about him, and they were obtained by a fellow Italian, who was taken to the hospital yesterday to be treated for a slight injury.

At Patchogue, L. I.

Silas Yerkes, Miss Margaret Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Moore, Miss Carrie Moore, Mrs. W. B. Maxson, Miss Mabel Moxson, Miss Mary D. Compton, Mrs. I. W. VanBlickel, all of this city, are stopping at Patchogue, L. I., and most of them are at the Clifton House.

Mrs. Julia A. Barrett, of New York, is visiting Mrs. Buggies, of West Third street.

Miss Marion Woodcock, of West Seventh street, has returned from Patchogue, L. I.

Mrs. M. T. West, of Crescent avenue, leave tomorrow for a sojourn at Atlantic City.

E. P. Williams and daughters, Miss Florence Williams and Miss Eleanor Williams, of West Seventh street, sail on August 5th for a trip through Europe.

TALK OF CHANGE IN TROLLEY EXTENSION.

Substitute Considered for Arlington Avenue Line.

THE NEW LINE IS SHORTER.

IT WOULD LEAVE PRESENT TRACKS AT RICHMOND STREET.

The Line Would Go Out That Thoroughfare to Watchung Avenue and Thence to Prospect Avenue by a Private Right of Way—Prospect Avenue Would Lead to Woodland, to Cemetery.

The southern end of the city patiently awaits the arrival of the trolley. The Plainfield Street Railway Company has agreed to build one in that direction and the City Fathers are anxious to open up that section. The hopes of the trolley advocates in that part of Plainfield seemed about to be fulfilled when there came the determined opposition to the Arlington avenue extension of the city trolley system. But there are other ways besides Arlington avenue to reach the southern end of the city. Already the trolley company is considering a substitute for the proposed Arlington avenue route that will practically cover the same territory.

One of the aims of a line in the southern section was to reach the Crescent Oval, the Hillside cemetery and the Hillside Club golf links, as well as open up the property all through there. This the company intends to accomplish as soon as possible.

The route that the company is now considering is very different from the other. It will branch off of the Netherwood line instead of the West Fourth street line. It is planned to continue the tracks out Richmond street south from Putnam avenue, where the Netherwood line now turns. The new route will follow Richmond street to Watchung avenue and thence through a private right of way on the property of Isaac P. Brown and Jas. E. Martine.

This private right of way would extend to Prospect avenue, not far from Park avenue. The line would then continue east on Prospect avenue to Norwood avenue and south along that thoroughfare to the point by the cemetery originally intended to be the terminus of that extension.

This new route finds favor with the company in that it is considerably shorter and consequently cheaper and is not likely to encounter any opposition along its line. It would be about as near as Park avenue at Ninth street at the route at first proposed although the section south of Ninth street and west of Park avenue would not find it anywhere near as convenient.

The company is now quietly looking into this line and may take action on the matter very shortly.

ALLEGED BICYCLE THIEF.

James Wood Charged With Stealing a Wheel at Westfield.

Elizabeth, July 12—James Wood, of Fanwood, was committed to the county jail yesterday for the larceny of a wheel from Geo. Gluck in Westfield. Over a month ago the bicycle was stolen. Gluck has been on the lookout for it. He has examined all wheels left alone by their owners in various parts of the town, and a few days ago his vigilance was rewarded. While in Crizen's bicycle store in Westfield he saw the front wheel of his machine, which had been left there for repairs.

On making inquiries he found that the wheel had been left there by Cornelius O'Donnell, who had obtained it, together with the rest of the bicycle, from Frank Wood, son of James Wood, who gave it to him as security for a horse which he had bought. Gluck, satisfied that he had found who took his machine, at once took steps which resulted in the arrest of James Wood and his lodgment in the county jail, where he is at present.

A Card of Explanation.

We are daily receiving inquiries from customers asking when their premiums are to be delivered to them. We desire to make our position clear in the matter. When the present firm purchased the business from Edward White, Febrary 20th last, the latter agreed to furnish premiums to all customers who had turned over their coupons to him previous to the date of the sale. (This being one of the conditions of the sale of the business.) The present firm assumed no responsibility in the matter and cannot be held responsible for the delay or failure of our predecessor to fulfill the conditions of the contract.

Crosby & Hill.

SNAKES DO NOT BITE.

Jaws Connected Only by a Cartilage and Cannot Come Together With Force.

It is a common error that snakes bite. Snakes do not bite. Their jaws are connected not only by a cartilage and cannot be brought together with any force. The poisonous snake strikes from its coil, throws its head and body forward and hooks its fangs into the object aimed at. The entire work is done with the upper jaw. The serpent does not swallow its prey, but slowly draws itself over the creature it devours. It is enabled to do so by the elasticity of the skin and the extraordinarily loose condition of the teeth-bearing bones of its fangs. As for a snake depositing a thick slime all over its prey before swallowing it, it is a mistake. The tongue does not carry moisture enough to do this, but when once inside the animal there is an abundance of saliva. The tongue is looked upon as a sting, and the common expression is "Look out for its sting!"

The tongue is a mobile, extensile organ of both touch and taste. So far from being a stiag, the delicate implement is of the greatest use, and expresses fear, anger or pleasure. The tongue of a snake is very important to its carnivorous habits, as the slightest injury even to its tips generally results in the snake's death.

Bag Ball.

Bag ball is a new game freshly imported from England. It is adapted to the tastes of both old and young and may be played under cover or in the open air. The game is played with tennis balls and rackets and a receiving board. Forty-five feet is suggested as a proper distance from the striking point to the receiving board, but this is not arbitrary. The balls are to be 12 red and 12 white lawn tennis ones, and the game is won by those who first play six balls through the holes into the net at the back of the receiving board. The server or bowler delivers underhand, 12 balls into the rebound unless the striker is "out" before the 12 are bowled. Balls that do not pitch into the rebound are "no balls," and three bowled thus in succession count one to the striker. The striker stands with one foot within or on the line forming the striking circle and hits the ball as it rises from the rebound, endeavoring to bat it into one of the holes on the receiving board. The striker is "out" if he misses three properly bowled balls in succession, or if the ball should be caught by an opponent. It is rebounds from the receiving board, or caught by the server, and also when 12 properly bowled balls have been delivered. The server takes the place of the striker in turn. When more than two are playing, all may play against one another or sides may be chosen.

Lizard Against Snake.

A remarkable story of a contest between a snake and a lizard comes from Greenup, Ky. The contest took place in a cluster of saplings and lasted for nearly half a day. The lizard would run up a sapling clear to the top and patiently wait while the snake wound its way about half way up the sapling. Then he would jump from the top of the tree to the ground, and the snake would also fling itself from the tree, both striking the ground about the same time, but before the snake could get himself straightened out the lizard, which did not have to uncoil, would scale up another sapling. Then the snake would repeat its efforts to procure a dinner. The snake, not being a ready climber, was at a great disadvantage in the contest, and after many efforts apparently gave it up as a fruitless job.

A Kind Voice.

You sometimes hear boys and girls say words at play with a quick, sharp tone, as if it were the snap of a whip. If any of them gets vexed, you will hear a voice which sounds as if it were made up of a snarl, a whine and a bark. Such a voice often speaks worse than the heart feels. It throws more ill will in tone than in words. Such as these get a sharp voice for home use and keep their best voice for those they meet elsewhere. We would say to all girls and boys, "Use your best voice at home." Watch it by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in the days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. A kind voice is a lark's song to heart and home.

CUBAN FREEBOOTERS.

Savages Who Have Reverted to the Type of Their Primitive Ancestors.

They are mostly mongrels, weather-hardened and soul-hardened savages, who have reverted to the type of their primitive ancestors, and reacquired the faculty of making a feast day compensate the hardships of six fast days; digesting the sun-dried bull beef of their bivouacs as readily as the made dishes of their wives; and sleeping and indeing in quagmires on a pillow of willow hurdles as soundly as in a feather bed. Their fox-trail instinct will easily prevail against the industrial population almost entirely disappeared under the terror of the freebooters, whose campfires can be seen smoking in the summer nights from the mountains on the last ceased to leave the farmers a living share in their agricultural products. The Cerro de Cobre, some eighty miles from Cuba, in the province of Puerto Principe, was long dreaded as a haunt of runaway slaves, and these refugees have now been joined by desperados numerous enough to become savagely aggressive. Their neighbors, too, have abandoned hundreds of farms that can no longer be hoped to repay the toil of tilling. In such circumstances the outlaws eke out a subsistence by hunting and fishing; but withal continue to extend the range of their marauding depredations, and recently one of their restless leaders was caught and hanged by a posse of exasperated ranchеros, on the charge of having decorated his headquarters den with arabesques of human heads, "nailed up spread-eagle fashion, or like a collection of dried fern leaves." The total value of the property destroyed by these moss troopers has been computed to exceed half a billion dollars, and a list of their murders would resemble the bulletin of a Dahomey war chief.—The Forum.

Women in the Ladrones.

At the present day the woman of the Ladrones are a charming, light-hearted lot, beautiful in their youth, with their golden brown complexions, soft brown eyes and silky black hair. The matrons of the island, smiling, good-natured and plump, have lost most of their beauty by middle age, but their general kindliness of expression makes up for any loss in mere physical attractions of line and color.

Simple, cheerful and hospitable, the home of the average islander is like those of most natives of the tropics, little more than a thin wall and palm-thatched roof to keep out the rain. In the Ladrones it rains every day. Clothes spread out on grass plots to dry therefore seldom escape a second dampening about midday, a fact that does not in the least disturb the launderesses, as the rays of the sun are so warm that they are soon dried off and are indeed whiter than ever.

Most of the inhabitants wear few clothes and so the weekly washings are not of such alarming proportions as one might imagine in so warm a climate.

The natives of the islands are Chamorros, a people resembling the Philippine Islanders in many respects. The Caucasians who have visited the Ladrones have married and intermarried with the natives until the proportion of Chamorros is now very small.

The houses of the Spaniards are a little more elaborate than those of the Chamorros. A typical middle-class dwelling is built with a thick stone wall on the ground floor, through which the large doors open wide. The rooms are unfloored, the earth being trampled hard. The first floor is about seven feet from the ground, upon which the living-room is on the first floor and is as a rule covered with rough hewn logs of mahogany. The end of the house has a gallery built outside between the overhanging roof and it is there in the shade of the banana and pineapple or palm tree that the women of the household sit to do their sewing and to gossip.

The Trekking Wagon.

The South African wagon is a long, heavy cart mounted on four high wheels. As a rule it is built of teak and hard-working beasts as one could wish to find. Their mode of progression is certainly slow, but there is a strongness and a tenacity about them which may draw men to it almost as the Alps draw their devotees. In front there marches the "voor-looper," generally a small boy, leading the two foremost oxen by a rein or rope passed through their nostrils.

The driver walks alongside with the long and terrible whip he uses so unsparingly, or else sits on the front of the wagon and gets off occasionally to push up the wheels when they stick in impartiality. The travelling is often at night, starting a little before sunset and marching till perhaps 11 or 12 o'clock, but there is a halt till a little before the first signs of dawn, when they go on again till the sun begins to get hot overhead, and then they lie by for the day.

Another Thing to Consider

"Do you think a man has a right to open his wife's letters?"

"Well, he may have the right; but I don't see how he could have the courage."—Chicago Record.

Scientists have demonstrated that the purest air in the cities is found about twenty-five feet above the street surface. This goes to prove that the healthiest apartments are those on the third floor.

MORALS OF BIRD AND BEAST.

Fierce Jealousy of Sparrows and Gentleness of Cows, Dogs and Horses.

The sparrows on the roof were making a great disturbance, and their twitterings, with an occasional note of distress, drew the attention of a man to the window. It was the old story, five or six of the tiny brown rowdies were hectoring one of their companions, which darted hither and thither to escape the torture of sharp bills and battering wings. The victim secured a corner and proceeded to put up a brave fight, but it was of no avail. One of the bullies dashed at the centre of it, and then like a flash swooped down and drove the victim from the position of vantage, and the unequal battle began anew, nor did it end until the object of their wrath was pecked and battered to death. But their enmity did not end alone in death, for they battered away at the remains until the man stepped upon the roof and rescued the inanimate bunch of feathers, bravery and bird tragedy and took it to feed to some favorite cat.

Why had the sparrows killed their once companion. He laid the dead bird upon his palm and gave it a minute examination. The tips of the wings and tail feathers as well were dyed a brilliant scarlet. This was not blood, for the coloring had dried. It was paint. Some bird in its flight had evidently dashed against some fresh and moist paint, and thus ornamented its naturally plain plumage. The enmity of sparrows is one of which birds will, impelled its companions to destroy it forthwith. Mayhap it made mention of its new plumage, was proud of vainglorious. Who can say? But as it was more beautiful its companions put it out of their way.

Horses and cattle know nothing of selfishness. A cow will find a fine spot for feeding, will not go and draw its pasture companions to the nice find, but if they perchance follow the cow will share with them and not defer them from feeding. The horse possesses equine brotherhood, for when it finds a good plat to nibble it will neigh, and thus call its mates to its side to enjoy and have a good time at the feast.

The horse and cow are alike unselfish, but the former is a creature of higher grade in the animal kingdom, hence is prone to call its mates to share its good things. Food in the manger, or provided and put there by man has a different effect. Few horses and as few cows will poke their muzzles into the same manger without resisting the efforts of a companion to do likewise. This is neither selfishness nor greed. The horse and cow both possess cleanly tastes as to feeding, and they simply do not like to have the nose of their fellows in their repast.

The vagrant dog that finds a back yard of plenty and a servant with a kindly disposition and a plate of food will generally noise the good news about, and their canineships will rejoice and feel more lucky, generous, and whole-hearted guide forthwith to the lack yard of plenty and kindly dispositioned servant. They may fight and snarl and jaw over the food, and each will try to get the most. But a dog will not sneak away from its companions to enjoy a good meal without inviting the others of the fact. Cats are selfish and never fail to steal away their food and eat it in seclusion. No cat would ever stop to consider the most famished condition of a companion when about to go to its dinner.

Has More Toys Than Any Other Boy.

The most original collection of toys on record belongs to Dudley L. Dorr, a fourteen-year-old boy, living in East Boston. The boys father takes pleasure in buying Dudley the most unique playthings to be found anywhere. His collection is a summer house made out of a horse-car, a miniature ferry system modelled exactly on that of Boston's ferry department, and a perfectly equipped night-lunch wagon, 6 feet long and fitted up with the full set of kitchen utensils of a regular lunch wagon. The cart is decorated in white and gold, has stained-glass windows, and is drawn by a Shetland pony. Among the boy's other odd playthings are a tiny railroad station, with trains and tracks, and models of steamships, ice-wagons and perambulators.

For Boys and Girls.

In the spelling game a prize is given to the best speller, and a wooden spoon or dishcloth is given to the worst. The words to be spelt should be written out clearly on slips of paper, with the definition added below, and all placed in a box in the middle round which the players are seated. The person to start the game draws out one of the papers at random, pronounces the word distinctly, and reads out the definition. The player seated next to him, spells the word. If she does so correctly she takes the paper, draws another from the box, reads it, and reads the definition to the next neighbor; but if she misses the word the one pronouncing it spells it aloud and places it in the box. The game continues round the table, the papers being drawn in turn till the game comes back to the starter. No one is allowed to try twice to spell a word. Each player keeps his own pile of correctly spelled words, and as many rounds may be played as agreed on at the beginning of the game. The prize goes to the one who has spelt the best. To people who get interested in this game it affords a great amount of amusement, often those who feel quite confident about the spelling of a word being those who make the most amusing mistakes.

"I just think mamma is an awful gossip," said 6-year-old Walter to his sister. 'Oh, how can you say such a thing?' 'Everything I do she runs and tells papa."

WAS ALL RIGHT AT HEART.

But He Did Not Understand the Ways of Polite Society.

For years this man was a rough Westerner, toiling with brain and muscles for a fortune. He made a big one and after he had shown his family all the principal cities of the country, they decided to settle in Detroit. His children are highly educated and of fine social instincts, but his ways and ideas were fixed when he settled down to a questionable enjoyment of his remaining years.

"No, I am not referring everything perplexing to his lawyer, whom he hires by the year, so that there may be some understanding as to terms. The other day the old gentleman secured an audience with his legal adviser and began business at once.

"What kind of feller is that Blank?" he inquired. Kind of durned fool hain't he?"

"He's regarded as one of our most exemplary and promising young men. I know him well, and he'll succeed."

"Well I hope so, but I tell you he hain't got the sand. He's been shinin, 'round the oldest gal of mine and the other day he kim streakin' into my private den, made a fine speech tellin' me how he loved her and asked me could he have her. I tole him mighty quick to do his own courtin', and if he was to doggone skeered to ask her he needn't look to me to pull his ches' nuts outen the fire. What he thanked me for I hain't figured out yet. Next day she showed me a big diamon' ring on her finger she said he gave her and tole as how they wer engaged. Then I kicked up 'norther muss, if she wants diamonds I'm a durned sight abler to buy 'em 'an he is. When I tole her to send it back and behave herself, her and the old lady stampeded and I hain't been able to 'round 'em up no how. Now, how is it?"

After the lawyer had drawn on his facial code for the benefit of his client, the latter swore a paragraph or two at himself and went out to look for a nice little home he could buy for "that feller Blank and the gal."—Detroit Free Press.

Good Use for Good Money.

"Will you give a poor fellow a dime, boss?"

"I suppose you want to buy whisky with it?"

"No, boss, I want to get my hat cleaned."

Not Married Yet.

I rode up to a country store, where a young girl stood on the porch swinging a sunbonnet and talking to a mountaineer. He had left her in that position a year before, and her father had told me then his daughter and the mountaineer would soon be married. Talking to the father a few minutes later, I asked:

"Is your daughter married yet?"

"Naw, an' I don't think she will be."

"What is the trouble? I saw her talking to her lover just now."

"Yaas—she don't do much else. That feller ain' no 'count. He's ben courtin' for three y'ars, an' axed Sal ter marry 'im y'ar ago. I tol' him ter clean out, an' s'posed he'd 'lope with her. I tol' Sal she could hev my bes' hoss ter run away with, but he never did make no propersition. I ain' goin' ter the expense of no weddin' fixin's, an' it looks like he wan't goin' ter run off with her, so I guess he won't. I ain' goin' ter have no hoine weddin'; kain't afford no sich honsense; an' I've hed six gals run off an' git married, and that feller don't seem to hev no appreciation of our attentions."

As I left the girl was still talking to her lover, while the old man watched them from behind a tree.

A Long-Felt Want.

Delinquent Patient (quietly entering doctor's office)—I judge, Doctor, by that array of drugs before you, that you are trying to devise some new medical compound.

Doctor—I am; I'm trying to study out a new form of emetic much needed by our profession.

Delinquent Patient—A new form of emetic, did you say?

Doctor—Yes. Something to operate on the pockets of our patients.

Getting Some "Trimmins."

"Where is your old man this morning, Auntie?"

"He done gone down to the tavern, sah, to git some trimmin's."

"Trimmings? Has the tavern is a queer place to go for anything of that sort, isn't it?"

"I reckon not, sah. Dat's de on'y place he ebber go ter git de kine he done use; I mean de kine wha' de doctor call delirum trimmin's."

The Urgent Need.

"Say, old man, lend me a quarter. I have a sure thing on the Stock Exchange."

"What you only need a quarter?"

"Yes. I want it to tip the doorkeeper, so as I can get on the floor, where I can borrow $100 from my rich cousin."

The Modern Method.

"It is an awful thing not to know where one's next meal is coming from."

"Yes, but a good many of us married men are experiencing it since the grocery stores got to advertising bargain sales."—Indianapolis Journal.

HE MADE A DISCOVERY.

An Instance Where a Superabundance of Knowledge Was Disastrous.

"I hear a good deal about luck," said the oculist as he polished away at a pair of eyeglasses and smiled in a sorrowful way, "but I don't believe in it. The man who has luck is the man who don't make a fool of himself, as I did a year or two ago. If I'd had two grains of sense I'd have let his ways and ideas were fixed when he settled down to a questionable enjoyment of his remaining years.

"No it was'nt a ground floor speculation. I was engaged in breathing on the glasses and holding them up to the light. "I got a letter from the President of one of the biggest railroads in the country, asking me to call at his office. When I called I discovered that he wanted to pay me $5,000 per year to test the employees of the road for color blindness. I closed with the offer as quick as I could get my breath, and a day was named for me to bring up my samples and show the old gent how well and he'll succeed.

"Well I hope so, but I tell you he hain't got the sand. He's been shinin, 'round the oldest gal of mine and the other day he kim streakin' into my private den, made a fine speech tellin' me how he loved her and asked me could he have her. A SQUIRREL BONANZA.

Boys Capture Over One Hundred of the Animals on the Potomac River.

The boys near Cumberland, Md., recently had what boys everywhere would call a "bonanza." Somewhere in the mountains above Cumberland the squirrels for some reason, probably lack of food, became discontented with their home and they held a great council of war and decided to migrate to the southward in a body. So they all set out one bright morning and traveled until they reached the Potomac river. Here they all leaped in and swam across. Some boys on the further shore saw them coming in a vast, dark body that nearly choked up the river. At first they were frightened, but when they knew that they were squirrels they lay in wait and caught more than 100 of them. People who saw the migration estimated that there must have been more than 3,000 squirrels in the company. Such migrations are not at all uncommon, although it does not often fall to the lot of boys to be on hand to see them. Rats, lemmings and other small animals migrate in the same way.

Tops and Top-Spinning.

Top-spinning is one of the oldest games in the world. It has been played for thousands of years, and there are few even of the savage nations of Asia and Africa who don't play the game with some sort of top. Long before Columbus sailed for America the Indians had a good deal about tops and top-spinning. The Sioux whittled them out of bits of wood, something like the one shown in the picture. In Ceylon, Siam and China times a skillful stilt soldier will plunge into the ranks of the enemy like a mailed knight of old, and tip over the whole row of them without once losing his balance. The game is never out until every man is won over and fixed up on one side, and oftentimes when only the general of an army is left he can, by making a few bold strokes, win back all his soldiers. This is what makes the game particularly exciting.

Several times the boys have brought brooms along with them for arms, and each of them, with a broom held fast under his arm, charges down on the enemy. In this warfare a soldier may hit the enemy anywhere but in the face or head, using his best efforts to push him over. If a soldier drops his broom he is "dead," or out of the fight. This sport is even more exciting than the ordinary battles, but it is hard on the brooms.

Electricity Defined.

It is related of the deceased Italian scientist, Galileo Ferraris, that in answer to a young lady's request to be described in her album the following definition of electricity: "Since Maxwell has demonstrated that the vibrations of light might consist of periodical changes of electro-magnetic forces, and as Hertz has given Maxwell's theory an experimental basis, and in spread of the similarity existing between electro-magnetic waves and light waves, the belief becomes more and more firmly established that this light-conveying ether and the medium in which the electric and magnetic forces act are identical.

"Therefore, I may well reply to the question, Oh, studious and charming maiden, 'What is electricity?' that it is not only the fearful agent which at times lights up the heavens suddenly and startles thy soul with its loud clapping of thunder, but also the light that gives to thy awakening eyes, which as light and heat brings forth the magic of color and breath of life, which transmits to thy heart the pulsations of the universe and awakens in thy soul the charm of gliance and smiles."

Then began a fight which is described as the fiercest, loudest and most bloody that ever was seen.

The combatants were separated before they had quite killed each other, but authorities on hyenas say that they would resume it immediately were they ever put together again.

BATTLE ON STILTS.

An Exciting and Novel Game Introduced by Western Boys.

Several boys in Chicago improved the last stilt season with an exciting game on stilts which they called "stilt fighting." Nearly every afternoon they would gather in an open lot just south of Washington park, and the stilt contests attracted no little attention. Each of the boys got a pair of stout stilts, with the steps about eighteen inches above the ground. Two of the boys were chosen as leaders or captains and they picked out their men, taking turns in making the selections. Then the sides separate and line up as in pull away or any of the old games. At a word of command from the umpire they advance on each other, walking steadily on their stilts. When they get close up together they jostle and push one another in the endeavor to throw the soldiers of the other side from their stilts without tipping over any of the soldiers on their own side. At the moment a man falls the umpire calls time, the man who is down goes over to the side of the enemy, and the battle begins over again. Sometimes a skillful stilt soldier will plunge into the ranks of the enemy like a mailed knight of old, tip over the whole row of them without once losing his balance. The game is never out until every man is won over and fixed up on one side, and oftentimes when only the general of an army is left he can, by making a few bold strokes, win back all his soldiers. CHILDREN'S CORNER

SWING SONG.

Up and down in the swaying swing
Brother is swinging me;
Like the swallows he makes me fly—
The air and the leaves go rushing by;
I can look clear away when I go so high,
And there's so many things to see!

Brother's so strong and big and good;
He smiles when he calls to me;
I can see for an instant over the wall,
Where the trees by the shore let their shadows fall,
And when he runs under, I see so small,
The boats far out on the sea.

Every time when the swing comes back,
How he pushes—you ought to see!
And if even the treetops are holding still,
When I'm swinging a breeze comes over the hill;
I guess he'll explain that—I know he will—
He explains so much to me.

He knows just when my arms get tired,
Though how I do not see;
Then the swing goes slow, and the wind goes down,
The sea disappears and the meadows brown—
And the wall—hides the trees—and the distant town,
And the swing—stops—with—me.

CRICKETS FOR PETS.

How You May Get One to Sing Upon the Hearth.

We are accustomed to think of the "cricket on the hearth" as something very old-fashioned, belonging to the days of grandmothers, powdered hair and open fireplaces. Lacking the hearth, the cricket does not visit us.

At this time of year the crickets, hidden away under the edges of the sidewalks and in the long grass that grows up around country fences, are playing the last tunes of the year. As soon as the nights begin to get genuinely frosty they will slip away into some snug crack and sleep until next spring—unless they can find a place indoors where there is a comfortable hearth with plenty of convenient cracks for hiding places; and they will remain lively all winter and provide the householders with musical selections every evening.

We can't all have a cheery cricket on the hearth to bring luck to the home where it stays, but any boy or girl can have a cricket or two or three of them in a box.

Go out some afternoon and catch a few fat crickets, being careful not to injure them. Prepare a home for them by stripping the cover from a cigar box and substituting for it in place a piece of open-meshed wire gauze. In the bottom of the box a small quantity of sand should be placed and sprinkled over with a handful of grass. Two or three chips, under which the crickets may hide, will furnish the home complete.

Put the little diddlers in and you will be astonished to see how quickly they take possession of their new abode. In a short time they will grow tame and friendly, even eating crumbs out of your hands. Enough food for them can be obtained each day from the brushings of the dining table. A little water should be sprinkled occasionally on the grass to take the place of their regular beverage—dew.

Every afternoon they will tune up their orchestra and play a great many cheery tunes and half convince you even in the snowy days of winter that summer has come again. There is a great deal of pleasure in watching the life doings of the crickets—how they eat, sleep, what they find to work at, and other interesting things about their habits. One of the strangest things is the way in which the cricket does the chirping—by rasping his wings together over his body. This and other odd things can be seen by any boy or girl who keeps a cricket menagerie.

Under Water to the Pole.

An engineer of Baltimore, Md., makes the claim that a submarine boat can be propelled under the great fields of ice that have thus far stopped northern navigators from reaching the north pole. This gentleman, Albert Riedel, proposes to build a boat for the journey at once and to start from somewhere in upper Canada.

Those who believe in Mr. Riedel's plan claim that the boat will have to travel under 600 miles of ice before an open sea around the north pole is reached. They believe that enough open places will be found on the journey to enable the boat to go to the surface to replenish the air. It is proposed to run the boat by electricity provided by storage batteries.

Kind Hearted Abe Lincoln.

"Once when I was a girl at school," said Kate Roby, "Schoolmaster Crawford had given out the word 'defied,' which had been misspelled several times when it came my turn. Abe Lincoln stood on the opposite side of the room and was watching me. I began 'd-e-f,' and then I stopped, hesitating whether to proceed with an 'i' or a 'y.' Looking up, I saw Abe, a grin on his face, pointing with one forefinger to his eye. I took the hint, spelled the word with an 'i,' and it went through all right."

FASHION HINTS.

Sheer Fabrics, Guipure and Lace In Great Favor.

Guipure and thick lace, so largely used as incrustations on velvet and cloth during the winter, appear with equal frequency upon summer fabrics, being much employed as a decoration for crepe de chine and silk canton.

Shirred silk crapes of all kinds and mousseline de soie are elements which enter into most of the summer novelties in trimming and accessories. Boas and high collars are still in fashionable favor, although they are by no means appropriate to warm weather. Ostrich feathers and fancy plumage are often introduced, but fur, which a freak of fashion carried through the summer several years ago, is not seen at all this season.

MOUSSELINE GOWN.

Chemisettes of mousseline de soie, liberty satin or lawn with incrustations and insertions of lace are much worn with bolero. A pretty way of bringing the gown into harmony with different hats is to have detached choux of taffeta or mousseline de soie matching the hats, these choux to be used as adjuncts to the collar and plastron.

The gown shown in the cut is of plaited pink mousseline de soie over pink taffeta, drawn in at the waist by a belt of pink satin with long ends. The wrinkled sleeves are of plain pink mousseline over taffeta. The sleeveless mantle of unlined guipure is loose, and has a plaited flounce of pink mousseline de soie around the lower edge, while the sides of the open front are trimmed with coquilles of pink plaited muslin, which also form the collar.

THE WARDROBE.

Gray, Ecru and Beige Gowns For Warmer Weather.

Costumes of gray or ecru crepe de chine are of extreme elegance. Crepe de chine is usually made up into princess or tunic gowns, and the trimming consists of incrustations of lace or plaitings of mousseline de soie. The fastening of the princess gown is always concealed as much as possible and usually occurs at the side, although sometimes it is placed under the arm. The closing at the back has been in a great measure abandoned as being too conspicuous.

Although sleeves are tight and have no gathers at the shoulder as a rule, a little extra fullness is allowed at the top and confined by several darts, a stiffening of canvas being placed inside to hold the top out and so slightly increase the apparent breadth of the shoulders.

Many kinds of new goods may be found of extra width to facilitate the cutting of the seamless skirt, which is all in one piece and opens at the front, side or, less often, at the back.

Fringe is again coming forward as a fashionable trimming.

The gown illustrated is of light beige woolen veiling and is trimmed with mohair braid of a deeper beige tone, which borders the front of the skirt and outlines the tunic at the side. The bodice, which is slightly full in front, is trimmed in continuation of the tunic effect and has a pointed yoke of guipure over white silk. The tight sleeves have three tucks at the top and square tabs at the wrists. The toque of spangled cream tulle is trimmed with pink roses, with their foliage. The belt is of brown velvet and fastens by a gold buckle.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

RUNNING AWAY.

The sky was clear, the stars were bright,
The grass was wet with dew,
When Johnny arose, put on his clothes,
And vowed what he would do.

"I'll leave my pa, I'll leave my ma,
I'll go from here to stay;
They used me rough—I've had enough—
And so I'll run away.

"I'll take my clothes, I'll take my all—
A slave I will not be;
I'll go out west, I'll do my best—
I'll strike for liberty!"

And Johnny started bravely out,
And said he'd ne'er return;
He said he'd go and make a show,
And let his genius burn.

He traveled all that summer night,
And bravely through the day,
"And then," said he, "I can that we Had never run away!

"I'm weak and tired and sick," said he,
With sadness in his tone;
"It isn't best to go out west—
At least, to go alone!

"And now I'm in a pretty fix,
And don't know what to do!"
And then he sighed and sobbed and cried—

"Boo-hoo, boo-hoo, boo-hoo!"

The boy when found was taken home,
And was content to stay,
Said he: "I'm cured, and rest assured,
I'll never run away!"

QUEEN VICTORIA'S ODD PRESENT.

The King of Siam Presented Her With a Few Hairs from His White Elephant.

A few years ago the British government sent one of its distinguished diplomats, Sir John Bowring, to Siam, as the head of an embassy, to present a grave and important question to the king. Sir John was also intrusted, according to the custom of the day, with a number of valuable gifts from Queen Victoria to his majesty, the king. On his arrival he was granted an audience, and after presenting the gifts he acquainted the king with the object of his mission.

Being the representative of so powerful a monarch, Sir John was received with every possible honor and great pomp. In no way could the Siamese king so well entertain his guests as by a display of his elephants, and doubtless Sir John, who later wrote about them, so afforded many opportunities for observing these wonderful animals in the land where so much attention is paid them. At the time of his visit, in 1855, few European customs had penetrated Siam and Burmah, and the ways and habits of the people were essentially oriental, while the great masses of the natives were steeped in superstition and ignorance. One of their strange beliefs was that at one time Buddha, whom they worshipped as a deity, had lived and died in the coffee-colored or pink-splashed creatures called white elephants. Indeed, the Buddha was supposed to remain here longer than in any other animal, and consequently the possession of a white elephant was to possess the presence of the Buddha. In this way great intelligence is accredited to the animal and Siamese were often observed talking into the huge ears of the elephant, making it a confident of their various secrets and pleading for some answer.

A short time previous to Sir John Bowring's visit a pink-splashed elephant had been captured. The king and his courtiers left the palace and went out into the country some distance to meet and welcome it, and the animal was escorted back to the city with much ceremony.

When Sir John had been feted and entertained for many days and the business of his mission was completed he waited upon the king to announce his return and to present his adieus. The king made him the bearer of various gifts to her majesty the queen. Among these was a gold box locked by a gold key, which was commended to Sir John's especial attention as being more valuable than all the others.

Whether Sir John and his suite and the officers of the man-of-war which bore them to England knew what the gift was, we are not told, but the fact that it was locked, as one of the many gems for which Siam was famous.

Upon his return Sir John at once waited on the queen to acquaint her with the success of his mission and present the gifts which he had received from the king of Siam for her majesty.

In all probability Sir John handed her the gold box and the gold key and the queen opened the casket herself. On this point history and Sir John are equally silent. But this is known, that when her majesty raised the lid of the golden casket she found, not a ruby, pearl or diamond, but a few hairs plucked from the king's white elephant; and as Sir John tells us that at this time a hair from the tail of a white elephant was worth a Jew's ransom," we may assume that the queen, instead of being disappointed, appreciated the delicacy of the gift, which, in the eyes of the king, was the most precious offering he could make.

TOWN RUN BY WOMEN

BEATTIE, KAN., WHERE PETTICOAT GOVERNMENT IS SUPREME.

Men Allowed Vice to Run Riot, So the Women Went Into Politics and Won—Now They Are Purifying the Town.

Another town has unconditionally surrendered to the advancing hosts of female suffrage and, for a year, at least, will be completely ruled by women, from mayor down to path master. This latest municipality to come under the sway of womankind is Beattie, Kan. At the recent city election party issues were thrown to the winds, and the question involved was one of morals.

For a number of years the town had been overrun by saloons, gambling houses and other places of wickedness, and the local government had been dominated by these influences. The women of Beattie felt keenly the disgrace and besought their husbands and sons to elect men who would enforce the liquor laws of the state, close the saloons and put a stop to their corrupting regime. Their appeals were fruitless. Things went on as usual had to worse. The town seemed wholly given over to vice.

Finally, when patience had ceased to be a virtue, the women decided to take matters into their own hands and oust the "whisky ring" which controlled the place.

It was a hazardous undertaking in a town where there still prevailed much of the lawless spirit of the frontier. Beattie, be it remembered, is in one of the remote and still sparsely settled counties of northwestern Kansas, where civilization has not reached its highest stage.

The women, however, were courageous and undaunted. They decided to place a ticket in the field for the municipal election, composed entirely of women, whose character and standing in the community should command the respect of all voters who desired good government. They adopted this platform: "Suppression of saloons and gambling dives, clean streets, good sidewalks and the encouragement of general improvements."

The abhorrent element which controlled the town placed in the field its strongest ticket, and had recourse to all the wiles of "practical politics" in conducting the campaign. As election day approached the excitement became intense, and there was scarcely any other topic discussed in the little city. The women, encouraged and supported by the better element among the men, made a gallant fight, and won by a substantial majority, electing their entire ticket, the successful candidates being Mrs. Marie Totten, mayor; Miss Gussie O'Neil, clerk; Mrs. Jennie Schleght, treasurer; Mrs. Annie Smith, Mrs. Jane Kerlin and Mrs. Mattie Watkins, members of the council.

It was not alone a victory for the women, but a triumph for better local government, in which good men contributed their share. Election day was windy and stormy, but the women went bravely to the polls and conducted the closing work of their campaign with as much skill as though they had been dons.

Nearly all the candidates on the women's tickets were formerly schoolteachers from the east and women of unusual intelligence and self reliance.

"To be beaten by a lot of schoolma'ms," said one of the defeated candidates, "is the most humiliating thing about it."

The new mayor—she taboos the words mayoress and council women—is about 40 years of age and is quite wealthy. She says she will improve and beautify the town even if she has to use her own money in doing it. Of course such epithets as "petticoat government," "the broom brigade," "the mamma council" and the like have been hurled at the new administration, but the women have kept on in the even tenor of their way, fulfilling their pledge to rid the towns of the saloons and kindred places of evil. On the buildings where formerly flourished debauchery and vice are now placards—"To Let."

The women have had the city marshal, appointive officers, are men, but they propose to resign and place the whole burden of administration upon the women, a responsibility which they say they are entirely willing to assume. They propose to teach the men folks how to conduct a clean administration and promise that at the end of their term Beattie will come to mean much the same as beatitude.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

A GOOD THING TO DO.

Hold it back, tie it down,
Bind it fast and tight,
Set your lips together close—
Which will win the fight?

Let it go wild and free,
Running reckless riot?
Surely that will quickly be
An end of peace and quiet.

Strongest men of all you know
Find it hard to do.
If you try your very best,
Victory for you.

Try it hard. Bring to it
Firm determination.
If you rule it well and good,
You can rule a nation.

To all the heroes who have been Tried and told and sung,
Let us add the sturdy boy
Who can hold his tongue.

A SHARK IN HARNESS.

How the Florida Reef Boys Play With the Sea Monsters.

On the shallow lagoons of the outer Florida reef the bottom in ten feet of water is often pure white, so that dark objects resting upon it stand out with startling distinctness. One of the frequenters of the reef is a shark, known as the nurse, a huge fellow, nine or ten feet in length, who seeks the seclusion of the shallows and apparently goes to sleep. At least, pretends to, as he is seen lying perfectly quiet for hours, often permitting a boat to sail over him.

Naturally so sluggish a fish was easily captured, and one day, after watching the sharks swimming around the lagoon and refusing to leave the white shallow bottom, it occurred to a party of boys that the nurse shark would make a desirable steed, and immediate plans were formulated to capture him.

The sharks were most plentiful near a long, narrow island, and here the boys made their headquarters. Their mode of transportation was extremely primitive. A boat to the reef, they crossed from the main island where they lived was the wooden casing of an arch some masons had been making, a boat-shaped affair, blunt at both ends. This had been calked and provided with rowlocks, and in it the party made frequent excursions. The plan was to sail the boat quietly over the sharks, then lower a large slip noose down and take one by the head.

The rope and a pair of grains were thrown into the boat, and, all being ready, the boys started on their expedition. They soon sighted a black spot, which told of the presence of the school of sharks, and a few moments later were quietly drifting over them. Not a word was spoken, and the greatest caution was observed as one of the boys held the line in place while another lowered the noose. Unfortunately an oar dropped overboard, and, with a whirl of their tails, the big fishes were off in every direction.

In the excitement of the moment a third boy seized the spear, and hurled it at a shark that was passing beneath the boat. The weapon took effect, and the next moment the line, which was fastened to the pole, stiffened out with a jerk, whirling the boat round and round, and throwing the boys down violently into the bottom. When they picked themselves up they found the flat-bottomed boat dashing along at a rapid rate. They had secured a steed, though not in the manner anticipated.

Up the reef the nurse swam, now pulling the boat down dangerously near the water and sending out a big wave on either side, then turning with a rush to avoid a coral bank, that grew on the edge of the channel, and racing back to the starting point.

All this was exciting, and the boy held the line by bracing back; another took an oar and attempted to steer the craft in its wild race, while the other boy was merely an enthusiastic passenger. Suddenly the shark turned again, and the bow boy, rising to see what new direction it was taking, lost his balance and was jerked overboard. Before his companions realized fully the situation he was being towed along on the surface by the demoralized shark. The reef boys cutting as much of home to the water as on land, so the unforeseen accident simply added to the sport. The remaining boys rowed the boat across the lagoon cutting off the shark, soon picking up their companion who had pluckily held the line during the exciting run, and the boys, being nearly weary of dragging the boat and was then run ashore by his captors.—C. F. Holder.

Fish from a Bottle of Ink.

A simple and pretty little trick, that almost anybody might do, is the changing of a glass full of ink into an aquarium. The glass of ink is exhibited to the audience, then a handkerchief is placed over it and immediately removed, showing a glass of water with a fish in it. Of course the water and the fish are there at first. The ink is perfectly represented by a piece of black cloth, which is held against the inside of the glass. A bit of thread is fastened to the cloth and hangs over the side of the glass away from the audience, with a little cork at the end of it. When the magician places the handkerchief over the glass he takes hold of the cork and brings away cork, thread and all, hidden in the handkerchief, leaving the water and the fish discovered.

MILLINERY NOTES.

Pretty Fruit Trimmings For Ball Costumes.

There are hats of all kinds this season—toques, large hats, small round ones, marquise shapes and turbans of straw, tulle or mousseline de soie. In many cases the hat or bonnet matches the gown.

Among toques the preference is given to valois toques of straw, with a trimming of spring flowers—lilies, wisteria, wild rose, hawthorn or laburnum—mingled with tulle and gauze.

A novel idea for the ball gowns of young girls is a decoration of fruit. For example, on a bodice of white gauze appears a twig of cherries, with leaves. A pink costume has the decolletage encircled by a fringe of strawberries. Of course such adornment requires to be used with moderation and judgment, but it is new and attractive, besides being charmingly juvenile. Only small fruits are available, but besides cherries and strawberries there are red and white currants, than which nothing can be prettier, as well as less edible varieties, such as hawthorn berries and rose tips.

A picture is given of a princess gown of pink foulard with black dots. It is closed at the side by jeweled buttons and black silk cords. The skirt, which is finished by three folds, opens at the side over a lower skirt of plain pink foulard covered with cream guipure. The bodice, which has triple revers, shows a pointed chemisette of cream guipure draped over pink silk, coquilles of lace passing from the left side. The sleeves are of guipure over pink silk. The collar of pink silk is trimmed with black velvet. The hat of gold straw has a decoration of pink azaleas and white tulle.

SUMMER GOWNS.

Costumes of Swiss Muslin and Other Thin Materials.

Costumes of white swiss muslin, the conventional attire of sentimental heroines of the old school, are seen in abundance, but they are not by any means of the poetically simple type. On the contrary, they are lavishly embroidered and are diversified by lines of valenciennes insertion, arranged to form stripes, squares and other ornamental designs. These gowns are worn over underdresses of colored taffeta, because that is the fashion, but as far as attractiveness goes they are much prettier over pure white, the color being confined to the belt, collar and other accessories.

The latest novelty in costumes is the toilet composed of two different fabrics and colors. For example, a skirt of white taffeta, made with many ruffles, is worn with a tunic of lavender crepe de chine, or, in the more simple class of gowns, a tunic of dark blue wool opens over a skirt of Scotch plaid. The same idea may be carried out in plain and plaid or striped cambric or zephyr or plain and fancy foulards.

A gown is illustrated which consists of a princess tunic of pearl gray crepon above a skirt of plaited silk green mousseline de soie over silk. The tunic is draped at the shoulder, where it is fastened by a rhinestone buckle, and is bordered all around with an application of white guipure. The yoke and the tight sleeves are of guipure over silk green silk, the sleeves having a puff of silk green mousseline de soie at the top.

A Case of Misplaced Grief.

Miss Spinster sold her piano in order to buy a bicycle. Miss Spinster was not musical and never touched the instrument. But it had been a gift from her father, and when the men carried it away Miss Spinster was afflicted to tears. Her maid, Bridget, tried to console her.

"Sure, mum, I wouldn't take it so much to heart, mum. To be sure, mum, yer fayther that's dead give it to you, but niver moind. Nora O'Flanagan, Mike O'Flanagan's wife that is, who lives around in Dead Horse alley, has just bought a grand yer her Mary, and, sure, mum, if they's gittin as common as thot yes don't want one."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

BABY LOCOMOTIVE.

Built and Put in Operation by Two New England Boys.

Edwin H. Warren and Ernest C. Warren are two Montvale (Mass.) boys, aged respectively 17 and 15. They are students at the Woburn high school from which they will probably be graduated two years hence. Unlike most boys of their years, they care little for baseball and less for the mad scrimmage of the football field. Their home is on rising ground near the railway station and their newest toy is a locomotive which they, with the aid of their father, Mr. Herbert A. Warren, constructed and placed in operation on a 129-foot track. The locomotive weighs about a ton and a half, and were such engines animals that developed like cows this one might very aptly be called a yearling.

It is an out-and-out locomotive from headlight to cab. The wheels on the bogie track once did duty as pulleys in a mill. They are 22 inches in diameter. Tae drivers once were pulleys, but they are larger, measuring 30 inches. There is no connecting rod, but in lieu of such belt is employed to impart power to the drivers from the force induced by the twin cylinders under the forepart of the boiler. The boiler is three feet long and two feet bore. It was originally intended for a heating apparatus and the three feet of the fire box makes the whole of the locomotive about six feet in length.

Recently the engineers and firemen on the Boston & Maine road were amazed one day to see a saucy duplicate in miniature of the big moguls of the regular rail. The little engine hooked on after some minutes as the limited express trains rolled passed the Warren home, and engineers and firemen waved responses from the cab windows. The engine was a success and from the morning that it was first run out of the little eight by twelve house built to shelter it there has never been a time that it has refused to answer to the requests of the throttle and the reverse lever.

Our Boys Should Remember,

That piety is not priggishness.
That bigness is not greatness.
That it requires pluck to be patient.
That it takes more than muscle to make a man.
That selfishness is the most unmanly thing in the world.
That consideration for mother and sisters does more to make a gentleman than the kind of neckties he wears.
That the only whole man is the holy man.
That to follow the crowd is a confession of weakness.
That street corners are a poor college.
That one real friend is worth a score of mere acquaintances.
That it is better a deal of one's noblest self is greatest cowardice.
That it is never too soon to begin the business of making a man of one's self.

An Ostrich's Appetite.

An ostrich will eat almost anything. It swallows oranges, small turtles, fowls, kittens and bones. A South African writer tells of one swallowing a box of peaches, tennis balls, several yards of fencing wire and half a dozen cartridges. One followed the workmen and picked up the wire as they cut it. Most frequently the ostrich does not swallow each dainty separately, but collects several in its throat and then swallows them all at once. Sometimes it is strangled. Its windpipe is then cut, the obstacle taken out and the wound sewed up, when all goes well again.

Shed Their Clothes in Winter.

When the boys and girls are putting on more clothing to keep out the cold a curious rock crab that lives in the salt water along the New England coast sheds its shell. These little creatures begin casting their hard shells in December, and the shedding process continues for two months. After the hard shells are cast the crabs are quite soft, and are considered very desirable for the table.

Little Princess' Trick Awheel.

The best cyclist among the royal children, who are all instructed in the art of managing a bicycle so soon as they arrive at a suitable age, is the little Princess Margaret of Connaught. Her royal highness has a firm seat and a graceful carriage and often astonishes her cousins with her clever little tricks.

Summit's Water Problem.

The citizens of Summit are seriously concerned over the scant water supply that they are afforded, but at a meeting of the Common Council held last night to consider the problem they decided to recommend something that would seem, in the light of recent events, to be like jumping out of the frying pan in the fire.

The Council decided to notify the Union and Essex Water Company that the new wells on the banks of the Passaic river must be abandoned and the city supplied from the Greenbrook watershed at Feltville, or suit would be commenced.

It will be remembed that only a few weeks ago the Supreme Court affirmed a decision of the Somerset County Court which mulcted the Mountain Water Company for diverting the source of Green brook to commercial purposes, and in view of this it looks as though the Summit Council was taking hold of the water question in a very defective way.

Preparing for the future, however, the Council did a very sensible thing. That was to appoint a committee to find out what it will cost the city to buy the water company's plant. When all municipalities own the water supply of the town there will be less trouble, probably, in securing adequate and satisfactory service, for then there will not be the greed for monster profits that impel private owners now to supply several towns where they should only serve one.

The Employment of Teachers.

The attack made in the newspapers by Miss Elizabeth Allen, of Hoboken, upon local school boards throughout New Jersey, charging them with favoritism in the employment of some teachers, and with unjustly dismissing many other teachers for personal or trivial reasons, is not taken very seriously in the office of the State School Superintendent. Deputy State School Superintendent Betts says that he has no official knowledge of the different cases of dismissals and appointments cited by Miss Allen, as the State has no further control over the appointment of teachers than to insist that they possess the required certificate for the grade in which they are to teach.

He says it is true that in the country districts personal reasons too frequently enter into the employment of teachers, but he thought it better to submit to this than to have a law which would prevent the removal of teachers except for cause. Such a law would enforce the retention of teachers who might pass good examinations and be very faithful, and still not get good results in the schoolroom.

Mr. Betts said he did not know of a school board in any place of importance that was not willing to do right by teachers, and he knew of cases where teachers not up to the standard are retained sometimes in lower places out of sympathy or to avoid clamor from friends who would not be able to appreciate the real facts.

Public Ownership.

New Zealand is one country that has had a very healthy experience in owning and operating its public franchises and offers a practical insight that is the public ownership of such rights that is instructive to this country. The ownership of railways in New Zealand is beyond the stage of experiment; it is at the point of assured success. The experience has been a long one, dating back to 1863.

The number of miles of railway in operation in 1893 was $1,886. The net profit for the year 1893 was $2,246,900. The wages of the employes average 30 per cent higher than those paid on the railways of the United States. You can ride thirty miles for 10 cents.

The annual profits from the railroads, postal telegraph, telephone and express are sufficient to pay all the federal taxes. Notwithstanding the great extent of the country and its sparse population, first class service is rendered the people.

The Borough's Tax Rate.

The determination of Mayor Smalley and his Councilmanic colleagues to reduce the tax rate in the borough the coming year is a laudable one. There is nothing that touches the people of a community so favorably, in relation to the municipal government, as a moderate tax rate, or at least one which is made by a sensible and economic administration of affairs.

DOES COFFEE AGREE WITH YOU?

If not, drink Grain-O—made from pure grains. Lady writes: "The first time I made Grain-O I did not like it but after using it for one week nothing would induce me to go back to coffee." It nourishes and feeds the system. The children can drink it freely with great benefit. It is the strengthening substance of pure grains. Get a package today from your grocer, follow the directions in making it and you will have a delicious and healthful table beverage for old and young. 15 and 25c.

It is evident that the present borough administration is going to strive hard for that goal of popularity.

In this day and age, when such numerous improvements are demanded hither and thither in the domain ruled over by municipal officials, it is a difficult and ingloricus job to do what is just right. It can be reasonably assumed that the granting of one improvement and the refusal of another is bound to make lifeeling towards the officials by the ones who would have profited by the one that is not made.

It requires a delicate discrimination, therefore, to keep matters evenly balanced, and it is here where officials are most liable to err in deciding as to where, when and how a limited sum of money shall be spent, especially as all have a common right to the benefits that must come from it.

With an appropriation of only $18,000 it will be readily admitted that the borough will not be able to indulge in any frills, but with a reduced tax rate everyone will be happy notwithstanding.

Collapse of Boulevard Project.

The great scheme of a boulevard running between Plainfield and Elizabeth, to be built and maintained by the county of Union, seems more visionary than ever, notwithstanding the fact that the taxpayers of the county are to be called upon to foot some heavy bills entailed in the preliminary work of trying to consummate the project.

The scheme seems to have met with unalterable and fatal opposition at at Cranford, where the majority of the citizens are undoubtedly opposed to it. The changes in the topography of the land along the proposed route are greater in Cranford than at any other point, and consequently, in adjusting the differences in what the county can afford to pay as damages and what the property owners think is their just due, there has developed a wide chasm in the plans looking to the success of the scheme.

Without a complete route between Elizabeth and Plainfield United States Senator Kean will probably consider that his offer of $250,000 for the right of way for a trolley line over the boulevard will not hold good in proportion to the distance that the county will be able to place at his disposal. In his case it will undoubtedly be the whole thing or none.

If Mr. Kean does not see fit to pay any share of the $250,000, which he has offered, towards helping liquidate the expenses already incurred, and the county is unable to force him to do so, then there will be only one thing to do. That will be for the taxpayers to foot the bills with the best grace possible under the circumstances.

Municipal Owners of Water Supply.

Former Mayor Fisk, when he was at the head of the city government, urged the Common Council to take steps to acquire the Plainfield Water Supply Company's plant. The suggestion in Mr. Fisk's message was as far as the matter ever progressed until Mayor Rockefellow assumed the duties of chief magistrate of the city. He, too, called attention to the advisability of municipal ownership, and urged the Council to take active steps in that direction. But seemingly the project was sleeping soundly, the meanwhile city and individuals paying enormous rates for the consumption of the commodity that should be the freest and the cheapest, until now Councilman Hetfield appears upon the scene with a resolution directing the Fire and Water Company of the Council to undertake the investigation of the subject in a thorough manner. It is to be hoped that results of a substantial nature will now be shown. The city should own its water supply.

The platform adopted by the Socialist-Labor party, at its State Convention in Kentucky Thursday, is one of the most remarkable ever written in the interest of labor. It takes the position that the ills of the workingmen are not caused by the trusts and the money power and ridicules the cry "down with the trusts." The document holds that trusts are not wrong in themselves, that capital has a right to exist and perpetuate itself, but that the power to legislate should be with the people. The platform argues that either the gold nor the silver question has anything to do with the material welfare of the nation.

Speaking of the difference of opinion in various cities as to what constitutes the best street pavement, the Newark Advertiser says this of asphalt: "Asphalt properly laid, at reasonable prices, on residential streets, is the most desirable pavement to be had, and it is quite as economical as any other, both in the paving and maintenance. The trouble with Buffalo is that it got "too much of a good thing," put it down in the wrong places and in a wrong way, under an insufficient guarantee, and paid too much to the contractors for the job."

If the political prophets who are following the career of Roger Franklin Murray speak by the book the political retirement of the young Plainfield Republican may be ended before the real political season arrives.

SOME THINGS TO KNOW.

Even the hardened locomotive has its tender part.

People who sit upon forms are apt to stand upon ceremonies.

A talkative person seldom fails to make one pneumatically tired.

Snuffing a candle increases the effect and diminishes the cause.

Men are like chickens—they always want to get on the highest roost.

How little man knows of his fellowman—unless he lives in a village.

When some men bury the hatchet after quarreling they go right out and dig up an ax.

Scorching is injurious physically—also financially if the policeman catches you.

The ball player who hits the most "balls" at night always hits the fewest in the next day's game.

The liquid voice of a woman would probably be more appreciated if she would occasionally turn off the flow.

It is always a severe strain on the angelic qualities of a woman when she has to use her wings to dust the furniture.

CULLED FROM ALL SIDES.

Savages, on the whole, live longer than civilized people.

Forty years ago the first missionary was eaten on the Fiji islands.

Swallows have been met at sea more than 1,000 miles from any land.

In Costa Rica canary birds, bullfinches, and parroquets are special table dainties.

According to a German authority the human brain is composed of 300,000,000 nerve cells.

In the orange fields of New Zealand the crop has been known to net as high as $1,000 an acre.

Eight million pounds are computed to change hands in England yearly through betting on races.

Over 400 diamonds are known to have been recovered from the ruins of Babylon. Many are uncut, but most are polished on one or two sides.

Probably few people who visit London are aware that one of the most novel sights of the great city is that of the pigeons around the public buildings.

The British soldier has not always worn a red uniform. White was the prevailing color under Henry VIII., and dark green or russet in the time of Elizabeth.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The queen of Greece is the only woman admiral in the world.

When tea was first brought to England the leaves were eaten.

The Polar currents are said to contain less salt than those from the equator.

Britain requires a yearly supply of breadstuffs of about 30,000,000 quarters of wheat. She produces about 6,000,000 quarters.

The custom of keeping birthdays is many thousand years old. Pharaoh's birthday festivities are mentioned in the Pentateuch.

Berlin is one of the most cosmopolitan of Europeans cities. Though it is the capital of Germany, only 37 per cent. of its inhabitants are Germans by birth.

The broad-headed horses are the cleverest. In the British household cavalry horses with broad foreheads learn their drill more rapidly than the others.

In Russia the proportionate number of births is nearly double that of France, while the German population increases faster than that of any other country.

TOLD BY FIGURES.

A caterpillar in the course of a month will devour 600 times its own weight in food.

There are found in both books of the bible 3,586,483 letters and 773,693 words.

Since the birth of Christ 4,000,000,000 men have been slain in battle.

If kept continuously running a watch will tick 160,144,000 times in a year.

Some scientists now hold that above the altitude of 12,000 feet from the sea level the temperature decreases about one degree for every rise of 350 feet.

The British government is the owner of over 25,000 camels. Several thousands are used in India to carry stores and equipment when companies are changing quarters by line of march.

The largest proportion of single persons is found in Ireland and Scotland and the smallest in the United States. In Ireland 67 per cent., in Scotland 65 per cent., but in the United States only 59 per cent. are in that condition.

METHODS OF AUTHORS.

Mrs. Browning generally wrote in bed.

Whittier and Longfellow were very methodical, always had their desks in perfect order and demanded utter quiet.

George Eliot generally wrote doubled up on a sofa, her feet curled under her, sofa pillows and a pad of paper on her lap.

Harriett Prescott Spofford writes anywhere—on her lap—meanwhile talking to animated part in the conversation going on about her.

Anthony Trollope always wrote standing up very straight at a high desk, with his watch before him, timing himself to a certain length of duty.

Walt Whitman could write anywhere. He has been seen writing on the edge of a newspaper in an omnibus, his elbow all the time joggled by the driver, quite serene and comfortable.

NAVAL DEFINITIONS.

Fathom—A measure of six feet.

Turret—A tower for the protection of the gunners.

Crow's Nest—A perch for the lookout at the masthead.

Armament—A term expressing collectively all the guns of a ship.

Jacob's Ladder—A short ladder with wood rungs and rope sides.

Capstan—A machine used on board ship for lifting heavy weights.

Bow Chaser—A gun mounted in the bow to fire on retreating vessels.

Bulkhead—A partition separating compartments on the same deck.

Cable—A long, heavy chain used to retain a ship in place at anchor.

Binnacle—The compass box of a ship, with a light to show it at night.

Gangway—The aperture in a ship's side where persons enter and depart.

Displacement—The weight in tons of the volume of water displaced by a ship's hull.

Barbette—A fixed circular belt of armor for protecting the guns in a revolving turret.

Knot—A nautical mile of 2,025 yards, equal to about one and one-eighth statute miles.

Monitor—A low, nearly flat-bottomed armored vessel, with one or two turrets, each carrying two guns.

Bridge—A platform above the rail extending across the deck for the convenience of the ship's officers.

Conning tower—An armored tower where the wheel, engine, telegraphs, etc., are located and from which the captain is supposed to direct his men during a battle.

KITCHEN HINTS.

Sharpen all kinds of fish sauce with lemon juice.

A dash of black pepper greatly improves vanilla ice cream.

When using vanilla for flavoring add half a teaspoonful of peach extract.

Put sugar in water used for basting meats of all kinds; it adds flavor, especially to veal.

Add a cup of good date vinegar to the water in which you boil fish, especially if it is salt fish.

When baking fish place on the top thin slices of salt pork; it tastes the fish and improves the flavor.

To give an appetizing flavor to a broiled beefsteak rub it out onion over the hot platter with the butter.

Three tablespoons of freshly made tea, with a pinch of nutmeg, imparts an indescribable flavor to apple pie.

Chocolate is greatly improved by adding a teaspoonful of strong coffee just before serving; a teaspoonful of sherry also helps.

To improve sweetbreads and give them a fine flavor soak them in mild lemon juice water an hour, and then broil 20 minutes in beef stock.

HOMESPUN PHILOSOPHY.

After people pass thirty-five they never make as fine appearance at anything as when engaged in work.

Talk as men shoot; make everything that you say hit the mark or don't waste your ammunition.

No man is an interesting talker when members of his family are present, for the reason that kin pin each other down to facts.

You will find as you grow older that a good many who claim to have their coats off working for you have them rolled up for pillows and are sleeping on them in the shade.

After all there isn't any better friend than the one who never "throws things up to you."

A fortunate man is one who isn't reminded every time his wife smiles of dentists' bills.

We are annoyed until we are thirty by the "example" we should follow, and annoyed after that time till death gets us at the "example" we are setting others.

When a man fails in business his thoughts turn at once to securing a public office. Every man thinks it is easy to get one.

No one is jumped on so quickly when he does wrong as the man who made himself a self-appointed guide for others.

ITEMS FROM EVERYWHERE.

Third-class railway fares in India are less than a farthing a mile.

Great Britain spends on tobacco and pipes about £14,000,000 every year.

Country roads in China are never bounded by fences, but are entirely undefined.

Hamburg's improved apparatus for burning garbage does the work for about 9 cents per 1,000 pounds.

Great Britain's marine steam tonnage is to-day 6,720,703—about as much as that of all other nations added together.

In the hotels built in China for the use of foreigners, the highest stories are the most expensive, because the breeziest.

The longest canal in the world is in Russia. It extends from St. Petersburg to the frontier of China, and measures nearly 4,000 miles.

Queen Victoria, somebody has figured out, is sovereign over one continent, 100 peninsulas, 500 promontories, 1,000 lakes, 2,000 rivers and 10,000 islands.

If a pair of herrings could be left to breed and multiply undisturbed for a period of 20 years they would yield an amount of fish equal in bulk to the globe on which we live.

MAD DOGS AND FRACTIOUS COW.

They Afforded Plenty of Excitement at Greenbrook a Few Days Ago.

Dunellen, July 11—A cow and two mad dogs furnished plenty of excitement at Greenbrook a few days ago. A strange dog put in an appearance and frightened the whole neighborhood. While the crazy animal was running about a bit another dog, which also went mad, and began running about furiously. By this time some of the men appeared with shot guns, and after a hot chase succeeded in killing the mad dogs.

This excitement was barely over when a valuable cow owned by Joseph Johnson, of this place, attempted to jump a high rail fence, and in doing so her feet became tangled up and in the fall she broke a leg. Assistance was rendered immediately, but after an examination it was learned that the cow would have to be killed and the owner had her shot.

Missions the Topic.

An interesting meeting of the Association Volunteer League, or mission ary study class of the Y. M. C. A., was held at the association building last Monday. Joseph W. Gavett presided. A paper on Turkey was read by Russell Bond. "Jonah, the First Foreign Missionary," was the subject of the Bible study. The attendance was encouraging.

MANY MASKED MEN CAPTURED A CHURCH.

Used Great Bell To Welcome The Fourth.

'TWAS AT 3 O'CLOCK A. M.

DROVE SEXTON ANGERBAUER BACK WITH POINTED REVOLVER.

Crowd of Celebrators Visited Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church in the Early Morning of the Fourth of July and Took Possession Despite the Sexton's Earnest Protestations.

The great bell of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church rang at midnight preceding Independence Day and also at 3 o'clock that morning. Concerning the latter time Henry Angerbauer, the sexton of the church, has related a strange tale to his friends.

Sexton Angerbauer was on hand at midnight and the bell pealed a noisy welcome to the National holiday. After the sexton had decided that the welcome had been a sufficiently noisy one he remained in the church to prevent any visitations from the boys that thronged the streets.

It was about 3 o'clock when he heard someone trying to gain entrance to the church. He found a crowd of young men and boys at the door. This same crowd, he said, had visited the church at midnight, but had found him there ringing the bell, and had retired. A revolver, he says, was pointed at his head, and he was instructed to go inside and not make any disturbance. They had decided to ring the bill, the nocturnal visitors said, and any resistence on his part would be utterly useless.

There were thirty or forty of them, Angerbauer says, and they wore false faces or masks of handkerchiefs and small flags. He could see none of their faces in consequence and so was unable to identify them. Believing that resistance was useless, he did as he was told and the bell again rang out.

After the masked ones had spent some time in welcoming the break of day in this manner, they departed as quietly as they came, leaving no clue behind that would lead to the discovery of their identity.

DEAF MUTE LOST.

Unfortunate Predicament of a Girl From New Market.

A young girl not yet in her teens was found Monday evening by Patrick Connolly, of West Front street, wandering about and not knowing where she was or how to get home. Mr. Connolly asked the girl some question, but soon learned that she was deaf and dumb. He attempted writing on a piece of paper, and all he could learn was that her home was in Piscataway township and that she was lost and did not known how to get home.

He then took the girl to the home of John O'Harra, of West Front street, and left her there while he hunted up Sergeant Kiely. The latter accompanied Mr. Connolly to Mr. O'Harra's home and made arrangements to have the girl remain where she was for the night. Tuesday a. m. it was learned where the girl's home is and she was sent there. She lives near New Market and had come to Plainfield on an errand. While making the trip she got turned around and did not know how to get home. She belongs to one of the several families at New Market who are deaf mutes.

Hearing for the Naval Reserves.

The resolutions adopted by the Common Councils, of Newark, Jersey City and Hoboken, protesting against the recent reorganization order by Governor Voorhees disbanding one-third of the Battalion of the East, Naval Reserves, will be laid before the Governor this week. A hearing will also be asked on the subject.

DRINK GRAIN-O

after you have concluded that you ought not to drink coffee. It is not a medicine but declares order it, because it is healthful, invigorating and appetizing. It is made from pure grains and has that rich seal brown color and tastes like the finest grades of coffee and costs about ¼ as much. Children like it and thrive on it, because it has genuine food drink containing nothing but nourishment. Ask your grocer for Grain-O, the new food drink. 15 and 25cd

GAME BACK HOME BROKE.

FLEMINGTON MERCHANT LOST ALL SEEKING GOLD IN THE KLONDIKE.

His Pitiful Plight—After Spending Several Thousand Dollars He Returns on Freight Cars—Tales of Wealth Exaggerated.

Flemington, N. J., July 11.—"Kit" Kuhl, who sold out a large furniture and housefurnishing business in this place in 1897, to embark on a Klondike expedition to search for gold, has just returned. He brings back a large bundle of experience for which he has exchanged every dollar that he was worth. Kuhl left Flemington with more than $8,000. His return was at the expense of the railroads over which he traveled and was made principally on freight cars. It took him some three months to reach New York.

The returned Klondiker tells of many adventures and of many privations during his stay and his story of the gold found in the Northwest does not agree with the reports sent out from Seattle and other points. His first effort to get into the interior was over the fourth glacier at the head of Disenchantment Bay. With a large party he attempted to get into the district where they expected to find the head waters of the Tananna river. This proved an impossibility and he, with two companions, Guy Bissby and Thomas O. Hiei, of St. Paul, Minn., returned to Seattle. Upon their arrival a Seattle paper published that they had returned with fortunes, the combined amount of which was one hundred and ten thousand dollars in gold nuggets.

Kuhl then went into British Columbia, fifty miles north of Greenwood, which had been published in the West as a great gold field. He says he found that British laws prevented Americans from placer digging and a licence fee had to be taken out yearly for quartz mining, which simply prohibited any individual mining opportunites. William Cook, with whom he traveled, pushed on to Dawson City by the St. Michael route. A letter which Kuhl recently received from Cook states that there has been no gold of any amount found at Dawson City except on Bonanza and Eldorado Creeks. Mr. Kuhl is broken in health as well as purse, having suffered a severe attack of mountain fever.

A WANDERING HORSE.

Falls Into the Hands of the Police and was Not Stolen.

A large gray horse, attached to a two seated surrey carriage, was found by Patrolman Vanderwee strolling over Belvidere avenue about 9 o'clock last Sunday. The officer took charge of the conveyance and made inquiries about Netherwood as to its ownership. After some little time the policeman learned that the rig was the property of William K. Banks, 1116 East Second street, who had been out calling and had hitched his horse and a post in front of a friend's residence some time previous to the officer's finding him. When Mr. Banks came to look for his horse and carriage he was surprised to find that they had disappeared. He was of the opinion that they had been stolen. As soon as possible Mr. Banks came down town and notified Sergeant Kiely, who in turn was about to send a general alarm throughout the precinct, when Officer Vanderwee drove in sight driving the much-wanted conveyance, which was found to be intact and none the worse for its peregrinations about the streets.

Mr. Banks thanked the policeman and said he would "see him later."

No Committee Meeting Held.

Owing to the lack of a quorum there was no meeting of the soldiers' monument committee last Monday. Councilman Smith is in Westerly, R. I., and Councilmen Mellick and Buckle had to attend a meeting of the fire committee from the Common Council. An effort will be made to hold a meeting at an early date to take decided action as to what shall be done.

A Favorite Hymn Sung.

At the funeral of the late Peter V. Kline, held from his residence on East Sixth street Sunday afternoon, there was a solo by Charles L. Lewis, "It Is Well With My Soul." The hymn had been a great favorite with Mr. Kline during his lifetime. Frank J. Smith acted as accompanist to Mr Lewis.

In Dr. Richardson's Place.

Rev. Mr. Sindall, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, of New Market, occupied the pulpit of the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday, both morning and evening. Mr. Sindall's discourse was an able effort and left a good impression.

MINUS HIRSUTE GROWTH

HAIRLESS AND BROWLESS MAN WANTED BY THE POLICE.

He is Wanted for Stealing Valuables From His Employer, Nurseryman Dorish—He Will Be Easy to Identify.

Officers from Westfield are looking for a slick thief, and the police of Newark, Jersey City and New York have been asked to aid in the search. Lawrence Webber is his name and he is wanted for robbing his employer, Nurseryman Dorish, of two gold watches, a diamond stickpin, $11 in cash and other small articles, while Mr. and Mrs. Dorsh were at church.

Webber got employment in Westfield last April and was supposed to have come direct from the barge office, but from old pawn tickets and papers found in some clothes left behind him, the police are of the opinion that he has made a business of going around the country getting a job merely as a pretense to rob his employers.

He is also wanted at Perth Amboy for a similar piece of work. He is about 5 feet 6 inches tall, 22 years old and has neither eyebrows nor hair, and should be an easy mark for any one to spot him.

MARRIED FIVE YEARS.

Pleasant Celebration Arranged by Rev. and Mrs. F. D. Tildon.

A pleasant affair of last Monday was the celebration by Rev. and Mrs. Frederick Douglass Tildon, of Richmond street, of their fifth wedding anniversary. In honor of the event they invited a number of friends, mostly from Mr. Tildon's congregation at Bethel chapel, to assemble at their home and join in the festivities. There were about fifty guests present, including several from Newark and New York.

During the evening the celebrants were the recipients of a large collection of costly and useful presents, and after a very enjoyable evening had been passed the host and hostess served their guests with a collation. All wished Mr. and Mrs. Tildon many happy returns of the occasion as they departed for their several homes.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Peter Roseberry Drops Dead of Heart Disease at His Home.

Peter Roseberry, a machinist, employed at the Potter Press Works, died suddenly about 6:30 o'clock Monday a. m., at his home on West Front street, aged 45 years. Mr. Roseberry has been ill for a few days and had been attended by Dr. T. S. Davis.

Saturday the family moved from West Fourth street owing to a disagreement with his landlord, Dennis J. Galbraith, to a house on West Front street opposite Brady's ice house. It is believed that the wrong incident to the troubles with Mr. Galbraith so preyed upon Roseberry as to bring about a sudden change in his condition and death resulted suddenly from heart trouble.

The deceased is survived by a wife and five children.

MISSING WHEEL RETURNED.

Was Taken From A. A. Stryker's Barn on West Seventh Street.

A. A. Stryker, of West Seventh street, purchased a wheel for his son last Saturday. Sunday morning the wheel was left in the barn while the family went to church. When they returned the wheel was missing.

Monday forenoon the wheel was found in the barn again, appearing as mysteriously as it disappeared. Part of the equipment was missing, however. Mr. Stryker reported the disappearance to the police. He now says that he knows who the thief was, and, unless the missing parts are replaced or paid for, the unbidden guest at the barn Sunday morning will get into trouble.

Rev. H. C. Eyme Sails for Europe.

Rev. Herman C. Eyme and wife, of 76 Duer street, left Friday for New York to board the steamship Patricia that sailed early Saturday morning for Hamburg, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Eyme will spend the summer with Mr. Eyme's parents at Lichten berg, Braunschweig, Germany, returning to Plainfield early in October. Mrs. Eyme's mother, Mrs. Berens, who resides with her daughter, goes to the City of Mexico to spend the summer with her son, whose home is in that city.

Mrs. F. H. Smith's Father Dead.

Word has been received in Plainfield of the death at B. C. Bentley, of Westerley, R. I., father of Mrs. Frank H. Smith, of Madison avenue. A short time ago Mr. Bentley had a paralytic stroke and it was from this that he did not recover. Mrs. Smith and her husband, Councilman Smith, were with him when he died on Sunday night.

SISTER OF U. S. SENATOR.

DEATH OF MRS. FRANCIS A. BALDWIN NEAR DUNELLEN.

She Was Highly Connected in the South, Where she Held 1,200 Acres—Lived on Stites Farm With Daughter.

Dunellen, July 12—The death of Mrs. Francis A. Baldwin, aged 45 years, occurred Monday evening at her home on the old Stites farm, near the foot of the mountains. Death was caused by heart trouble, with which the deceased was a great sufferer. She lived with a single daughter, and has another daughter living in New York.

The death of Mrs. Baldwin discloses some interesting facts. She was the sister of former Senator Call, of Florida, from which state she came to Dunellen sometime ago. She owned a cotton plantation in Georgia containing 1,200 acres, and intended to trade her southern property for the one she has been occupying. For sometime past lawyers have been arranging the legal matters pertaining to the exchange, and it was expected that it would be *effected at an early date. The ex*change would have been completed a few weeks ago, but for an error in one of the papers which necessitated considerable work in correcting.

At one time Mrs. Baldwin was very wealthy, but during her latter days she was considered property poor. For a time prior to her coming to the borough she was in a hospital under treat*ment, and it was thought that she* would be benefitted by a change of climate. Arrangements for the funeral are under the direction of Walter G. Runyon, funeral director.

STARVED HIS HORSE.

The Suffering Animal Was Shot to Put Him Out of Misery.

To put him out of his misery, Officer Wm. N. Pangborn, local agent for the S. P. C. A., Wednesday shot and killed a horse owned by Wm. Ruckman, of Manning avenue.

It will be remembered that the poor beast fell from exhaustion on Craig place Monday morning. At the suggestion of Officer Pangborn the animal was taken to the Somerset hotel in the borough.

Although notified by the officer to look after the sick horse Ruchman paid no attention to the order. It being evident that the horse would not recover Officer Pangborn decided to kill it. The animal had been literally starved to death.

Steps have already been taken to prosecute Ruckman.

POOH POOHS KISSING BUG.

No More Dangerous Than the Bed Bug, Says Prof. Smith.

New Brunswick, July 12—John B. Smith, the State entomologist, when asked yesterday regarding the bite of the kissing bug being fatal, said that the insect does no more harm than a bed bug. The stories about the kissing bug, he said, were largely the result of a craze similar to that of some time ago, when everybody who was bitten by any kind of an insect attributed it to a spider.

Professor Smith declares in his opinion that there is no danger in the kissing bug bite.

THE BROOK WATER PURE.

A CHEMICAL ANALYSIS MADE FOR BENEFIT OF SUMMIT.

Summit Will Receive it for Private Use Instead of Securing That From Driven Wells, Which is Said to be Impure.

Summit, July 11—The Board of Health met tonight and received from Dr. Charles F. Chandler, of Columbia University, a chemical analysis of the water from the wells recently sunk on the banks of the Passaic river by the Commonwealth Water Company. The analysis states that owing to the amount of free ammonia shown by the analysis the water is not fit to use. The Council immediately accepted the analysis, and received word from the secretary of the water company, Carrol P. Bassett, that, though he dissented from the analysis, the water would not be used from that well, but that Summit's water supply would be sent through the company's pipes from the Green Brook, near Feltville. This water has been analyzed repeatedly, found to be pure, and is one of the principal advantages of the Hill City.

Summit has had a great deal of trouble with its water supply during the present dry weather, and several days ago the Board of Health issued a circular warning the citizens against using water from the new well without boiling it. A number of summer cottagers have left on this account, but the city's water supply is again plentiful and excellent.

THE BOY FAKIR CAUGHT.

Deceives the Conductor by Pretending He Was in a Fit.

John Wilson, the thirteen-year-old boy fakir who has been imposing on the people of Flatbush and other places has turned up in Elizabeth. He fell in a fit on a Central Railroad train Saturday night when the conductor asked him for his ticket, and was taken to the Elizabeth General Hospital. The physicians were soon satisfied he was an impostor, and told him so.

Young Wilson begged to be released. First he said his home was in Plainfield and afterward in Union Hill. A message was sent to Union Hill, and the lad's father arrived at the hospital and said the boy was incorrigible. His real name is Metzger.

The boy gets money from charitable people. He will probably be sent to the reform school.

EXAMINATION FOR BAGGAGEMEN.

Must be Able to Answer Questions Asked About Their Duties.

According to a new rule all the train baggage men in the Central Railroad Company's employ are to be examined similar to a postal civil service examination. The work will be done by divisions. Monday morning an examination was held at Jersey City for the men at this end of the road. The examinations will be continued until all are reached.

The employes are obliged to know the route of a piece of baggage, a trunk, etc., from a given point to any other point designated by the examiners. The new rule is causing some anxiety among the employes as it seems to be understood that some changes are in store for them.

$18,000 TO PAY FOR RUNNING BOROUGH.

The Annual Appropriation Made by the Council.

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION.

OLD COUNCILMEN THOUGHT $18,000 WAS NOT ENOUGH.

Councilman Valiant Questioned the Policy of Trying to Run the Borough on Too Narrow a Margin—Mayor Smalley Anxious for Lower Tax Rate and Thought $18,000 was Sufficient.

There was an unexpected difference of opinion displayed at the regular July meeting of the Borough Council last Friday when the question of fixing the amount of money to be raised this year for expenses was introduced by Councilman Clark. The resolution offered by this member provided that the sum of $18,000 be fixed as the amount to be raised for the present year and that the assessor be notified to assess on that basis.

Immediately Mr. Valiant seconded the resolution, and at the same time he stated that he would oppose the same. He thought it unwise to raise a smaller amount this year than last, inasmuch as a number of notes had been left over from the last administration they would have to be cared for and a reduction in the amount to be raised he did not consider good business principle. Furthermore, he said that the Council would have to borrow money from now until December, when the taxes begin to come in. In view of these facts he thought it would be better to have enough money to meet all obligations than to keep on borrowing. He did not think the basis upon which the reduction is made was a good one, although he favored a lower rate if it would do the work. However, he thought it wise to continue the present rate.

Mr. Valiant also spoke about the debt on the Watchung avenue improvement and thought some provision should be made to liquidate that debt, and he did not think good progress would be made if a reduction in the amount could be decided upon.

Mr. Swackhamer spoke on the subject and he took the opposite view. He said that he had looked into the matter and had come to the conclusion that $18,000 would be sufficient for the present year. He did not think there would be any cause for repudiating any borough obligations, as Mr. Valiant had suggested. He spoke about the successful retrenchment of expenses, and he was convinced that if $18,000 is within a safe limit the Council has no right to go over that figure during the year's session.

Mr. Valiant asked Mr. Swackhamer what provision he proposed to make for paying off the Watchung avenue indebtedness of $10,000 or $12,000.

To this Mr. Swackhamer replied that in such an improvement, which is a permanent one, arrangements should be made to extend the time of payment over a period of years so that the burden would come as light as possible on all.

Mr. Clark spoke on behalf of the resolution he introduced, and stated that he had fixed the amount at $18,000 on the information furnished him by Mayor Smalley, who is in closer touch with the borough's financial matters than anyone else, although he did not claim to be wiser than the finance committee. He certainly believed that the people are entitled to a reduction even if it is a small one.

Mr. Clark stated that the street department had been allowed so much money for this year, and the committee would keep the expenses within that amount. He believed that the Watchung avenue debt should be made as light as possible. He thought that some provisions should have been made by the past administration to liquidate that debt, and to this remark Mr. Valiant took exception by stating that the present administration was trying to put it out on the next administration. By way of explanation he said that the Watchung avenue matter was in litigation and arrangements for clearing the debt was impossible last year.

At this time Mayor Smalley took a hand and President Swackhamer took the chair. He said that the amount fixed in the annual borough report was $20,400, and he thought, after careful investigation, that the amount could be reduced to $18,000. He made the assertion during the last campaign that if he should be elected Mayor he would see that the tax rate would be reduced, and he thought he could see his way clear to accomplish it. He said that he was not worrying about who would receive credit, and he stated further that if he had had as much money to spend as the last administration he did not believe there would be many notes left over for the present administration. He believed that next year the Council could commence to pay off the Watchung avenue indebtedness by arranging to pay $1,000 a year for twelve years.

Mr. Burtis made a few remarks in which he stood by the past administration and took exception to a few statements made by the Mayor.

Mr. Clark spoke again and stated that he had no desire to throw off any obligations. At present there are fifteen or twenty new houses being built in the borough and others would be built which would make more taxable property and a greater income.

The question finally came to a vote and it was carried, Messrs. Clark, Swackhamer, Codington voting for it and Messrs. Valiant and Burtis against it. Mr. Rogers was absent.

PRETTY SUMMER HOME.

CHARMING PLACE IS THAT OF MR. AND MRS. GEORGE MELLICK.

Situated on a Sightly Knoll Near Hillside Golf Grounds—Has a Rustic Appearance —A Beautiful, Cool Place on a Hot Day.

One of the prettiest homes in this locality is that occupied by Councilman George P. Mellick and wife, near the Hillside Tennis and Golf club grounds. Early in the season Mr. Mellick erected a bungalow on a hill near the golf grounds, and after selecting the site, which is an ideal one, he decided to purchase about seven acres of land, which is very choice.

Mr. Benson, of this city, was the architect and he took a great deal of personal interest in the construction of the house. It is built of wood and stone, and has a rustic appearance. A strong foundation was built and a commodious cellar provided for. The front of the bungalow is provided with a spacious piazza, from which one of the best obtainable views of Plainfield and the surrounding country is to be had.

The house is one story and there is one large reception room which, if necessary, can be converted into a room for sleeping purposes. It is provided with large easy chairs, and recesses, and a large old-fashioned fireplace and chimney gives this room a picturesque appearance. There is also a kitchen of good proportions, where all the necessaries can be cooked and served in quick order. The means of lighting the place at night are through the use of candles, but when the breeze is brisk it is difficult to keep them lighted. To overcome this difficulty Mr. Mellick has provided a number of lanterns, which he terms his "candelabra," and these serve every purpose.

The grounds about the place is nicely graded and a fine driveway is provided. From each of the four corners of the building there is suspended old-fashioned lanterns with various colored glass, and at night the scene is entrancing.

Mr. and Mrs. Mellick frequently go to the bungalow and enjoy the cool breezes during the warm weather and occasionally they entertain their friends in their usual hospitable manner. The house is arranged for every convenience and with the idea of affording the greatest possible comfort.

OIL STOVE CAUSES TROUBLE.

Threatened Richmond Street Home With Destruction by Fire.

An oil stove performed some strange stunts at the home of Louis Hedemark, 826 Richmond street, shortly before noon Friday. It set fire to the woodwork and the ceiling and threatened the whole house with destruction. An alarm was sent in from box 27. E. M. Ayres was one of the first on the scene and he carried the offending oil stove out into the back yard. The fire department arrived on time but buckets of water put out the flames.

The loss will reach $40. There was no insurance on the contents. The house was owned by E. C. Mulford.

THE CITY WATER SUPPLY

ONE OF THE NEW JERSEY TOWNS THAT NEED HAVE NO FEARS.

Some Interesting Facts in Connection With the Idea of the City Purchasing and Operating the Water Supply.

Strange as it may seem, Plainfield is now enjoying the distinction of being one of two places in New Jersey that has a reliable water supply that can be depended upon at all times. The other place is Newton, Sussex county, which place secures its supply from Morris Lake, some distance away and which comes to the place by gravity.

The above facts were furnished a local representative Friday by a person who is an authority on water supply in this State. In many respects Plainfield's water plant is vastly different from any other, and is perhaps one of the most costly in this country. The person who is authority for this information says that soon after Plainfield's water supply was established he satisfied himself that it would be impossible to exhaust the supply, and his confidence in this statement and belief has been strengthened each successive year. In view of these facts and the report that an effort will be made to ascertain how Plainfield can purchase the plant for its own exclusive use, there is some information that is valuable at this time.

Plainfield's system is a costly one, as every precaution was taken in installing it to make it perfect. When the city comes to figure on buying the plant no doubt its idea of worth will be far from what the company believes it to be worth. A very important feature about the local plant is that it is self-protecting; that is if it should happen that a pipe burst in any section and a big fire break out at the same time, the accident would have no effect on the system and water in abundance could be furnished to put out the fire. This possibility is provided for in this way. There are an ample and sufficient number of gates provided in every section, so that if necessary the supply can be shut off anywhere desired. This is not true of all plants, for generally the gates are stationed so far apart that they are of no value in case of such accidents.

Another important feature is that there are three inlets to the city and in case one or two should be out of order there would still be a third one to use, so that the water could be sent to any part of the town or it can be confined to any particular section to suit the will.

Regarding other supplies in this State the Press reporter was informed that they cannot be depended upon. He was told that in Trenton the water company give toothpicks to their consumers to remove the gravel stones from their teeth, and in Newark the residents do not barely dare to use water for drinking purposes unless the temperature is so low that all impurities are frozen. Other important places in the State were cited, where if a big fire should occur, the water supply would be exhausted and a famine follow. Summit was mentioned as a sample of what other places would suffer.

Considering these facts it certainly appears that Plainfield is highly favored with her water supply, and there is not only an abundance of it, but it analyzes absolutely pure, and no better or purer water can be found anywhere.

COUNTY ROAD WORK.

Highways are Being Improved in Various Sections of the Bailiwick.

County Road Inspector Fink has reported that there has been completed since his last report county road work as follows:

On Westfield, or North avenue, 23,645 lineal feet of road repaired with 1¼ inch stone; 10,447 lineal feet top dressed with fine stone, and 53,903 feet of gutters cleaned.

South avenue, through Westfield, 15,303 lineal feet of road top dressed.

Central avenue, 5,455 feet of road repaired with 1¼ inch stone; 3,835 feet top dressed, 14,610 feet of gutters cleaned.

The total of work consists of 5¼ miles of road repaired; 5½ miles top dressed, and 12½ miles of gutters cleaned.

At present county work is in progress on St. George avenue.

Realty Changes.

The following real estate exchanges from North Plainfield have been recarded in the Somerset county Clerk's office: Chas. B. Holmes to Samuel L. Bailey, $1; Samuel L. Bailey to Henry S. Jennings, $1,210; Selah Schoonmaker, sheriff, to Wm. M. Stillman, North Plainfield, $20; Chas. Hand et ux to DeWitt C. Ivins and W. C. Freeman, $2,500.

Experiments With Liquified Air.

Andrew E. Kenney, of the borough, who has, for several years been interested in liquified air, made some very interesting experiments with a pint of the air a few evenings ago. The results were not only interesting but profitable.

POLITICAL SNARL IN UNION COUNTY

All the Plums Must Not Be Given to Elizabeth.

VOORHEES FOR HARMONY.

GOVERNOR AND SENATOR KEAN WANT REPUBLICANS TO WIN.

This May Be a Difficult Job if Bob Houston's Friends Insist and Elizabeth Captures Both Senator and Sheriff—Democratic Organization Said Not to Be So Bad After All

New Jersey politicians are over on the alert. Even during the hot weather they continue their slate-making and slate-smashing just as industriously as if the thermometer was close to the zero mark. Of course, the Republican politicians are the busiest, because their party is in the ascendancy, and they want to keep it there. Excepting in a few counties they have much to lose and nothing to gain.

There is no doubting the fact that the Republicans are in a snarl in most of the big counties, and if they are not careful they will come out at the small end of the horn at the November election. In Union county there is an element in the party which is showing opposition to the renomination of former Judge Cross for the State Senate. The real leaders of the party there are in favor of Mr. Cross' nomination, and doubtless they will be successful in bringing it about. It is well understood that Governor Voorhees, Congressman Fowler, Senator Kean and former Mayor Rankin, of Elizabeth, are heartily in favor of the Judge. That, it seems, should settle the matter; but it does not. There has always been a rivalry in Union between the Republicans of the city of Elizabeth and those of the townships over a division of the offices. The township people charge that Elizabeth now enjoys a monopoly, and that it is about time that it was broken up. On the strength of this they claim the nomination for Senator, and they have brought out no less a person than former Assemblyman J. Martin Roll for the office. Had they named any other candidate, perhaps the leaders would pay more attention to their suggestion. The contrast between Mr. Cross and Mr. Roll is so great as to provoke ridicule.

Besides a Senator, Union county will also elect a Sheriff and a County Clerk. The nominations for these lucrative offices, are naturally, much sought after, and have much bearing on the Senatorship. One thing seems certain—all these fat plums must not be given to Elizabeth, or there will be merry war all arounnd, much to the edification of the Democrats, who have not thrown up the sponge, by any means. They are biding their time, so as to profit by the mistakes of the enemy.

In a conversation held with a prominent Republican of Union the other day he stated that, while the nomination of Mr. Cross was almost assured, there was much ill-feeling over the other offices. For a number of years the nomination for Sheriff had been promised to Assemblyman Houston. These promises have never been kept, and, consequently, his friends are now up in arms in his behalf. They insist that he must get the nomination this time, or else trouble will be caused by the rank and file, which may lead to disaster to the whole ticket. Mr. Houston has a large and influential following at Elizabethport, where he lives, and without their active participation in the campaign the Republican ticket would surely go under. It will never do then to disappoint Mr. Houston. But, again, should he be given the nomination, the monopoly charged against the city of Elizabeth would be continued, and the township people would resent it with bitterness. Here is where the dilemma comes in, as caused by the office-seekers of the rival sections of the county. It is stated that County Clerk Howard is almost certain of a renomination. He was the first Republican clerk elected in Union in a number of years, and it would be considered unsafe now to throw him overboard.

Naturally Governor Voorhees and Senator Kean take much pride in keeping their county in line for their party. They are doing their utmost in the interests of harmony, and they hope to be able to settle the difficulty over the nominations for Senator and Sheriff. The Democratic organization there is not in as bad a way as some people imagine. It is not so many years since the county was considered doubtful. In fact, in those days the now minority party used to elect nearly all of the county officers, and when John Kean ran for Governor the county gave a majority for his Democratic opponent, George T. Werts. Dissensions in the Republican ranks would give the Democrats encouragement to make a stiff fight, which would end, probably, in a victory. Should Mr. Cross be refused a renomination for Senate, then the Democratic opportunity would arise.

BAD COMPANY HIS RUIN.

JAY VAN ARSDALE IS GUILTY OF EMBEZZLING MONEY.

Was a Driver of One of Morey & LaRue's Laundry Wagons—Helped Himself to $80 of the Firm's Money.

Jay VanArsdale was arrested Friday afternoon by Constable Weaver on a warrant charging him with embezzlement. The warrant was issued by Justice Moffett upon complaint of James E. Stem, local manager for Morey & LaRue, who keep a laundry at 19 Somerset street, this city, which is a branch of the firm's business in Elizabeth.

VanArsdale is about 18 years old. For a considerable period he has been employed as the driver of one of the firm's delivery wagons. Besides collecting and delivering laundry VanArsdale had authority to collect money from the firm's customers when making his deliveries.

For the past two years these collections have not been satisfactory and it was suspected that VanArsdale was not turning in a sufficient amount of cash.

Manager Stem set about looking into the matter and from what he learned was satisfied that his suspicions were well founded.

The last seen of VanArsdale was Monday afternoon, July 3. He was said to have left the city and as subsequent events show he went to Philadelphia, where he spent the Fourth with several companions.

He returned Friday and was arrested.

The amount of VanArsdale's peculations is about $80.

When charged with the crime in Justice Moffett's court late Friday afternoon, the young man admitted his guilt. He began to take small sums from his collections as early as last May.

Like poor dog Tray, VanArsdale fell into bad company and began to dissipate, and this finally lead to his downfall. Previous to this his habits had been correct and Manager Stem considered him one of his best men. The young man is well connected and his friends are much grieved at the trouble in which he is now involved.

At the trial Friday J. P. D. Kirch appeared for the accused. Justice Moffett held him to await the action of the Grand Jury, bail being accepted in the sum of $200.

DEATH WAS UNEXPECTED

PETER N. KLINE PASSES AWAY AFTER A SHORT ILLNESS.

Neuralgia of the Heart Was Fatal—Lived in Plainfield for Twenty Years —Member of Crescent Avenue Church

The sudden death of Peter N. Kline, aged 63 years, of 435 East Sixth street, occurred Friday. Mr. Kline passed away at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon from neuralgia of the heart, which disease had troubled him for several days. His wife left him sitting up in bed while she went down stairs to prepare his food. When she returned she found him gasping for breath, and a few minutes later he died.

Mr. Kline had been ill for several days, but yesterday he was considered a great deal better, and the family physician, Dr. Jenkins, felt quite confident of his recovery.

The deceased was a native of New York, and has been a resident of this city for twenty years. In his early business career he was engaged in the insurance business in Jersey City, and later was employed in the New York commission house of Helfridge & Co. After that he came to Plainfield and for nearly two years he was employed at the Pond-Tool Works as time-keeper.

Mr. Kline was a faithful member of the Crescent Avenue church. For several years his health was not the best and he was unable to engage actively in any business, but for some time he was employed at intervals by Druggist Armstrong as a bookkeeper.

Several near relatives survive him. He was a brother to Mrs. Alburtus Swaim, of West Front street; Mrs. T. S. Armstrong, of Duer street; Mrs. A. Willett, of Craig place; Mrs. Startup, of Middletown, N. Y., and Lewis Kline, of Boston, Mass. He also leaves a wife and four children, three daughters and one son. A recently-married daughter and her husband started Monday last for a pleasure trip to Montreal, and they were telegraphed to come home.

Putting Wires Underground.

The work of placing the electric light wires underground is now progressing favorably. Madison avenue and West Front street have been opened and travelers will be bothered for a time, but it is to be hoped that the streets will not be torn up again for years to come.

New Superintendent Paid a Visit.

W. W. Wentz, the new superintendent of the Central Railroad Company, paid Plainfield a visit Friday for a short time and became acquainted with a few employes at the North Avenue station. There was scarcely anyone who knew him, and his unpretentious manner won no special distinction for him.

PURSUIT OF A DINNER.

PLAINFIELD POLICE MEET WITH STRANGE EXPERIENCE.

Tried to Entertain Officers of the Elizabeth Force July 5th, and Finally Succeeded After a Little Delay.

Six of the superior officers of the Elizabeth police force came to Plainfield July 5th, to attend a little dinner given them by the local superior officers. After various adventures the dinner was held, but not exactly where and how it had been intended.

The fame of the mushroom suppers at Pedifious hotel in Washington Valley has gone forth throughout the county. The local policemen had heard of it, too. They decided to invite their fellow workers up from the county seat to partake of one of these famous suppers. Accordingly the invitation was sent and accepted. A number of the city officials including the judge and police board were invited to be present.

Sergeant Kiely made what he thought were complete arrangements with the Pedifious family.

Last night the entertainers and their guests went out the Somerset street trolley line to the terminus to where the Pedifious stage was to meet them. No stage was there. They waited. Still no stage. At last, they captured a passing vehicle and persuaded the driver to take the guests on to the scene of the expected feast and then return for the stage. Soon the vehicle returned but with it came the guests also. Mrs. Pedifious had not understood that it was last night, they said, but thought the date of the supper was two weeks later. Then the party returned to Plainfield.

At the Hotel Hunterston a dinner party was in full swing. The Hotel Kensington had been captured by the Doctors' Association, so the officers of the police and their guests took possession of McVey's Hotel at a rather late hour and a dinner was prepared. The dinner was a good one, but it didn't do Mr. McVey justice or the police force, owing to the great rush with which it was gotten together.

The officers who arranged the little affair were considerably worried over the remarkable way in which their proposed affair had turned out, but the guests assured them that they had had a great time and wouldn't have missed the excitement of such a chase for a supper for all the world. Some time the local police officers are going to try again, but they declare that they will be certain that they have a supper and a good one, too, before they try to take their guests to the scene of action.

HIGH HONOR FOR PROF. RHEES.

Chosen President of the Rochester University—To Succeed Dr. Hill.

A high honor that is shared in a large measure by many Plainfielders has just been bestowed on Prof. Rush Rhees, formerly of this city, and now a professor in the Newton (Mass.) Theological Seminary. He has been elected president of Rochester University, to assume office in July, 1900, which will be the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of that institution. He has also been elected a trustee of that institution. Prof. Rhees succeeds David J. Hill, a native of Plainfield, who is now assistant Secretary of State. Mr. Hill resigned three years ago, and his place has been filled temporarily by Prof. H. F. Burton, who will continue during the coming year.

Prof. Rhees spent the greater part of his younger days in Plainfield and attended the public schools, from which he was graduated. He is a nephew of Charles W. McCutchen, of Rockview avenue. He is comparatively young man. Thursday evening last Prof. Rhees was married to Miss Harriet Seelye, daughter of President Seelye, of Smith College.

THE KISSING BUG.

Prof. Smith Says That He Is An Old-Timer.

Professor John B. Smith, of New Brunswick, State entomologist, has been interviewed in reference to melanoleates peolpes, or the "kissing bug." He declares that it is not agressive, and that its bite cannot compare with that of a Jersey mosquito. It has lived peacefully on the banks of the Raritan for years, he says.

Professor Smith showed a reporter a specimen of the "kissing bug." It is a small, inoffensive looking creature, and the only thing it has worthy of mention is its bite. It jabs its victim with a beak that feels like a red hot needle, but leaves no baneful effects. He is useful to mankind.

Pension for Children.

Through the kindly influence of Gen. W. H. Sterling, of First place, who always interests himself in behalf of the soldier, his widow or children, there has been secured a continuance of the late Alonzo C. Townley's pension for the children. The customary fee which General Sterling is entitled to and which he received was generously given to the children. William F. Townley was made executor of the estate of his father.

BOROUGH HAS ALL THE WORK IT CAN DO NOW.

Council Declines to Construct a New Drain.

HAVE NOT ENOUGH MONEY.

COLLECTOR BROWN MAKES A DETAILED REPORT OF TAXES.

Marshal Tenders His Resignation and Fred J. Emmons is Appointed to Succeed Him—Financial Matters Provided for by the Council—Decided to Macadamize Orchard Place Immediately.

In addition to fixing the amount to be appropriated for the maintenance of the borough government this year, which is reported in another column, the Borough Council Friday night received a petition from J. B. Mills, Chas. Hyde and others asking the Council to lay a twelve-inch pipe for a drain on Brook and Franklin avenues, 30 feet on the former avenue and 70 feet on the latter, to carry off surface water for an extra deep gutter. The Council did not feel able to make the expenditure, as the money for the street work this year is provided for. Mr. Mills was present and urged favorable action, and thought that inasmuch as he had done a good deal for the borough they might do a little for him. He agreed to do the work if the Council would buy the pipe which would cost 13 cents per foot. Mr. Clark reported unfavorably on the petition and the Council refused to act favorably.

Marshal George Wise tendered his resignation, stating that he had an opportunity to engage in another business more pleasing to him. The resignation was accepted and Fred J. Emmons was appointed to take his place.

The report of Collector George F. Brown showed that $698.62 had been collected for 1897 taxes and $212.60 for 1898. The interest with Watchung avenue improvement was $795.72, special school fund money received amount to $343.06, and $6.26 was reported from Board of Health fine. The sum of $7,323.13 was reported from Watchung avenue assessment. The following amounts also reported: Macadamizing Summit avenue, $7.59; licenses, $97.50; fines, $23; rent, $11.50; sale of dirt, $3.95; stone and labor, $3.60; balance June 1st, $3,038.85; total receipts, $12,323.11; disbursements, $5,983.63; borough fund, $540.99; Watchung avenue fund, $5,798.57, balance to date, $6,389.29. In connection with this Clerk Bowley reported that he had received $73.55 in fines, and that Recorder Long had received $17 during June fines.

Mr. Clerk, of the street committee, reported that during the past month $43.10 had been expended for labor, and that nearly fifty-one tons of stone had been used at an expense of $61.81. The total expenditures for the month were $95.81.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution providing for the drawing of a warrant of $6,000 on account of certificates for the Watchung avenue improvement; also another resolution providing for a sufficient amount to meet interest on the $6,000 certificates now due. He offered still another resolution providing for the borrowing of $1,000 for six months to be charged to the borough account, and a fourth resolution provided for the acceptance of six per cent. on the payments for the Watchung avenue improvement for an indefinite time.

Mr. Clark brought up the matter of macadamizing Orchard avenue, according to a petition received. He stated that $115 had been subscribed by the property owners, of which amount $90 had been paid in. He stated that the work would cost about $200 and he reported favorably on it, and moved that the work be started at once. Mayor Smalley stated that one man had not paid his subscription, but he knew he was good for it, but if he did not pay he would guarantee the payment. The Council decided to do the work.

Mr. Clark brought up the matter of an open fire well on Jackson avenue near Watchung avenue. He said that frequently he had to put the cover over the well for he feared that children would fall in and a suit for damages would be started against the borough. Superintendent of Highways Thomas Doud was present and he said that the well was being filled up with dirt. Mr. Clark stated that he understood that a surface drainage was running in the well, and he thought that some provisions should be made for perfect safety. The matter was finally left to the street committee to attend to after which the Council adjourned.

Received Her Share of an Estate.

Mrs. George Service, of 409 East Front street, has just received $300 as her share in the division of the estate of the late John Burns, of Elizabeth. Mr. Burns was her father-in-law. The settlement of the estate has just been completed.

THREW THE PIPE INTO THE STREET

Merchants Object to Use of Sidewalks for Storage Purposes.

AN EXCITING DISCUSSION.

M. ABRAMS BROKE SEVERAL SECTIONS OF CONDUITS.

The Pipe Intended for the Use of the Electric Light Company—Shoedealer Did Not Want it Piled in Front of His Store—He Acted on the Advice of a Lawyer—The Police Quickly Ordered a Clean-up.

There was good prospects for a lively scrap on West Front street last Thursday about six o'clock, when two men employed by Wm. Hand began to unload conduits for the Plainfield Electric Light Company in front of the places of business of Frank Linke and M. Abrams. The conduits have to be distributed along the street until such a time as the contractor gets ready to use them. The two merchants objected to having them piled in front of their stores, and while they were doing so a large crowd gathered to watch the fun.

The men did not experience much trouble with Mr. Linke, but when they began to place pipes in front of Mr. Abrams' place affairs grew interesting. Abrams said he would not have them there, blocking the entrance to his store, and he picked up some of the pipes and threw them in the street where they were smashed to pieces.

In the meantime Lawyer William Newcorn was summoned and he advised the men not to block up the front. They insisted, however, and Mr. Newcorn then advised Mr. Abrams to throw the pipes into the street after they were piled up. But Mr. Abrams decided that he would not do that. A little later the police ordered Mr. Abrams to pick up the broken pieces of pipe in the street, which he did rather reluctantly.

Mr. Abrams told a local reporter that when the first load of pipes arrived one of the men on the truck approached him and said that if he (Mr. Abrams) would give him something, he would not place the pipes in front of his place, but in front of some other business house. To this proposition Mr. Abrams refused to accede. The matter has been adjusted, however, and no further trouble is expected.

LUNCH WAR OVER.

Harry Silverstein's Opponents Decide to Locate Their Wagon Elsewhere.

The war clouds which have been hovering about the lunch wagon business in this city for the past two weeks or more have suddenly disappeared and once more the dove of peace has appeared.

It was expected that Harry Silverstein's father and brother, now having a lunch wagon at Plainfield, were coming here. They went so far as to take out a license and were looking for a location.

Last Saturday night, however, they made application to the city clerk for the return of their license money, as they had decided to locate elsewhere. The fee no doubt will be returned to them.

Mr. Silverstein some days ago secured a revokal of the privilege given his opponents by the Howard Savings Institution to stand their wagon along the Masonic Hall site. It is thought the newcomers were unable to get another good location and consequently decided to stay at Plainfield.—New Brunswick Times.

ARRESTED FOR BELL RINGING.

Small Boy Captured by Constable Gjettleson on East Front Street.

The career of John Gjettleson, since his election to the office of constable in the First Ward, has not been a particularly smooth one. Saturday afternoon he succeeded in arousing considerable indignation by arresting a small boy on the charge of ringing door bells on East Front street and taking him to the station house with the intention of locking up the lad.

Gjettleson is janitor at the Y.M.C.A. building. It was reported that some small boys were amusing themselves by ringing door bells and running away. He went on the war-path and captured young Tony Cagle, a lad of ten summers.

Gjettleson took Tony to the stationhouse and then waited for Judge Runyon. As the latter wasn't around, Gjettleson wanted until Roundsman Frederickson appeared. The Roundsman took the lad home where the latter's parents promised to see that he appeared when the Judge wanted him.

To Visit Moosehead Lake.

Edward White, of this city, has arranged with a party of his friends to spend two weeks at Moosehead Lake, Me., and the party will leave next Monday morning. Those who will go include W. A. Coddington, S.S.Squier, J. E. McClintock, S. F. T. Wilbur, Mayor N B Smalley, Geo. Hodgson, H. E. Rider and Nelson Giles.

IS MAC MURRAY NO LONGER A CANDIDATE?

Rumors That He Has Withdrawn From Race.

FOR COUNTY CLERKSHIP.

PROMINENT LOCAL REPUBLICANS MAKE THAT STATEMENT.

His Withdrawl Would Clear Local Political Atmosphere Considerably—Reasons Why Roll Will Not Get Senatorial Nomination—Squier Would Be Willing to Take It—County Gossip.

Is City Clerk J. T. MacMurray no longer a candidate for the Republican nomination for County Clerk? Two prominent local Republicans, each a leader of a particular faction, and one of them the great friend and supporter of Mr. MacMurray, have made the statement that he has withdrawn from the race and is no longer after the place. So far, however, no statement to that effect has been made by the City Clerk himself. The authority for the statement comes from such an authoritive source that it sounds very plausible. The withdrawing of Mr. MacMurray would certainly clear the local political atmosphere considerably. Plainfield's only chance to get something out of the county convention is to go as a unit and with a clear understanding of what's wanted.

Far seeing politicians are not deceived by the boom of Former Assemblyman J. Martin Boll, of Summit, for the senatorial nomination. He has little or no chance of the nomination, they say. His attitude toward the corporations when in the Assembly is said to have sorely wounded him politically. It prevented him from renomination to the Assembly and will now prevent his successful candidacy for the senatorial plum.

Assemblyman George Squier is a factor in Union county politics that must not be forgotten this fall. There seems but little doubt but that he can go back to the Assembly if he wants to and there make a stiff fight for the Speakership. Rumors are afloat that Mr. Squire would like to be county clerk, also that he would not object to being the Republican nominee for the State Senate in the place of Judge Cross.

Already there is a long and powerful howl going up all over the county at the proposed monopoly of the Republican plums by the Elizabethans. If Squier tries to run away with another of them, particularly the county clerkship, there is likely to be lively warfare in the party. The township voters want representation this year, and they are trying to gently, but firmly, impress that fact on the minds of the leaders in the county seat. Republican supremacy in the county is not so secure that the leaders can afford to ignore entirely these outbreaks if they are only dealt with something like unity. If the townships get wrangling among themselves then Elizabeth will step in and smilingly walk off with everything, save a solitary remembrance perhaps for Plainfield.

THIEVED AS HE WORKED.

CLEVER RUSE OF A SNEAK THIEF IN THE HOSPITAL.

Claimed to be an Electrician and Secured Entrance to the Nurses' House—Articles Missed After He Had Gone.

A man claiming that he represented the Plainfield Electric Light Company recently called at Muhlenberg Hospital, and stated that he had been sent there to make a thorough examination of the electric light wires at the hospital and at the home for nurses. He carried a satchel in which he was supposed to have the tools to make any repairs if necessary. He arrived at the hospital between 9 and 10 o'clock in the morning and worked until about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. For a short time previous to his quitting he was at work in the home for nurses. Just before he left he told someone on duty that he had not quite finished his work, but would return and complete it after he had his dinner.

That was the last of him and the last seen of some valuables that were in the various rooms at the home for nurses, for there was strong evidence that the stranger had placed the things in his satchel before leaving and had walked away with them. The man had never been seen before by those in charge at the hospital, but it was supposed that he was sent from the Electric Light Company, as he stated.

It is not known exactly how much he took with him, but the losers are sorry that the man gained entrance to the buildings, and in the future the nurses will probably be more careful as to who they admit to work about the place.

Miss Olga Grohman, of Hazleton, Pa., who has been visiting at the home of Rev. H. C. Eyme, 78 Duer street, returned home Friday.

Harry Gee, of Westervelt avenue, is in Chicago on a business trip.

BUILDING TROLLEY NEAR CRANFORD NOW.

Lack of Rails Delays Work on the Line.

WILL OPEN BY SEPTEMBER.

WHEN MORE RAILS ARRIVE, WILL WORK EAST FROM PLAINS.

It is Expected That the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company Will Open Its Line Between Plainfield and the Roselle Borough Line by September 1st—Big Gang Working Near Cranford.

The trolley road of the Biker combination, that is planned to connect Elizabeth and Plainfield, is steadily growing. The link between Plainfield and Scotch Plains was rushed through to comply with the terms of the franchise secured in the latter village. There is a scarcity in the supply of rails and it was found necessary to bring some of the rails from Westfield to complete the Scotch Plains line. That line completed, the company has turned its attention to the part of the line near where its present supply of rails is stored.

A gang of three hundred men is now at work at Cranford under Edgar L. Serrell, superintendent of construction. Tracks are being laid from the Roselle borough line through Cranford to Garwood. The road there is to be double track. There is a sufficient supply of rails now on hand to continue this work for a week or two. By that time it is hoped that the rolling mills will have shipped more. There is some work to be done between Cranford and Garwood in grading the proposed line and that is being staked out, ready for work at once.

As soon as the supply of rails warrants it, the contractors intend to start work at Scotch Plains and build the road through Fanwood toward Westfield and meet the other gang now at work near Cranford.

It is expected that the line will be complete from Plainfield through to Cranford and possibly further before the first of September. Cars will then be run over all the completed route.

THE TWO YOKES OF LIFE.

REV. MR. SHOTT CONTINUES HIS SERMONS ON PUBLIC MORALS.

Says That the Crusade in Scotch Plains is Getting Along Nicely and That he Will Keep Up the Agitation.

Scotch Plains, July 10.—Following up the organization of the Citizens' League in Scotch Plains, Rev. G. M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, continued his sermonizing on the morals of town yesterday.

In his morning sermon he said that now that the law abiding citizens of the place are rallying to the support of the movement for a higher plane of morals, he felt somewhat relieved of the responsibility that he had assumed, but this would not deter him from continuing to agitate progress in an aggressive way in respect to the reformatory work.

The principal moralizing was done in the evening when he took for his sermon "The Two Yokes—The Wooden and the Iron." Speaking of intemperance he said that he did not confine sobriety solely to the practice of drinking, but to temperance in fine clothes, fast life, fine houses and other worldly pleasures and perquisites. He said that people who indulged in these latter things were wearing the iron yoke of sin. He urged that parents be careful in training their boys for the boys were to marry the girls, and if brought up in a false light of life the result would be unhappy and miserable homes for all. "When I arrived in Scotch Plains I found many people wearing the iron yoke," said Mr. Shott, "and it was my duty to speak out and offer the less burdensome yoke of my Master."

Rev. Mr. Shott severely scored the stand he witnessed in Plainfield the Fourth of July, when a brewery wagon in the celebration parade carried several kegs of beer, from which three or four young men were constantly drinking. He thought that it was a terrible sight for the rising generation of young people.

Contract for Bridge Awarded.

At a recent meeting of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders the plans of the Berlin Iron Bridge Company on the bridge to be located on Greenbrook road in front of John F. Wilson's property, were accepted, at the bid of $2,740. Wm. Farrier, of New Market, was awarded the masonry work. W. T. Kirk, of this city, bid on the work and his figure was $2,790

Death of Member of Old Family.

Elizabeth, July 10.—William Lederick, 88 years old, died here yesterday. He was a contractor, whose ancestors came from Holland in 1710 and settled at West Camp, N. Y. One of his grandfathers was an officer under Braddock, in the French and Indian war, and his father was an officer in the War of 1812. Mr. Lederick voted for Fremont and for every Republican Presidential nominee since.

NEIGHBORS WARRED IN THE CITY COURT.

Donohue—Rotenhouse Feud at Its Height.

ARREST MRS. ROTENHOUSE.

HEARING THREATS OF ACTUAL WARFARE, DONOHUES EXPERIMENTED.

Sat Their Daughter in to see if Rotenhouses Would Assault Her—War of Words in Court—Came Near to Blows as Their Anger Grew—Judge Decided There Had Been a Disturbance.

The Donohues and the Rotenhouses were arrayed against each other in the City Court Friday a. m. 'Twas a lively time in consequence. Fate has ordained that they should occupy adjoining parts of a double house on East Front street. For two years they have been at war and the feud that has grown out of the first quarrel is worthy of the "blue grass" country.

The particular event that gave City Judge Runyon the benefit of the Donohue—Rotenhouse feud was the arrest of Mrs. Jane Rotenhouse on complaint of her neighbor, Mrs. Mary Donohue, for profane and indecent language and threatening to assault Mrs. Donohue's daughter.

The examination of the witnesses brought forth an explosion from both sides. Mrs. Rotenhouse rose up in her might, despite the entreaties of the officers, and denounced Jim Donohue as a "dirty blackguard," said he was a disgrace to the neighborhood, and caused poor Jim to writhe in his chair under her stinging epithets.

It was rather difficult for the Judge to find out just what the alleged offence was except that a lively war of words raged on the Fourth of July and that the Rotenhouses swore that they would chastise the Donohues and that the Donohue girl was sent in by way of an experiment to see if the Rotenhouse would begin with her.

It looked at one time as if the Donohues and the Rotenhouses would get together right in court, but they contented themselves with much wagging of tongues. The Judge decided that there had been considerable disorder, but he suspended sentence on Mrs. Rotenhouse with a warning that her future appearance would be the occasion for severe punishment.

IT IS COSTLY WORK FOR UNION COUNTY.

Boulevard Commission Bills Will be Rather Heavy.

BIG PAY FOR EVERYBODY.

COUNTY ATTORNEY CODINGTON ABLE TO CHARGE $50 A DAY.

Other Employes of the Commission Also Able to Charge at a Proportionally High Rate—Only One Half of the Work in Connection With the Project Has Been Furnished, Though.

Elizabeth, July 10—The Westfield avenue property condemnation commissioners have finished their labors in Union Township, from Elizabeth to Cranford, and will wind up their business today. The commissioners have passed upon eighty-five tracts of land and appraised their value for submission to Judge VanSyckel. Many of the property-owners are not satisfied with the awards made by the commissioners, but they will probably have to submit to their decision, as the Court is pretty certain to ratify the commissioners' work.

The commission has been a rather expensive body for the taxpayers, as every time they met each of the three commissioners received $10 a day. Stenographer Knight, of Newark, who assisted them, also got the same amount, as did also John Keron for inspecting the land and getting options from the property owners.

County Attorney Codington, who met every day with the commission, can charge, it is said, $50 a day for his services, while James Carey, the commissioners' messenger, was paid $2 50 a day, so that each day the commissioners met, the cost to the county was over $100.

Another commission will have to be appointed by the Court to appraise the land in Cronford Township that is wanted for the new county boulevard and trolley line. It is more than probable that Judge VanSyckel, in view of the fact that the Union Township commissioners have had the necessary experience required to do the work, will reappoint them on the Cranford job.

Extending the Switch.

The switch on the line of the Plainfield Street Railway at the North avenue station is being extended to provide for the increase in service. The work was started Monday a. m. to extend the switch to East Second street. The job will probably be completed tomorrow.

FORMER POLICEMAN WOULD KILL A MAN.

Accused Baseball Player of Throwing a Game.

HE SHOT AT THE PITCHER.

FORTUNATELY, THE BULLETS DID NOT ENTER THE FLESH.

George Stevenson, of Raritan, Guilty of the Desperate Act—His Intended Victim was James McInness, at Whom He Became Angered Over the Result of a Game of Baseball Saturday

Bound Brook, July 10 — George Stevenson, a former policeman of Raritan, attempted to kill Pitcher James McInness, of the Bound Brook baseball team, late Saturday night in Bound Brook. The Bound Brook team and a nine from the Thirteenth Regiment, of Brooklyn, played a game at Bound Brook Saturday afternoon which resulted in a victory for the Thirteenth Regiment team. Stevenson attended the game, and bet heavily on the Bound Brook team. After the game Stevenson accused Pitcher McInness of throwing the game in favor of the Brooklyn team. He followed McInness around in public places during the night, and several times repeated the charge.

McInness, who had continued to ignore Stevenson, lost his temper and knocked him down. As Stevenson regained his feet he drew his revolver and opened fire on McInness, who stood near the station of the Brunswick Traction Company in Main street. At the first shot McInness started to run across the street, but fell directly in front of a trolley car. The car was stopped and McInness jumped to his feet and ran behind it. He was followed by Stevenson, who continued to shoot at close range. A number of bullets from his revolver hit the trolley car and created a panic among the passengers, who quickly jumped out of the opposite side of the car. Stevenson kept on firing until he emptied his revolver.

McInness in the meantime had started on a rapid run up the street. When overtaken by his friends several blocks from the scene he was uninjured, but there were two bullet holes in his coat. Stevenson disappeared after the shooting, and he has not yet been arrested. Stevenson was suspended from the Raritan police force last week. He came to Bound Brook Saturday as a special officer to serve a warrant.

RAIN STOPPED GOLFERS.

ONLY THREE SCORES FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP HANDED IN.

Play on the Park Golf Club Course Was Suddenly Ended Saturday Afternoon—Players Were All Drenched.

There was a score of golfers out on the Park Golf Club links Saturday afternoon when the storm came rolling over the mountain and caught them unawares. Immediately there was a grand scattering in the direction of the clubhouse, and those who were unlucky enough to be in the vicinity of "Grand-View," the fifth hole, reached the haven of refuge in a sadly dampened condition. Some of the braver ones remained at play for a little while, but the heavy downpour soon converted the course into a lake and play was entirely out of the question.

There were just three scores handed in for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup, the other contestants giving up on account of the rain. Wm. A. Townsend and Gifford W. Cooley divided the honors for the afternoon with C. E. Faber, a good third.

Their scores were:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
G. W. Cooley.....	108	9	99
W. A. Townsend.....	112	16	96
C. E. Faber.....	128	32	96

Miss Daisy Elsberg has been doing some remarkably good playing for the last two or three weeks and Saturday afternoon completed the necessary one round and entered her score for the Buttfield cup. Her gross score was 82, with a handicap of 18, which made a net score of 64. This is the first time in three weeks that there has been any competition for that trophy.

Midland Beach Excursion Company.

Elizabeth, July 10—Articles of incorporation of the Midland Beach Excursion Company were filed in County Clerk Howard's office Saturday morning. The company's headquarters is to be at Scotch Plains, and its business will be to charter boats and do a general excursion business in waters adjacent to New York. The capital is $30,000 and the incorporators are Louis B. Stegman, Scotch Plains; John R. Halpin, New York; Edward D. Oundell, Paterson.

THE HOME FOR AGED UNION WORKINGMEN.

The Philanthropic Scheme of Mayor Silas Dewey Drake.

PLANS FOR THE BUILDING.

PREPARED BY ARCHITECT E. V. FRENCH, OF PLAINFIELD.

It Will be Four Stories in Height and Will be Fitted Out in an Up-to-date Manner in Every Respect—The Site Will be at Lincoln Where 15 Acres of Land Have Been Offered to the Labor Unions.

Having built several towns, a theatre, a church, advanced women's suffrage and done several other notable things, Mayor Silas D. Drake, of Lincoln, February 4th last, when he was fifty-four years of age, resolved to do something in a philanthropic line. The result is the proposed Home for Aged Union Workingmen at Lincoln, the scheme for erecting which, according to the ideas of Mr. Drake, will not cost the Federation of Trades and Labor Unions, who are urged to undertake it, one cent of outlay.

Mr. Drake, representing the Lincoln Realty Company, offers to donate 15 acres of land to the Federation, which will provide the site for the proposed home, as well as allow the cutting up of a large portion of the property into building lots, to be sold by the Federation to such of its members as could be induced to purchase, the profits of which are calculated to be enough to establish the home in good shape.

When the twenty-first annual congress of the Federation of Trades and Labor Unions meet in Orange August 21st, Mr. Drake will be on hand to exploit the project and to exhibit the plans of the Home which he has engaged E. V. French, an architect of this city, to prepare.

The building plan which Mr. French has prepared is a magnificent one. The building will be 125 feet long and 44 feet wide, and will face the north, bringing into full view the Watchung range of mountains and the historic Washington Rock. The centre pavilion will be 66 feet high. The basement, which covers the whole site of the building, will be divided into store-rooms, baths, lavatories, etc. The first floor will be divided into the main entrance in the centre pavilion, the dining room, assembly hall and officers' headquarters. On all sides of the building on the first floor will be a wide porch, and on the second and third floors will be constructed balconies, or porticoes 28 feet long and 6 feet deep, which are designed to be opened in the summer, and the winter enclosed with glass, so that they may as sun parlors.

On the ground and third floors there will be 23 bedrooms each, of an average size of 9 x 15 feet. The fourth floor will also be devoted to bedrooms. There will be accommodations for 200 inmates. The estimated cost of the building is $30,000.

The project has already been under serious consideration of the executive committee of the Federation of Labor and Trades' Unions, and has secured their approval. Chairman Gottlob is especially interested in the idea, and has devoted considerable time in getting it before the unions that will be asked to help establish it.

FEARFUL OF THE RABIES

A GENUINE MAD DOG SCARE IN SCOTCH PLAINS.

Head of the Brute Severed and Sent to the Pasteur Institute to be Used in Treatment of One of the Mad Dog's Victims.

Scotch Plains, July 10.—The mad dog that invaded Scotch Plains last Sunday and bit several people, afterwards being dispatched with a baseball bat by John Thye, has occasioned quite a scare in that place. All those who were bitten by the brute have had their wounds cauterized, but Lyras Walpole, whose young son was attacked and bitten by the dog, is fearful of an attack of the rabies and he has concluded to have the boy undergo the Pasteur treatment.

Consequently the head of the dog that did the biting was severed and sent to the Pasteur institute in New York, where some of the virus was inoculated into a rabbit, to be subsequently used in the treatment of the boy, but as yet none of the signs of the dreaded hydrophobia have appeared in the rabbit. The result of the Pasteur treatment is anxiously awaited.

To Give Mountainside the Go-by.

The people of Mountainside borough are up in arms over the action of the Borough Council in refusing to allow the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railroad Company a franchise for a trolley line through that place. As now planned the trolley people have about decided to go around the borough. The line will run on Mountain avenue to Dudley avenue, then through private property to Branch Mills and then by Echo Lake, and so on through private property to Springfield.

MALONEY FOUGHT THE COURT AND OFFICERS.

He Was Painting Bernardsville a Lurid Hue.

CAUSE, JERSEY APPLEJACK.

THREW A BOOK AT JUDGE AND KICKED CONSTABLE IN THE RIBS.

The Prisoner Was From Newark, But Now He Languishes in the Somerset County Jail on the Charge of Atrocious Assault—Bound Hand and Foot in Order to Subdue His Capers.

Michael Maloney, of Newark, is now resting in the Somerset county jail under the charge of atrocious assault, preferred by Justice of the Peace Dunster, of Bernardsville, which is alleged to have been committed by the prisoner when he was arraigned in the court of Justice Dunster July 5th, after having attempted to paint the rural community in the Somerset hills a lurid hue.

After becoming duly-inflated with Bernardsville applejack Maloney made such a row that Constable David Moffett attempted to arrest him. Maloney put up a great fight for liberty, but was finally overpowered by half a dozen men who came to the rescue of the constable. The choler of Maloney did not falter one whit when he came into the presence of the Justice on the charge of being drunk and disorderly, but on the contrary seemed to increase in frenzied purpose of defying the arms of the law.

No sooner had Justice Dunster made out a commitment papers for Maloney to be taken to the county jail than the recalcitrant prisoner grabbed the documents from the Justice's desk and tore them into shreds. While the Court stood aghast at such a proceeding Maloney grabbed a big law book and threw it at the Justice's head. The Justice, who is an aged man, dodged the book with considerable difficulty.

This was the signal for Constable Moffett and the several specials on hand to pounce upon the prisoner, and Maloney went down under the force of superior numbers. Grabbing a rope from the wall Constable Moffett pinioned Maloney's arms and then allowed him to get on his hat. But no sooner had Maloney acquired his equilibrium then he kicked the Constable in the ribs and the officer fell against the wall short-winded. As soon as he could recover the constable and the specials, but he got too near Maloney's foot again and received a terrible barking on the shins. He retired for repairs at this stage of the encounter. Then the crowd fell upon Maloney again and he was bound more securely. He was thrown into a platform wagon and to the accompaniment of frantic yells and mad struggling was driven to the county jail several miles away. There Justice Dunster made the charge of atrocious assault against him, and now Maloney will have to answer to the Grand Jury for his capers at Bernardsville.

STORM SEWER WORKS WELL.

It Carried off Saturday's Storm in Great Shape.

The advantages of the Park avenue storm sewer were clearly demonstrated on Saturday during the heavy storm that visited this city. Usually the street has been flooded to such an extent that it would be impossible to cross, and planks have been used frequently to get from one side of the street to the other. The sewer shows that it is able to take the water as fast as it appears, and when the street is put in first-class condition the efficiency of the sewer will be far greater. At present the street is in a wretched condition, there being many depressions that hold the water back. However, the Council is to be congratulated upon putting the sewer in the street, and the residents along the street appreciate what has been done. Another advantage shown was under the Park avenue railroad bride. The water did not block travel at that point as usual.

Two Lively Scraps.

Two scraps marked the passing of Saturday evening in Plainfield. One well-known young man about town became engaged in an an altercation with a colored man. It finally ended in blows and the colored man was badly done up. A well-known business man came out of a local hostelry and was assaulted by two men and badly beaten. It was said to be the settling of an old grudge. No arrests have been made in either case.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODS

A San Fernando Sugar Manufactory Which Is Owned By a Chinaman.

Six Month's Work on One Crop of Cane—Climatic Conditions Exceedingly Favorable to the Production of Sugar and Rice—Effect of Conditions of Agricultural Labor—Rice on Irrigated Lands.

At the present time it is somewhat difficult to ascertain the value of the Philippine Islands under normal industrial conditions. In the first place, all the industries are disturbed, and only such as are absolutely necessary are conducted with any vigor.

In Manila the distribution of money by the American army and navy causes considerable activity in some lines, but the usual trade is dull. The whole country is waiting for "something to turn up."

After my arrival at Manila, says Dr. S. A. Knapp, I determined to penetrate the insurgent lines and travel as far as they would permit. Mr. Cadwell, formerly of Iowa, joined me, and, with a Filipino for interpreter, we took the train for San Fernando, about seventy-five miles by rail. The section of country through which we passed was quite level and intersected by streams. There were a few fields of sugar cane, but most of the land was planted to rice. Occasionally a tract was irrigated, but the larger portion depended upon rainfall, and showed generally a light crop.

The harvest had just begun. Men and women were in the fields with their sickles, cutting and binding tiny bundles—two handfuls. Each bundle a reaper stood up-heads upon the ground and butts in the air. After standing this way about twenty-four hours it is removed and piled in small ricks at the edge of which separate the rice fields. Each rick is about three feet wide by three high, and from fifty to one hundred feet long. The heads of the rice form the sides of the rick. When sufficiently dry the grain is removed by drawing the straw through a hatchel.

GRINDING SUGAR CANE.

As we approached San Fernando the lands became dryer and more sandy, and were generally planted to sugar cane. We walked out to the southern border of the city to look at a sugar manufactory owned by a Chinaman. He gave us permission to examine the premises.

It was a large factory, but more primitive than any in the United States. The cane was ground in a three-roller ox-mill geared to a small engine. For boiling the juice there were eight kettles with cast-iron bottoms and wooden sides. The juice was run into these kettles, limed and boiled; no filtering and little skimming. When sufficiently boiled it was poured into earthen jars shaped like an inverted haystack, and holding about one hundred and thirty-three pounds of sugar. In the bottom was an orifice two inches in diameter, over which a straw filter was placed before the syrup was poured in. These jars are called Pilones, and they rest upon an earthen vessel holding twelve quarts, which receives the molasses.

After the sugar has stood in the pilones for some weeks it is emptied into mats and divided into three parts, according to color, depending on drainage. The top third is fairly light, the middle third is quite dark and the bottom third looks like tar. The top and middle thirds are sun dried and packed in mats for shipping; the lower third is stored in a mat and redrained. Such sugars are worth from 1½ to 2½ cents a pound, according to grade.

The molasses is sold to be manufactured into rum. While we were there they were emptying the molasses into an immense tank in a boat, to be transported to the distillery. With such primitive methods it would not be possible to do much in the United States, but here they can work at a crop of cane for six months. The cane is twelve to eighteen months old when grinding begins, and is very rich in saccharine matter.

As a rule, only one crop of cane is obtained from a planting. This appeared so contrary to our knowledge of cane in the United States and Cuba that I made careful inquiry among owners of sugar estates in Manila, and the statement was confirmed, except upon new and rich land, where the cane is allowed to rattoon for several years.

Climatic conditions in the Philippines are exceedingly favorable to the production of sugar and rice. The enormous and uniform rainfall during the spring, summer and fall and comparatively dry weather during the winter, when the cane is harvested, are considerations of the utmost importance to the sugar producer. Some may be disappointed by the fact that only one crop is made from each planting, but it must be borne in mind that these lands have been cropped for hundreds of years without fertilization and without the use of any renovating processes. With deeper plowing, better tillage and improved methods of extraction the sugar production on these islands will become a profitable and important industry.

IT MEANS A HOT CAMPAIGN.

TO THROW THE RESPONSIBILITY ON THE REPUBLICANS

The Democrats Believe That as a Party They Have Clean Hands in Making New Jersey the Stamping Ground of Monopolies—They Will Try to Keep the Issue Actively Before the People.

Trenton, July 11.—As there will not be any State ticket in the field this year, neither political party will have an opportunity to declare itself officially on the issues of the day. To form vital issues it is necessary to hold State conventions. Issues, however, can be suggested and agitated, and this can be done officially by both parties, and that course, no doubt, will be taken in the campaign for the election of Senators and Assemblymen, which has already been opened.

The Democrats are considering the advisability of making their leading issue "anti-trusts." They feel that a heap of capital for their party can be made in that way, and that the entire burden of trust formations under the present State laws can be placed upon the Republican party. They contend that Republican legislation is responsible for all the trusts, and they point to the recent decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals in the Oilphant pottery case as a sustainment of their views. The present corporation laws of the State were revised by a Republican commission and re-enacted by a Republican Legislature in 1896. They say there is no disputing that fact. Chief Justice Magie, in his opinion in the Oilphant case, very plainly says that the formation of trusts is legal and that the Legislature did not deem it wise to change the statute on the subject.

In giving birth to this Trust issue in New Jersey the Democrats feel that that they are playing a game of good politics. In that opinion they are supported by no less a person than former Senator James A. Bradley, of Asbury Park, who in a recent interview declared that the party which took a decided stand against Trusts would surely win the day in New Jersey. Mr. Bradley declared that Trusts destroy competition in trade, and therefore raise the prices of commodities and the necessaries of life, while wages were reduced and the employment of labor curtailed. He gave several illustrations of his own knowledge to prove his assertion. "Anti-Trusts" may then be taken as the shibboleth of the New Jersey Democracy in the campaigns of this and next year. Of course, the Silver Democracy will not consent to the repudiation of their doctrine, nor to the unhorsing of Wm. Jennings Bryan. But they, no doubt, can be appealed by the drafting of a platform, when the time comes, by which Trusts and their financial theories can each be given a fair consideration. Congressman Daly, in a speech at the Tammany Hall celebration the Fourth of July, told his hearers that New Jersey is the mother of Trusts, but the Democratic party could not be held responsible for them. He added that his party would see to it that the people were fully informed as to the true condition of affairs, and the tocsin of war against Trusts would be sounded at an opportune time. The Republicans apparently feel serene over the Trust question, and they say they will take good care of it when the proper time arrives. They have no apprehension whatever that it will cut any figure at all in the present campaign.

FLYING TRIP FROM WHEEL

Lantern Fell in Front Wheel and Nearly Caused Serious Injury.

Allen Coddington, who is in charge at the North avenue office of the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company, took a flying trip over the handle bars to his wheel Monday afternoon in a way entirely unexpected by that young man. He was speeding along East Front street, near Johnston avenue, when the acetelyne gas lamp, which was clamped to his front forks, suddenly gave way and fell into the front wheel. The wheel stopped suddenly and Mr. Coddington went on. Luckily he escaped without serious injury, but his lamp was a wreck.

Taking Down Overhead Wires.

Linemen for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company are now engaged in taking down some of the old wires out of use. A large gang of men will be brought to Plainfield later in the season when all of the overhead wires not in use will be taken down and the poles removed.

Park Avenue to be Torn Up Again.

Much-abused Park avenue is again to be treated to a tearing up process in a short time. It is the gas company that wants to put a larger and better gas main in the street, and it is better to do it now before the permanent pavement goes down.

broken "short off"—mending it by means of splicing threads or cord is one of the easiest and neatest ways in the world. It will make the rod almost as good as new and quite as strong, where a break is only a temporary and unsatisfactory relief.

Before trying to mend anything by this means, however, it is best to get a little practice first.

say on a broken broom handle. Always use waxed cord or coarse pack thread. For large rod tips and handles fine fishline is the very best thing to use. Place the broken ends of the handle firmly together and hold them with the left hand or tie them temporarily with a bit of string. Make a loop from 1 to 2 as shown in the picture and lay it on top of the handle, holding it in place with the left thumb. It should be of sufficient length to reach beyond the break—represented by the dark line. Take two turns very carefully so as to hold firmly the end of the loop at 2, and then wrap the string tightly and closely around and around the stick until 1 is nearly reached. The picture represents the string loosely wound so as to show how the loop is made. In winding the real splice, of course, the string should be as close together as the thread on a spool. On reaching the end of the loop at 1 thread the loose end of the string through the loop, being careful to keep the wrapping tight. Then pull at the other end of the string at 2 until the loop is half way under the splice. The both ends of the string are well out of the way and perfectly secure from unwrapping. Cut off the projecting ends close to the splice, and your work is done. If very large cord is used a groove should first be cut in the wood to accommodate the loop. Soft annealing wire can be used instead of string for splicing, and it sometimes makes a much prettier piece of work.

Odd Things About Rainbows.

Did you ever see a rainbow in the west?

In discussing this curious question the Philadelphia Times gives some interesting facts in regard to a rainbow and how it is formed:

1. It is never seen except when the sun is shining in one part of the sky, and rain is falling in the other, or opposite, part.

2. It is generally seen in the east, because our showers come from the west and pass off toward the east.

3. It cannot be formed in the east except in the afternoon.

4. It cannot be formed in the west except in the morning.

5. It is never seen at midday, because the sun is then above us, and we cannot, therefore, stand between it and the rain.

Some of you may wonder why a rainbow is always semi-circular in shape. As a matter of fact, it is always a complete circle, but we cannot see but one-half of the circle, because the earth cuts off our view. If we were raised in the air, high above the earth, we could see it all. The circular shape is due to the fact that the raindrops are round and that each drop reflects but one color to our eyes. It may strike you as a strange thing, but it is true, that no two persons see the same bow. This is because no two persons can possibly occupy the same position, and thus the reflections fall differently upon their eyes.

Odd Industry for Boys and Girls.

Boys and girls of Brussels, Belgium, have been having a lesson in the value of small things. The children attending the public schools of the city were requested by their teachers to gather up, on their way to and from the school, all such apparently valueless objects as old metallic bottle capsules, tinfoil, tin cans, paint tubes, refuse metals and other things, and deliver their collections daily to their teachers.

In the period from Jan. 1 to Oct 1, 1895, or within eight months, the following amounts were collected: Tinfoil, 925 pounds; old paint tubes, 229 pounds; bottle capsules, 4,415 pounds; scraps of metal, 1,221 pounds; total, 7,781 pounds. This apparent rubbish was sold and the proceeds applied so as to clothe completely 500 poor children and send ninety sick ones to the country, and there still remained quite a balance, which was distributed among the poor sick of the city.

Oil on the Troubled Waters.

"Pouring oil on the troubled waters" as a quotation is hundreds of years old, but it is only recently that it has been actually adopted as a means for calming real storms on the ocean. Within the last few months many of the seamen who navigate our own great lakes have begun to carry oil in bags on their vessels. These bags will be hung over the sides of the ship and the oil will be allowed to dribble out slowly and form a coating over the surface of the water. Its effect is to prevent the breaking of the waves, converting the sea into long, smooth swells.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter was sent there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a 5-cent Tabules carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were two druggists who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial in which she made her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enabled some other person to be benefited or to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The druggists, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES packed in paper cartons (without glass) to sell for 5 cents, is now being placed on sale by druggists—FIVE FIVE CENTS. The 10 Tabules in this 5-cent carton are sufficient for ordinary occasions. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (72 Tabules) may be had for 60 cents—or a single carton will be sent by mail on receipt of price. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists everywhere. (THE TABULES will be sent for five cents. RIPANS CHEMICAL CO., No. 10 Spruce street, New York.) Ripans Tabules may be had at some local druggist's, and further shops. One gives relief.

For the Head and Hair and Body.

The body and limbs of every child should be rubbed with 4 Us after every bath. Just enough dropped in the palm of the hand to rub over every part of the surface of a child, once a day will keep the skin soft and white, the pores free from getting clogged with impurity passing out from the system. A teaspoonful is sufficient to moisten the article (skin covering) of a grown person. The effect is wonderful: pimples on the body and face are entirely removed by a few applications of the 4 Us. Druggists sell it.

MOUNTAIN HOME FOR SICK BABIES.

Opening of the King's Daughters Worthy Charity.

WAS HELD TUESDAY.

CHARMING LITTLE FRAME COTTAGE ON THE FIRST MOUNTAIN.

Many Visited Yesterday Afternoon When Formal Opening Took Place—Daily Press Was Largely Instrumental in Raising Funds For the Building and Its Maintenance—Description of the House.

The baby camp on the mountain is once more a reality. The neat little cottage where suffering small children found health and strength in the invigorating mountain air, which fell a prey to the forest fires last winter, has been succeeded by a new structure, equally as neat and convenient. Tuesday afternoon saw the opening of this worthy charity in the interests of which the City Union of King's Daughters has labored so faithfully. Nearly a hundred people drove or walked to the camp and admired the new camp, in the raising of the funds for which The Daily Press took such a prominent part.

When the news came last winter, telling of the destruction of the old camp, the King's Daughters felt rather discouraged. This spring, however, they announced their intention of making another attempt. They wanted $1,400 to build the new camp, pay its running expenses for the year and meet such incidental expenses as might arise. The Daily Press took a hand. A subscription list was started in the columns of this paper and some $250 has since been turned over to the treasurer of the City Union through the agency of The Press. About $300 has been subscribed through other agencies.

Just two weeks ago today work on the new camp was begun. A new site was chosen, a mile to the westward of the old one and close to the old lookout on the brow of the first ridge of the Watchung Mountains. The little cottage stands on the southern side of the road in a grove of great trees, close to the spring. The outlook from rear piazza is a grand one.

The cottage is a simple clap-boarded structure, with a peak shingle roof. A rustic porch faces Johnston's Drive. Over it is a sign, "Baby Camp," and flanked on either side by the King's Daughters' colors. Another porch of a similar character is in the rear and from it a wonderful view of all the surrounding country is visible.

The building was designed by Herman Hansen, the builder, and Miss Edith B. Little, chairman of the committee from the City Union. Hansen had charge of the erection of the cottage and accomplished the work in short order. The house was ready for occupancy Saturday. Monday the furniture and fittings were taken up to the cottage and the place put in order.

The cottage itself is 26 feet long and 16 feet wide. There are two rooms, a living room, 16 feet by 18 feet, where the children will spend their time when in the cottage, and a kitchen, 8 feet by 16 feet, where the babies' food will be prepared.

The living room is now tastefully arranged with tables, chairs, bric-a-brac and pictures, while three cribs await the arrival of the little ones. Two cots are also to be added. In the kitchen there is an oil stove and various other modus operandi that is necessary.

The growth of underbrush close to the camp has been cleared away and a fair looking lawn made. A good path leads to the spring close by, which has been cleaned out and handily arranged. This is the result of the efforts of Gus Fehring in behalf of the camp. A flag staff, rising from a heap of stones, supports an American flag. Both of these were donated by George F. Brown, of Somerset street.

Mr. Harding, the foreman for Builder Hansen, was particularly useful in assisting the committee. He constructed the rustic seats that have been placed about the yard and the rustic railings to the porches.

The great flag on the staff and countless smaller ones fastened to the porch railings gave the place quite a gala appearance Tuesday afternoon. The guests were received in the main room by the committee from the City Union. They were Miss Edith B. Little, chairman; Miss Ella Bliah, Miss Emma Gillem, Miss Katheryn Glen, Mrs. Edward Caldwell and Mrs. Frank Rowley. The city nurse, Miss Octavia Setzer, was also present and met many of the guests. Lemonade and wafers were served during the af-

STRANGERS TALK OF A POISONING.

They Tell the Middlesex Coroner of Their Suspicions.

New Brunswick, July 19.—A man and a woman, both strangers, told Coroner Moke yesterday, they wished him to investigate an alleged poisoning case. They said that some time ago a married woman went to board at the house of a widower in Jamesburg. She went there because her husband was going out of town to get work. Soon she was taken ill with a complaint that the physician diagnosed as appendicitis or peritonitis. She died, and was buried on the physician's certificate.

The Coroner's visitors expressed the belief that she had been murdered by poison. They would not disclose their names, the name of the deceased woman, nor the name of the man with whom she boarded, nor even the name of the physician.

Coroner Moke is making a search of the vital statistics of Jamesburg, with a view to finding who the woman was and who was her physician. He thinks his callers were cranks.

The National Disease Worry.

The break down in American life comes from worry, and worry has almost come to be a National disease. The true secret of health and life and success is cheerfulness, but you can't be happy or cheerful with an aching corn or painful bunions. W. S. Stevens, real estate, Front street, Dunellen, says: "For years I was in misery. Big toe joints and bunions so swollen and painful. After a painless treatment by Specialist Brown the pains left my feet and the bunions and big toe joints are now reduced in size." R. H. Rushton, painter, 434 West Fifth street; Derick Mattis, 86 Fairview avenue; W. W. Stratton, 339 Park avenue, all say that Mr. Brown has completely and perfectly cured their ingrowing toe nails, corns and bunions and enlarged great toe joints. Mr. Stratton, who is the popular and well-known manager of Boynton Beach, also states that for years he was a great sufferer from a complicated nervous trouble, but since his feet were cured his general health has greatly improved. Owing to home office engagements, Mr. Brown's Plainfield visit will close next Saturday evening, July 22d. Office 145 West Second street, Plainfield.

Bicycle Stolen.

A few days ago Edgar Brokaw's youngest son left his wheel in front of his brother's piano store on East Front street. While he was absent someone stole the bicycle and a vigorous hunt has failed to disclose its identity.

To Consider the Trolley.

A very important meeting of the Common Council will be held this evening at which time there will be a consideration of the trolley extension through Arlington avenue.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS HAS BEEN NAMED.

The Plainfield Advancement Association is Wide Awake.

MANY NAMES ENROLLED.

PRESIDENT SMALLEY SUGGESTS HOLDING A CLAM BAKE.

That the Citizens May Come Together and Learn of the Importance of the Association's Work—All Business Men to be Invited—Mass Meeting in City Park in Aid of Monument Association.

There was not as large an attendance Tuesday at the regular meeting of the Plainfield Advancement Association as usual, owing presumably to the fact that a number of the members are out of town. President Smalley presided and in the absence of Secretary Martine, Frank Rowley acted as secretary pro tem.

Elston M. French, as chairman of the committee on organization, reported that the committee had selected the following gentlemen as members of the board of directors: Plainfield—First ward, W. A. Coddington; Second ward, C. H. Hand; Third ward, J. A. Smith; Fourth ward, W. H. Moore. North Plainfield—First district, B. A. Hegeman, Jr.; Second district, Andrew E. Kenney. On motion the gentlemen named were unanimously elected.

Mr. French, from the railroad committee, reported progress. He said that the committee had had two interviews with officials of the Lehigh Valley road, who had given the committee to understand that it wished to come to Plainfield. It was expected that the officials would visit this city in the near future and look over the proposed route.

Judge Runyon offered a motion, which was adopted, that the secretary be directed to notify the newly elected board of directors of their election, when the president can call a meeting of the directors and have a full list of all committees named.

President Smalley called attention to the Monument Association and asked what was being done in the matter. He thought it might be a good idea to have a mass meeting in the city park in the near future—on next Saturday, when good speakers could be secured to invoke an interest in the project.

The President also suggested that it might be a good idea to hold a clam bake as soon as feasible for the purpose of getting the business men of the city together and enlisting their interests in the Association. It was the more easy he thought to reach a man's stomach through his heart than in any other way, and he felt that if the citizens could be gotten together at a clam bake it would prove of vast benefit to the Association. Upon motion of Judge Runyon a committee consisting of William N. Runyon, W. F. Williams and Elston M. French was named to make arrangements for holding a picnic or clam bake.

It was the sense of the members that the clam bake or field day, as some choose to call it, be held early in August, the date to be named later.

Frank Rowley was requested to fill the position of treasurer pro tem during the absence of Treasurer Coward.

President Smalley called attention to the time set for the regular meetings of the Association, which are on the third Tuesday of each month. He said that he wished to impress upon the minds of all members the importance of being in attendance. The work of the Association was of the greatest importance to every citizen of Plainfield, and where there was union there was strength.

Before adjourning a large number enrolled themselves as members of the Association.

MUST REPAIR THE STREET.

Street Railway Company Did Not Do Work Well Enough.

When the Street Railway Company, at various times, dug up West Front street to put in new ties and afterward periodically for other purposes, the pavement was fairly well replaced, but it has become uneven and generally unsatisfactory, so the company has been requested by the Street Commissioner to have it put in proper order.

Dogs Must be Muzzled.

Mayor Smalley, of the borough, is about to issue an edict concerning dogs in his community. They will have to be muzzled or else they will be numbered among the missing.

Mrs. James Clawson, of West Sixth street, is very ill at her home.

Mrs. Lalre, of North Branch, has been visiting Plainfield relatives.

CARRYING THE MAIL ON TROLLEY CARS.

Postal Authorities Making the Preliminary Investigation.

IT MEANS RAPID SERVICE.

NEW JERSEY'S NUMEROUS LINES AFFORD FINE FACILITIES.

Shore Mails From This Section Would Receive Quicker and Better Delivery to All Points—No Changes Expected Immediately—Opening of New Lines Will Inaugurate the Postal System.

The United States Postal Department is making investigations of trolley facilities and connections in Middlesex, Somerset and Union counties, with a view to bettering the mail service to shore points by using the trolley in conjunction with steam railroad lines.

It is not expected that any changes will be made immediately, but the granting of a franchise to the Brunswick Traction Company for the line from South Amboy to Sayreville, connecting with the line already built through South River, New Brunswick, Bound Brook and Somerville, and connecting with Metuchen and Plainfield, has attracted attention to the possibility of using the trolley for local mail service. When the South Amboy line is built it will furnish direct connection with the Central Railroad's and the New York and Long Branch Railroad's short lines at South Amboy.

Owing to the greater frequency with which cars are run on the trolley lines, and the directness of connection, local mails for Shore points, it is said, can be handled much more quickly and get to their destinations more promptly by being sent by trolley to South Amboy, and there transferred to the steam lines. At present New Brunswick shore mails are sent to South Amboy on the Raritan River Railroad, but only two trains run a day, and other mails are compelled to go by way of New York or Philadelphia to reach shore points.

There is every reason to believe that just as soon as the missing link between Sayreville and South Amboy is supplied local mails for the shore from Somerville, Bound Brook, New Brunswick and Middlesex county points will be sent by trolley to South Amboy. Several postoffice officials have examined the system and express themselves as satisfied with its possibilities.

THE CRANFORD CARNIVAL.

There Will be Fifty-three Boats at Least in the Parade.

Cranford, July 19—At a meeting of the Cranford Boating Association, held at the Electic Club rooms at this place, it was unanimously decided to hold a Venetian carnival on the Rahway river at this place Saturday evening, August 16. The general carnival committee consists of C. J. McIntire, J. L. Crane, W. W. Buckley, W. B. Clark, D. Smock, George B. Jones, E. B. Farrand, C. Reimer, J. M. P. Josephs, Township Clerk Samuel T. Marshall, D. H. Hopkins, Albert Hibson, H. Vanderpool, Louis E. Hendrickson, M. Iseman, G. A. Morrison, District Clerk J. N. Brundage, C. B. Williams and E. Beadle, Jr. Fifty-three boats were pledged by owners to appear in the carnival beautifully decorated.

The expense of the carnival will be borne by private subscription. The carnival this year will surpass all others which have made Cranford famous.

Death of Fred Speer.

Fred Speer, son-in-law of Frederick VanLiew, of LaGrande avenue, died at his home in Somerville Tuesday, after a long illness with consumption. Mr. Speer was a very examplary young man and none knew him but to love him and speak well of him. He leaves a widow and a daughter.

Lawn Party for Little People.

Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman gave a lawn party Tuesday afternoon to her young son, Warren. There were about forty of his youthful friends present. The tables were laid on the lawn, where the children partook of their supper. Most of the time was spent in playing games.

Swindle in Name of Reserves.

Newark, July 19—Lieutenant Thos. Goldingay, of the Second Division, Battalion of the East, New Jersey Naval Reserves, reported to the police yesterday that a swindler had been collecting money in the name of the Reserves. The man is said to have secured $150 from various business firms in the city on the representation that it was to be used to save the Reserves from disbandment.

LEHIGH MAY COME HERE ON A LOOP

A New and Feasible Scheme is Now Proposed.

MEETS WITH GREAT FAVOR.

RAILROAD OFFICIALS WILL GO OVER THE ROUTE.

The Loop Will Leave the Main Line Near Picton and After Passing Through This City Will Swing Back to the Main Line at Either Oak Tree or South Plainfield—For Passenger Trains.

The project of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company tapping Plainfield in order to compete for local traffic with the Central Railroad of New Jersey is being quietly but vigorously prosecuted by the officials of the former company, assisted by a committee from the Plainfield Advancement Association.

Plans have been prepared for the Lehigh Valley to touch Plainfield in an entirely different way from any proposed previously. Heretofore the project has been for the road to build a branch from South Plainfield to Plainfield, a distance of three miles, and to run local trains between the two points to connect with the main line.

The idea under consideration at present, however, is to build a loop so that Plainfield can be made the stopping place for all the principal passenger trains on the road. According to the plans prepared the eastern end of the loop would leave the main line in the vicinity of Picton and then run through the country from there to the eastern end of this city, then turning to the south and tapping the main line again at either Oak Tree or South Plainfield.

The committee of local business men had a conference with the officials of the Lehigh and they have expressed a desire to get into Plainfield over the route now proposed. It is expected that President Alfred Walter, of Philadelphia, will be the guest of General Passenger Lee, who resides in this city, within a short time and that he, together with some of the other officials, will personally go over the route of the proposed loop.

DEATH OF MRS. ALLEN.

Occurred Last Tuesday at the Age of Seventy-seven Years.

In the death of Mrs. Charlotte W. Allen, aged 77 years, which occurred last Tuesday at her home on Grandview avenue, one of Plainfield's oldest residents has passed away. Mrs. Allen was the widow of the late Gideon Allen, who for many years was prominently identified in the baking and confectionery business.

Mrs. Allen was the daughter of the late Deacon Henry Hatfield, of Scotch Plains, and a sister of Carman B. Hatfield, the multo-millionaire, of Brooklyn, who is one of the principal owners of the New York Biscuit Company. She was taken ill last March, but not until July 4th was her condition considered serious. She had heart trouble and suffered a great deal. During the past few weeks she was given constant attendance to relieve her sufferings.

Mrs. Allen was one of the oldest members of the First Baptist church, where she was a faithful and regular attendant. She was a staunch Christian and died in the faith. She was in well-to-do circumstances. Four children survive her. John and Howard Allen, of Grandview avenue; Mrs. Eugene Moore, of Warrenville, and Mrs. F. O. Smith, of West Front street.

Died at the Hospital.

The death of Miss Margaret Monks, aged forty years, of 448 West Second street, occurred last Tuesday at the hospital. Death was due to acute inflammation of the kidneys following an operation performed Monday. Miss Monks resided with her mother and was her only support. She also leaves a sister who is married.

Church Debts Paid.

Rev. Scott Wallace, the pastor of the Calvary Baptist church, and Deacon Spencer Conway, last night paid off Randolph Steele, of Central avenue, for the lat which the new church edifice occupies. They also liquidated the bill of Contractor William Smith, who built the church. There was a great rejoicing of the members after this transaction had been effected.

Mrs. Doty, of Elmwood place, is visiting relatives at Junction, N. J., for a short time.

Charles B. Brown, secretary of the Jersey City Y. M. C. A., will visit Plainfield this week and he is expected to conduct the meeting at the East Third Street Mission next Sunday evening.

NO STRIKE ON LEHIGH.

EIGHT OF TEN GRIEVANCES HAVE BEEN ADJUSTED.

General Manager Wilbur Met the Employes and Found That There Was No Serious Thought of a Strike.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., July 19—There is not the least possibility of a strike on Lehigh Valley Railroad, and the rumors that have come from Easton are made out of whole cloth. A member of the board on adjustment told a reporter this morning that the conference with Col. Rollin H. Wilbur, the general manager, had a most satisfactory conclusion, and that at no time was there thought of a strike in the minds of the board members.

On the road there are a number of men representing the different brotherhoods, who form what is known as the board of adjustment and who, when, called upon, consider grievances and present them to the company's officials for consideration. This committee is empowered to make negotiations which are binding upon the men, but cannot declare a strike without first polling the various divisions of the orders, and counting the blank ballots and finding the sentiments of the men to be favorable to such action.

The Board met Col. Wilbur yesterday, and the conference was concluded last night. Ten grievances were presented for discussion, and of the ten, eight were granted by Col. Wilbur after some little discussion. The other two were not denied, but the company will require a few days for inquiry before giving its answer. Even if these are not granted they are no cause for a strike, as they are not of general importance, and refer only to a small complaint on this, the Wyoming, and one other division.

NAVAL RESERVES' CRUISE.

Will Spend a Week at Target Practice and Then Go to Sea.

The Battalion of the East and two divisions of the Battalion of the West, New Jersey Naval Reserves, have left on the converted cruiser Prairie for their annual cruise.

The Western divisions arrived in Hoboken Tuesday and took up quarters on the training ship Portsmouth. The Eastern Battalion reported on the Portsmouth at 8 o'clock and all then boarded the Prairie at Fifteenth street.

A week will be spent in target practice at the eastern end of Long Island. A sea cruise will occupy the remainder of the time until the return to Hoboken July 27th.

PAVING WORK IS STOPPED.

Elizabeth Property Owners Object to the Contractor's Ways.

Elizabeth, July 19—Property owners on South Park street appealed to the Mayor and City Council to stop the paving on South Park street, alleging it was not properly done. The Mayor and Street Commissioner stopped the work yesterday.

When property owners saw how the work was being done they spoke to the contractor, and he pushed one of the largest property owners, John F. Dolan, off the street. This was the signal for a tumult, and only the arrival of Mayor Mack prevented trouble. He made a speech which quieted the crowd.

Death Due to Consumption.

Albert Schmiedel, aged 30 years, died early yesterday after a long illness with consumption. He has been a resident of this city for two years, having come here from his native place, Batavia, N. Y. He resided with Mrs. Dean, of Somerset place. In answer to a telegram his brother arrived here at midnight and was with him when he died. Mr. Schmiedel was unmarried. During his residence here he was employed by Marsh & Ayres, painters and paper hangers. His body will be sent to Batavia for interment.

Cut Bicycle Tire.

A wheelman from Finderne passed through Plainfield Monday afternoon and left his bicycle standing in the City Hotel sheds. When he returned for it, he found that some miscreant had cut a gash four inches long in the side of his rear tire. The wheelman expressed his wheel home and took the trolley. Before he left, however, he expressed the wish to meet the man who cut the tire.

Miss Peterson, of Newark, has been visiting Plainfield relatives.

The Misses Pfender, of this city, are spending their vacation in Hunterton county.

Hastings Norton, of Elizabeth, has been the guest of B. O. Bowers, Jr., of Franklin place.

Harry Kesselring, one of the fire department call men, is on duty at fire headquarters while one of the regular men is off duty.

CHIEF GRANT CAUSED ARREST OF DARLING.

Received Tip as to His Whereabouts a Month Ago.

MURDERER TALKED MUCH.

WAS INTOXICATED WHEN HE GAVE HIMSELF AWAY.

Suspicions Talk Heard by a Man Who Immediately Notified Chief Grant of the Circumstances—Latter Had Considerable Difficulty in Interesting the Officials of Pennsylvania in the Case.

The sensation which followed the announcement in Tuesday's Daily Press of the capture of William Darling, the murderer of Harry Dunham, in Thompson township, Fulton county, Pa., Monday, led to many inquiries as to how the capture was made and what were the circumstances in connection with the arrest. At first everyone was led to doubt the truthfulness of the report, but later on there seemed to be no doubt but what Darling had been captured.

This paper is able to present some interesting facts in the case which discloses just how Darling was caught. It was about a month ago that Captain Grant, of this city, received a letter from some unknown person residing at McConnellsburg, Pa., telling him that William Darling, of Plainfield, was living in Thompson township, and that from what could be learned he was wanted for some heinous crime. This party stated that while Darling was in a state of intoxication he had disclosed certain things which led him to believe that something was wrong about the man. Darling told that he had a sister living in Plainfield and that from her he was receiving $30 a month. He also told that he did not dare return to Plainfield because he was wanted for forgery. All these things were told by Darling while under the influence of liquor, and it was this that led Captain Grant's informant to write to this city. The Captain at once secured a capias and sent it to his informant asking him to cause the arrest of Darling, but he received word in return that the informant could not act in the matter, but referred the Captain to Sheriff Sheets, of McConnellsburg, and Capt. Grant communicated with the Sheriff. He wrote several letters and did not receive a single reply.

In the meantime Lawyer Skinner, of Pea Coal Tannery, Pa., communicated with Captain Grant about the matter and asked him why he did not write to Sheriff Sheets. The Captain replied that he had but could get no reply. This letter was taken by Lawyer Skinner's wife to the Sheriff, who became somewhat disgruntled at the seeming unnecessary activity. He then wrote the Captain telling him that he would attend the case as soon as possible, but that inasmuch as so much publicity had been given the case he doubted whether Darling could be caught safely. In all letters that Captain Grant sent to the Sheriff he warned him to be well prepared when he arrested Darling as he was a very dangerous person. Yesterday morning the Captain received a telegram informing him of the arrest of Darling.

Thus it can be seen that Captain Grant is entitled to a great deal of credit for his earnest and persistent efforts in the case. Although it might be said that the case was a little out of his jurisdiction, he still had the right to evidence a proper amount of zeal and energy and make every effort to capture this fugitive from justice. Prosecutor Willard Voorhees, of New Brunswick, feels a little bit chafed over the action taken by Plainfield officials, but he must give credit where due, for probably Middlesex county officials would never have learned of the whereabouts of Darling on their own efforts.

¶Tuesday morning at 1:17 o'clock Roundsman John Flynn left for McConnellsburg, where he expects to be in time for Court to open. He goes for the purpose of identifying Darling. The Roundsman is well acquainted with Darling and says that he could pick him out of fifty men. The two have known each other from boyhood. Captain Grant was in New Brunswick Tuesday afternoon holding a conference with Prosecutor Voorhees as to what course to pursue, etc. If Roundsman Flynn identifies Darling arrangements will be made at once to secure extradition papers and Darling will be taken to New Brunswick. It is highly important that action be taken at once for they will hold a man but five days arrested under such circumstances.

According to the reports from the place where Darling has been living he is considered a dangerous man. He has lived there long enough for the people to learn about him and nearly everyone that knows him has a fear of him.

For the Hall.

The admittedly odd looking contrivance that figures in the cut would be found very serviceable in a modern hall, providing as it does an ample umbrella stand and a handy glove and brush cabinet. It serves as a convenient and appropriate auxiliary to any of the quaint hanging hat and coat racks that are now quite the proper thing in a well appointed hall.

Kitchen Hints.

In making jelly it must be borne in mind that the less stiring there is the better. If stirred too much the jelly is not clear, while the tendency of sugar to granulate is increased by stirring.

Two tablespoonfuls of washing soda disolved in a gallon of boiling water makes an excellent disinfectant for the kitchen sink. Pour in while boiling hot.

A good test for the right consistency of jelly when boiling is to let it drop from a spoon. If the last drop sticks to the spoon it is sufficiently hard.

For canning, pickling and preserving, keep a supply of special cloths and holders to use, as the stains cannot be removed.

A little kerosene mixed with the blacking used to polish stoves before putting away for the summer is said to prevent rust.

In baking cakes or gems in gem pans, if there is not enough batter to fill all the little pans, put water into the empty ones before setting in the oven to bake.

If in using sour milk with soda for griddle cakes or muffins the milk does not foam as it should to produce the desired lightness, a teaspoonful of vinegar added to the milk will give the desired result.

An excellent and simple remedy for a sprain is said to be found by mixing the well-beaten whites of six eggs with a half cupful of table salt. Spread between thin muslin cloths and bind over the sprain.

When preparing the little cucumbers for pickling, do not forget to add a little horseradish root to the vinegar the cucumbers are put in; it helps to retain the strength in the vinegar, and prevents mould from coming over the top of the liquid.

Time Table for Baking Meats.

Beef, sirloin, rare, for each pound, 8 to 10 minutes; beef, sirloin, well done, for beef, rib or rump, for each pound, 12 to 15 minutes; beef, long or short fillet, 20 to 30 minutes; mutton, rare, for each pound, 10 minutes; mutton, well done, for each pound, 15 minutes; lamb, well done, for each pound, 15 minutes; veal, well done, for each pound, 15 minutes; pork, well done, for each pound, 30 minutes; turkey, weighing 10 pounds, 3 hours; chicken, weighing 3 to 4 pounds, 1 hour; tame duck, 40 to 60 minutes; game duck, 30 to 40 minutes; grouse, 30 minutes; pigeons, 30 minutes; small birds, 15 to 20 minutes; venison, for each pound, 15 minutes; fish, 6 to 8 pounds, long, thin, 1 hour; fish, 4 to 6 pounds, thick, 1 hour; fish, small, 20 to 30 minutes.

A Hint in Pie-Making.

People find that, though they put plenty of sugar into a fruit pie it is not sweet when baked. The ordinary cane sugar used is converted into grape sugar when heated with any acid, and that sugar has only about one-third the sweetening power of cane sugar. But if a little baking powder is added to the fruit, so as to neutralize the acid, the sugar will retain its sweetness in the cooking.

Few Words for the Butler.

Let him keep his table silver bright by soaking it in strong borax water for several hours, occasionally. The water must be at boiling point, and should be poured on the silver. When well soaked, a simple rubbing with a chamois leather will suffice to make the silver as bright as new.

Fire Irons.

Fire-irons that have to be laid by during the summer months should be protected from rust by being coated with a mixture of india rubber, dissolved to the consistency of cream in naphtha. This coating can easily be rubbed off the steel when needful.

THE MODE.

Items of Interest Concerning Summer Fashions.

Wash veils of white brussels net, with a border of embroidery or application, are pretty for summer wear, and, unlike other white veils, are serviceable, since they may be laundered as easily as a handkerchief.

Summer traveling wraps, which have taken the place of the long since obsolete linen duster, are of changeable silk, ponjee or taffeta, and, while very light in weight, are yet of extreme elegance and often made with great elaboration. The odd form is that of a loose redingote, finished with one or more circular flounces.

The fancy for contrasting colors in different parts of the costume is subsiding, and now the more harmonious fashion of keeping the gown, hat, belt and other accessories in the same scheme of color is again revived. Indeed, even the petticoat and stockings are sometimes included, as well as the parasol. This does not mean that all these articles are of one unvarying shade, but that the prevailing color of the gown is repeated in them to a greater or less degree.

BICYCLE COSTUME.

The bicycle costume illustrated is of iron gray diagonal. The short skirt is finished with a leather facing at the foot. The closed bolero has two elongated tabs in front and a man's collar and revers. The tight sleeves have three corded plaits at the shoulders. A linen collar and a red satin cravat are worn. The hat of gray straw has a curling brim and is trimmed with a red band and a steel buckle.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

A BLUE SEASON.

The Favorite Color For the Summer Wardrobe.

Blue of all shades is a favorite color, but by no means universally becoming. Only the darkest navy blue should be worn by a woman with a brunette skin unless indeed she wants to look yellow or swarthy. It has been even the unfortunate bad effect of blue, when it is unbecoming to the wearer, is to introduce large quantities of white or yellow, in the form of a bow or chou, to take away yellow look away from the skin. For a fair complexion nothing can be prettier than the periwinkle, pastel and bluet shades produced this season.

Tucked taffeta is a novelty for summer wear. Like tucked nainsook, it is what is called an "all over" material—that is, it is tucked in the manufactory and sold by the yard. It is used for boleros, vests, revers, waists and collars.

The illustration given today shows a bolero of blue cloth, very short at the back and elongated into two tabs in front, fitted straps of the cloth edge the bolero and outline the yoke and sleeve caps. The revers and collar are faced with tucked blue silk and bordered with white and gold galloon. The blouse worn beneath is of plaited surah, and the collar and cravat are of plaited white mousseline de soie. The hat of blue straw is trimmed with blue and white pompadour ribbon. This bolero may be used as a separate wrap or made to match the skirt.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

How She Tames Them.

Mrs. John Ettich, Jr., of Denver, who has been very successful as an animal trainer, says of her methods: "After getting intimate with them by feeding them I follow up the acquaintance by being kind to them, never teasing them, and always carrying them something of which they are fond. In speaking to them I always pitch my voice in the same key. I always use one kind of perfume which they readily recognize, even in their sleep, awakening at the scent."—Denver News.

A WOMAN MAYOR.

SHE PRESIDES OVER THE DESTINIES OF KENDRICK CITY, IDAHO.

Assumes the Perplexing Cares of a Political Office—Staggered by the Proposition at First, But Consented to Become a Candidate—Trials of the Campaign Were Many.

A bright faced girl presides over the destinies of Kendrick, Idaho, as Mayor. She did not, leading a host of offended femininity, assault the battlements of man and wrest from him municipal power; she was elected by the people—all the people—and no voters ever intrusted such power with so much confidence both in the ability and the intent of the recipient thereof to faithfully and honestly discharge the onerous duties pertaining to public office.

Search the world over and it is doubtful if a parallel case will be found. In the heyday of maidenhood, with the gayeties and the frivolities of the springtime of life spread out before her, Miss Jessie Parker, for such is the name of Kendrick's Mayor, eschews them all and assumes the perplexing cares connected with the administration of the affairs of a young Western municipality, with sidewalks to be laid, streets to be improved, buildings to be constructed, and frequent and bothersome meetings with men who present all sorts of schemes for city advancement, from sawmills to railroads. Trials and tribulations confront this maiden Mayor, but she has entered into the discharge of her duties with a vim.

MISS JESSIE PARKER.

Miss Parker is a very prepossessing young woman, with just enough dash to color her dignity. With twenty-two years to her credit, she bears all the freshness to which her age entitles her, and, above all, she possesses a keen intellect, with admirable faculties of discernment. All these attainments were weighed when Miss Parker was nominated. It must be borne in mind that in far off Idaho, where beautiful valleys beribbon the sun scorched sage bush plains and the jack rabbit and mining promoter hold high carnival, women are entitled not only to participate in politics but to vote, and while for a year they have exercised the franchise, outside of school positions none of them has held office. Miss Parker is the first.

Miss Parker talks very interestingly about her campaign and her plans for the future. "When the question of my candidacy was first broached," she said, talking with a mixture of the debonair of the college girl and the crafty satisfaction of the successful politician, "its very boldness staggered me. I really stammered my surprise, and awkwardly asked for time. But as I thought over the matter my self-possession returned. I reasoned it all out, and finally determined to allow my name to be used, but when the delegation of ladies and gentlemen waited on me for my answer I experienced much the feelings of the graduation girl when she faces her admirers to demonstrate her fitness for the honor about to be conferred upon her, and when they went outside and the air rang with cries of 'Hurrah for Miss Parker, our next Mayor!' and all that sort of thing, I shrank back in horror, and then I realized more than ever that I was only a girl, until the thought coursed through my feverish brain that after all woman's sphere did not embrace politics.

"How awful it all seemed, with young men and old charging through the streets crying 'Hurrah for Parker!' and then I imagined I could hear some of them in a fit of absentmindedness demand in stentorian tones to know 'What is the matter with Parker?' and to hear proclaimed with equal vehemence that 'He's all right!' It was terrible. But after a time I became more calm, and even laughed at my fears. I was no longer a weak girl, but a woman, filled with all the aspirations that may fill the breast of any ambitious daughter of Idaho. Emboldened by the reaction, I made a vow to face it, and I did.

"As to my plans for the future, I have not yet had sufficient time to fully determine. I am only one of five, and will have to exert an influence with the Council, still my powers are limited. I will have a voice in all matters looking to the advancement and improvement of the city and will appoint policemen, &c., but I am without a vote, of course, excepting in case of a tie. However, the Council and myself are in harmony on the general policy of our administration and I anticipate no dissension. Should it come, however, I will exercise vigorously the prerogative given me by law.

"The disreputable element cannot run this city while I am in office. There is no question about that. Law and order will be maintained and all necessary improvements will be made, and that without placing too heavy a burden upon our people."

Miss Parker was elected as an independent on the first Tuesday in April and has taken hold in a manner that fully justifies all the claims of her supporters.

What to Wear at Sea.

The outfit of the modern girl aboard ship, as fashion prescribes it for this year, is exceedingly simple and very different from anything she has worn before. "Steamer shoes" are the great necessity. These are thick of sole and rubber soled, with rounded toes, very heavy and solid, made in tans or black. The rubber sole is that there may not be any slipping on a wet deck. Two styles of hats will be correct—the Cornish cap, a woollen affair very much like the Tam o' Shanter of several years ago, and the trim and chic Alpine hat, with two quills in it. The color of these depends upon the color of the suit that is worn, it being the proper thing for the hat to match the suit precisely.

A tailor-made suit, with a skirt that reaches only to the boot tops and allows full play for walking when the deck is on a decided angle, is the only costume of the day for steamers. With this are worn shirt waists, preferably of wool, and plaids generally, red being the most admired color. This looks remarkably well when worn with a dark blue skirt. Under this skirt the up-to-date girl seldom wears a petticoat. She may wear one very short white skirt if she pleases, but very few will this year. Instead bloomers of dark flannel or alpaca are to be worn.

White knit gloves of wool, somewhat like mittens, except that they have fingers, are the correct thing in hand wear. In the "steamer roll" are also taken along sweaters for use in cold weather.

Points About Cooking.

All dry materials should be sifted before measuring.

A cup holding just half a pint is the standard measuring cup.

A cup is all the cup will hold without running over—full to the brim. A scant cupful is within a fourth of an inch of the top.

A tablespoonful of flour, sugar or butter is a rounded tablespoonful.

A teaspoonful of salt, pepper and spice is a level teaspoonful.

A heaped spoonful is all the spoon will hold.

Half a spoonful is measured by dividing through the middle lengthwise.

To give an appetizing flavor to a broiled beefsteak rub a cut onion over the hot platter with the butter.

Three tablespoons of freshly made Japan tea, with a pinch of nutmeg, imparts an indescribable flavor to apple pie.

To improve sweetbreads and give them a fine flavor, soak them in mild lemon juice water an hour, and then boil twenty minutes in beef stock.

A Simple Device.

The woman of to-day, whether dwelling in town or country, realizes what flowers are in the decoration of a room. But cut flowers, charming though they are for room or table decoration, should not be the only form floral decoration takes in the house.

FOR FLOWERS.

The difficulty is to know how to have pots of flowers and plants so disposed as to get a maximum of effect in yielded at the minimum expenditure of money, trouble and inconvenience. With bamboo the difficulty is solved. Cutting holes in a large piece of bamboo, the interior may be filled with earth or flower pots introduced, and vines and posies growing out and falling over the bamboo make a pretty effect.

Pork Cake.

Without butter, milk or eggs, a most delightful cake is made by this recipe. It will keep for two months, that is, if you will let it. Fat salt pork, entirely free from lean or rind, chopped so fine as to appear like lard, one pound; pour boiling water upon it, one pint; raisins, one pound; citron, one-fourth pound; nutmeg, two cupfuls; molasses, one cupful; soda, one teaspoonful rubbed fine and put in the molasses. Mix these all together and stir in enough flour to make the consistency of common cake mixtures, then stir in nutmeg and cloves, one ounce; cinnamon, two ounces; have all spices finely ground; bake all fruit cake slowly and try with broom straw; when nothing adheres, it is done.

When Making Cake.

In any and all cake where sweet milk and baking powder are called for, if half sweet and half sour are used with just enough soda to sweeten the sour and the same amount of baking powder, you will have a much nicer cake, as sweet milk and baking powder make a hard cake, and sour milk and soda make a soft cake. By mixing them as the English do their drink, "alf and 'alf," we find something just right.

Cleaning the Candlesticks.

The safest method of cleaning either metal or china candlesticks is as follows: Pour boiling water over the grease spot—it will instantly disappear—then polish with dry cloths. A little ammonia in the water is a great help also. Silver or electro-plated candlesticks require cleaning twice a week with plate powder to be kept bright.

OUR CUBAN SISTER.

HER LIFE STILL RESTRICTED BY OLD SPANISH CUSTOMS.

Her Loves and Hatreds Intense—She Is Carefully Watched Over By Her Parents Or Chaperone—Passionately Fond of Music—Her Patriotism.

The American girl has adopted three new sisters, concerning whom we have all heard more or less. An interesting group they make—the daughter of long suffering Cuba, and her dark-skinned sisters from the wide Pacific! Which will prove herself the most worthy in the new era about to open up for each of them?

We expect to find the Cuban girl very Spanish in her tastes and inclinations—and we are not mistaken. Though the Cuban nature is derived from a mixed source, the Spanish blood is the strongest, and we find the Cuban woman characterized by the self-same traits as mark the Spaniard. Her loves and hatreds are intense, and there is the same fondness for such brutal amusements as the bull-fight.

The Cuban woman is quite mature at an early age; when young she is considered very beautiful, possessing the soft, winsome beauty of Southern climes; indeed, at any age the Cuban woman may be called good-looking, for she possesses that charming trait of never looking really old; rarely is she wrinkled and ugly.

With large dark eyes; a round face, crowned with a wealth of jet-black hair, a complexion clear as amber, the skin being of that soft velvety texture, and having the appearance of a rich, healthy tan, the Cuban girl is certainly "good to look upon." Can we wonder that the young Cuban soldiers fought so bravely and so well with such an inspiration!

The Cuban girl is happy and contented, though her life is simple and uneventful and it must at times be somewhat monotonous; for, like the woman of Spain, she has been hemmed in by customs which should have perished back in the middle ages. With few exceptions, she is convent-bred, and the education given by the gentle nuns, though it cannot be said to be very broad, is nevertheless good. She, of course, studies English, and there is the usual French and Latin.

Very rarely is the Cuban woman seen in the daytime, and when she does appear it is never alone. Accompanied by her parents or husband or a watchful chaperon, there is small chance for the Cuban belle to indulge in even the most harmless flirtation. In fact, there are very few amusements which she is permitted to enjoy.

As she is passionately fond of music, one of her chief pastimes in Havana is to go to the park every evening, where a band concert is almost always given. There are dances, of course, at certain seasons of the year, and here the Cuban girl is very much in evidence, but of the sports of out-of-door sports, which form so great a part of the life of the present athletic American girl, she knows very little. With the freedom of Cube, old customs may pass away, and the Cuban girl take on athletic attainments, for she is certainly not wanting in spirit or an ability to share in man's privileges and work, as the many stories of the women's heroism, during Cuba's long struggle, go to prove. In patriotism, she is, indeed, the equal of her American sister.

Wedding Months.

There is a popular idea that June is the favorite month for weddings, and that the young woman who loves romance and wishes fortune to smile upon her nuptials in every way must choose this of all months. Cold and unromantic fact, however, shows that the three most popular marriage months are October, November and December. Fifty years' records show this to be true, and also demonstrates the fact that the most unpopular months for marriage are January, February and March.

Kansas Women in Office.

Kansas has more women in public office than any other State in the Union. Twenty per cent. of the county superintendents of education, five county registrars of deeds and a State librarian are women. Then there are a few lawyers, several police magistrates, city marshals and police officers who are among the fairer and supposedly weaker sex.

High Collars Injurious.

Medical examiners say that the high collars so much worn by both men and women are productive of direful physical results. The head is thus thrown forward to relieve the back of the neck, and this narrows the chest and decreases the lung space.

Patti's First Appearance.

It was in Cuba that Adelina Patti sang for the first time in public, when she was 14 years old. It was at a concert, and her success was complete.

ACTIVITIES OF WOMAN.

Bust of Emma Willard to Be Placed In New York State Library.

Fitting recognition is to be made of the services of one whose life was devoted to the higher education of women in the placing of a bust of Emma Willard in the New York State library at Albany.

The bust is a gift to the state from the Emma Willard association, and the formal presentation and unveiling will take place on July 27. Mrs. Russell Sage, president of the association, will make the presentation speech. It will have the distinction of being the only bust of a woman at the state capitol.

The thought of having a statue of Mrs. Willard placed in the capitol of the state to whose educational interests she contributed so greatly was that of Mrs. Harriette A. Dillaye, the last of Mrs. Willard's teachers to be active service. The request of the Association to be allowed to place the bust in the library was preferred through Hon. Chauncey M. Depew and was graciously granted by the board of regents. The bust is the work of Miss Enid Yandell, the first woman to be made a member of the National Sculptors' society.

Unique in the world's history was the splendid welcome home which the city of Chicago recently gave to the women war nurses who went to the front in our conflict with Spain. The heroic women who served in hospital and camp were feasted and toasted at a great banquet given in their honor at the Palmer House, being highly eulogized by distinguished statesmen and soldiers for their courage, skill and endurance.

The first colored women to graduate from a vermont college is Miss Annette Anderson, who delivered the valedictory address at the commencement exercises of Middlebury college.

Miss Hattie Smith of Bridgeport, Conn., has become a professional diver at seaside resorts, adopting this means to raise money to educate herself in music.

Progressive British women have a stanch and gallant champion in the Right Hon. Leonard Henry Courtney, who proposed and secured the amendment to the London local government bill whereby women are made eligible for election as aldermen.

Mrs. Mortimer L. Thorn, who owns the schooner yacht Studio, is the only woman sailing master who holds a license from the United States custom house.

Dr. Margaret Stanton of Syracuse has just been elected president of the Onondaga County Medical society, being the first woman to hold such a position.

The women of Maryland have presented Admiral Schley with a chest containing a handsome silver service. There was picturesqueness in the event the presentation being made, in the presence of a large assembly of the elite of Maryland, under the wide spreading branches of a big oak at Nacirema, the beautiful country estate of General Felix Agnus in the Green Spring valley.

The Princess Engalitecheff of Chicago enjoys the distinction of being the only woman in that city who can successfully manage an automobile in the crowded streets.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Susan Le Roy Dresser to Vicomte Romain d'Oamoy of Normandy, France, has occasioned something of a flurry in Gotham's uppertendom. Miss Dresser is one of four sisters who are great favorites in New York society and who are always referred to as the "Dresser girls." The three others are married, one being the wife of George Vanderbilt.

A new field for woman's activity and one which is said not to be overcrowded is cameo cutting. Miss Agnes Doyle, a Chicago girl of artistic tastes, has engaged in this occupation and is becoming an expert.

Lieutenant Anna Lindberg of the Salvation Army in St. Louis has broken the record in selling papers, having disposed of 27,000 copies of The War Cry in 16 months.

A school for training nursery maids has been established in Boston.

The statesmen and political reformers who are "fighting the trusts" might get points from Miss Nellie M. Hower and Mrs. Mary L. Metzar of Akron, O., who for almost a year have stood in the way of the formation of a cereal trust. By injunction and other processes of law these woman have prevented extensive cereal food producing companies from entering into any combination.

Costume of Chavannes Green.

Chavannes green (which is the artist's present name for soft leaf green China crape) is applied with soft pink passion flowers, with green leaves, touched up by black spangles. One border runs around either circular ruffle of a captivating skirt. The waist is laced together with green cord over black velvet, the velvet continuing spangled around the yoke of plaited white chiffon. There is a wisp of black velvet, less than an inch deep, for a girdle. It takes a parasol all white and a hat of the same purity to make possible this seaside costume of pink and green and sparkle.

Philosophy of the Eyes.

Blue eyes are said to be the weakest. Upturned eyes are typical of devotion.

Wide open eyes are indicative of rashness.

Side-glancing eyes are always to be distrusted.

Brown eyes are said by oculists to be the strongest.

Small eyes are commonly supposed to indicate cunning.

The downcast eye has in all ages been typical of modesty.

The proper distance between the eyes is the width of one eye.

People of melancholic temperament rarely have clear blue eyes.

Eyes with long sharp corners indicate great discernment and penetration.

The white of the eye showing between the iris is indicative of nobility of character.

Gray eyes turning green in anger or excitement are indicative of a choleric temperament.

When the upper lid covers half or more of the pupil the indication is of cool deliberation.

An eye the upper lid of which passes horizontally across the pupil indicates mental ability.

Unsteady eyes, rapidly jerking from side to side, are frequently indicative of an unsettled mind.

It is said that the prevailing colors of eyes among the insane asylums are brown and black.

Eyes of any color with weak brows and long, concave lashes, are indicative of a jealous disposition.

Eyes that are wide apart are said by physicians to indicate great intelligence and a tenacious memory.

Eyes of which the whole of the iris is visible belong to erratic persons, often with a tendency toward insanity.

Wide open, staring eyes in weak countenances indicate jealousy, bigotry intolerance and pertinacity without firmness.

Eyes placed close together in the head are said to indicate pettiness of disposition, jealousy and a turn for fault finding.

When the under arch of the upper eyelid is a perfect semicircle it is indicative of goodness, but also of timidity sometimes approaching cowardice.

All men of genius are said to have eyes clear, slow moving and bright. This is the eye which indicates mental ability of some kind, it does not matter what.

Blue eyes are generally considered effeminate, but this is a mistake, for blue eyes are found only among Caucasian nations, and the white race rule the world.—Fearson's Weekly.

The Unimportant Bridegroom.

The bridegroom is always bashful and ill at ease from a most unwarranted sense of his own importance, for, as every one knows, no one ever notices him, unless it be the minister's wife, and even she would not if she were scrutinizing her new daughter's air and bearing, and "the other woman" if she is free, has come only to see his last choice. But the effete east is flattering in its recognition of the bridegroom compared to the breezy freedom of the west and the rule is in Kansas, for instance, the bridegroom's name is not even mentioned in the wedding notices. Listen to this solecism: "Miss Della Hill to marry (Kan.) News: "Miss Della Hill is married. Her husband is a travelling man of considerable means, and she does not have to work, and even to make her own bed. Her husband is some years older than she is and weighs 250 pounds."

The Polite Way.

"Yes, Algernon, I will be your wife" she said simply.

The heart of the bronzed soldier beat high with joy.

"Then you have not forgotten me?" he exclaimed.

"I may have forgotten you, but I hope I haven't forgotten my manners," she replied, with something of hauteur.

Of course, it is always the polite thing to comply with requests.—Detroit Journal.

HAIR ORNAMENTS.

More in Demand Than Any Other Articles of Jewelry.

Ornaments for the hair seem to be more in demand than any other article of jewelry, to judge by the variety of these baubles displayed in the big gem-shops. A tiara of diamonds with a row of splendid emeralds across the top and a tiny crown of rubies and diamonds are worth a king's ransom, as emeralds and diamonds were never more expensive than they are at present. A pair of diamond wings, movable to any angle, is to be worn with a feather aigrette, and an airy, delicate aigrette has exquisite opals and diamonds on quivering stems. An aigrette of diamonds and rubies is new and graceful. It is mounted on a diamond scroll. But newest of all is a humming bird in gold set with rubies emeralds and diamonds, holding a single diamond in its mouth, and mounted on a white feather aigrette. Diamond aigrettes with pendent, quivering turquoises are beautiful. The necklace of first water diamonds strung on a golden wire, so that on the neck only the drops of fire are visible, is admired by everyone, but it does not become common even among the very rich, as the stones in a necklace of this description have to be well-nigh perfect gems and perfectly matched to have the proper effect. A regal necklace is of diamond scrolls and rosettes, each studded with a single ruby, the pendant is a wonderful pear-shaped ruby. A necklet for a young girl is a chain of diamonds with a cross wheel slide set with a single pearl.

A new corsage pin is a diamond cherry leaf, with a gold stem and single turquoise for fruit. A pink pearl for great beauty, and enormous size is rimmed with diamonds and suported by two large white pearls; and all these are set among scrolls and leaves of diamonds. Another corsage ornament is a large shamrock composed of three huge white pearls, each in the finest brilliants; a small shamrock shows a black, white and pink pearl, each encircled by brilliants and connected in the centre by one single white stone. A novel ornament is a ribbon of diamonds, tied into a succession of true lover's knots in graduated sizes, each bow forming a separate brooch.

Mrs. Mary B. G. Eddy as an Author.

Some idea of the enormous income derived by Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, head of the Christian Scientists, from the sale of her books may be gained from her published statement that she has given almost $90,000 in charity in the last three years. Judge Hanna, the editor of the Christian Science Journal, adds that if she desired she easily could be a millionaire within a few years, from the sale of her books alone. Another man, high in affluence in the church, says that she is the best paid author in the world.

MRS. MARY B. G. EDDY.

Solace For Lonely Souls.

All of a sudden the much-alive metropolitan clubwoman seems to be interested in the sister whose life is apt to be one awful stretch of monotony—the farmer's wife. As is well known, there is a preponderant per cent. of these "let alone" women in the insane asylum, and better on club topics.

One bright idea is the opening in town of a "rest room," where the farmer's wife may stay on Saturday. With the latest magazines and the ever-comforting cup of tea, this weary weekly shopper may find mental and bodily refreshment. This work has been particularly espoused by Missouri clubwomen. In other parts the farmer's wife is looking out for herself, as instance the Ladies' Aid Guild this town the women of the surrounding country have rented two rooms in the courthouse. Each member furnished one of each sort, one chair, one cup and saucer, and every Saturday came together to spread lunch and "talk things over." The city clubwoman, in order to give both dollars and diversion to the country woman, who sadly needs a little financial independence, has opened a market for domestic manufacturers. This is a new work especially espoused by Mrs. Candace Wheeler, of New York. Another club plans weaving of home-made rugs in imitation of Oriental textiles, and of old designs in table linen, have been encouraged with artistic results.

Farmers' wives away out West, in the meantime ,drive many miles over rough mountain roads for their one social pleasure, the woman's literary club. The big city clubs, such as the Denver Woman's Club, on the other hand, regularly send "periodicals" and club papers to the lonely women too remotely situated for a chance to belong to any club.

Ready to Be Thrilled, and She Was.

An Ohio lady visiting Boston for the first time has been doing the sights. "I had my greatest thrill down at Copp's Hill burying ground yesterday," she said. "Yes, that's just the place for the historic emotions," commented her interlocutor. She smiled. "As soon as my sister-in-law and I got into the place," she said, "I found myself almost stepping upon a grave with an inscription on a queer little iron-cover sort of tomb. I began to get a little creeping the way you do when you step on a grave, and read the inscription, just three initials no name or dates. 'Was it an heiress?' I said to my sister-in-law. 'Oh, I don't know,' she answered. 'B. W. W. means Boston Water Works.'"

Her gown with beauty is designed;
All must admit its charm.
But the way she holds it up behind
Will one day break her arm.

COURAGE OF A COWBOY.

He Swung Himself and His Horse Over a Yawning Chasm With a Rope.

"Speaking of the dare-devil characteristics of western cowboys," said an old plainsman, "I recall an adventure that might have proved fatal to myself and a man named Henry but for the great presence of mind displayed in an emergency by my cool-headed companion. The incident happened in Montana some years ago. We were traveling along a narrow trail on the border of the Grande Ronde river when we suddenly came to a landslide that was about twenty-five feet across and left no trail in the smooth, precipitous rock. The trail was so narrow that our horses could not turn back and, realizing that it would be folly to expect the animals to jump the chasm, it looked as though we were trapped. But directly above the twenty-five-foot break in the trail there was a huge rock, which was right in the centre. Henry saw the crack in the rock and having a strong riata seventy feet long on his saddle, swung the rope over his head and, when he was so high in the air. Being an expert in the use of the riata, it went true to the mark and was soon firmly fixed in the crevice of the rock.

"While I was wondering what he was going to do with the rope he took in the slack and wound it around the horn of his saddle, to see that it was strong and supplied with double cinches. Then he urged his horse to the edge of the precipice.

"The horse stood planted firm. He would not step over, but Henry again drew up the slack and pulled with all might inch by inch he drew the animal's head sideways, till his feet slipped and he swung over the yawning chasm. For a moment I held my breath and shut my eyes, expecting to hear the slender rope break and the burden disappear into the raging river below.

"When I did open my eyes he had swung across the gap and, dismounting, he backed up the trail and tugged at the reins to aid the horse in gaining his feet. He pulled hard and the animal hinged to into the trail, with the chasm far behind.

"Safe on the other side, Henry urged the animal to make the daring swing the beast safety across the gap, we rode away and left the rope dangling for the use of the next wayfarer who chanced to come that way.

No Prisons Needed.

In Iceland there are no prisons, and the inhabitants are so honest in their habits that such material defenses to property as locks, bolts and bars are not required. Yet its history for the past fifteen hundred years records no more than two thefts.

Of these two cases one was that of a native who detected after pursuit its servant sheep; but as he had done so to supply his family, who were suffering for want of food, when he had broken his arm, previously, he was furnished to them and work was found for him when he was able to do it, and meanwhile he was placed under medical care; but the stigma attached to his crime was considered sufficient punishment.

The other theft was made by a German, who stole seventeen sheep. But as he was in comfortable circumstances and the robbery was malicious, the sentence passed upon him was that he should at once sell all his property.

$1,250,000 Per Pint.

Some of these growths, says a writer, who is describing his visit to a germ farm, are exceedingly expensive. Indeed, the bacillus siccus to be as valuable in its way as a source orchid. I was shown, for instance, a species known as the bacillus indicus rubor, which is found only in the stomach of certain monkeys, and for a colony of which a ten-pound note was asked.

On the other hand, you can buy escherichii coli communis to infect a decent sized town for $2.50, while twice that sum will provide you with a choice collection of fine, healthy typhoid germs. Lovely bacilli come expensive, though $25 per colony; while as much as $40 is asked for selected colonies of the bacillus of consumption or lupus. This would work out at something like $1,250,000 per pint.

Fast Trains'

The high-water mark of European railway progress will probably be touched in Europe between the channel ports and Switzerland. There is no train in Europe to match the speed of the Nord de France between Paris and Amiens—85 miles in eighty-five minutes. The Basle express covers the distance between Basle and London, 505 miles, in fourteen hours and thirty-five minutes, a speed of over forty miles an hour, with two frontiers to be crossed and twenty-five miles of sea-crossing.

Transparent Stone.

A window made entirely of stone has been presented to the French city of Beauvais. The stone is nephite —found in Siberia—and so beautifully transparent that when placed as it is it catches the sun's rays and throws them into the interior of the cathedral.

Niagara's Channel

The truth of the fact about constant dripping wearing away a stone is strikingly illustrated in the fact that the Niagara River has in 36,000 years cut a channel 200 feet deep, 2,000 feet wide and seven miles long, through solid rock.

Many Deaf and Dumb

Seven out of every 10,000 inhabitants of the United States are deaf and dumb. This affliction is much less common among the negroes than among the whites.

Long-Lived Birds

Among birds the swan lives to be the oldest, in extreme cases reaching 300 years; the falcon has been known to live over 162 years.

Africa has very nearly 700 language, and this fact presents great difficulties to missionary effort.

MAKING A LAZY FISH WORK.

Manner in Which the Chinese Make Use of the Remora.

Most voyagers in tropical seas are acquainted with the remora, which is known generally by the trivial name of the sucker. The distinguishing characteristic of this fish is laziness. Unwilling to exert itself overmuch in the pursuit of food, it has developed an arrangement on the back of its head exactly like the corrugated sole of a tennis shoe, and as artificial in appearance as if made and fitted by the hand of man.

When the sucker finds itself in the vicinity of any large floating body, such as a ship, a shark or a piece of flotsam, whose neighborhood seems to promise an abundance of food, it attaches itself firmly thereto by means of this curious contrivance, which permits it to eat, breathe and perform all necessary functions while being carried about without any exertion on its part. It can attach and detach itself at pleasure, and this it does by pushing pushed forward with the inevitable bamboo, are started on the search again. At last they attach themselves to the supine turtle. Then the fisherman hauls in the lines, against which gentle suasion the hapless fish struggles in vain. Once on board the raft the useful remora is detached and is at once ready for use again.

Origin of Blind Man's Buff.

This favorite sport of childhood and youth is of French origin and very high antiquity, having been introduced into England in the train of the Norman conquerors. Its French name, "Colin Maillard," was that of a brave warrior, the memory of whose exploits still live in the chronicles of the middle ages.

In the year 999 Liege reckoned among its valiant chiefs one Jean Colin. He acquired the name Maillard from his chosen weapons being a mallet, wherewith in fight he used literally to crush his opponents. In one of the feuds which were of perpetual recurrence in those times he encountered the Count de Louvain in a pitched battle, and, so runs the story, in the first onset Colin Maillard lost both his eyes, for Count Louvain, in order to take him to the thickest of the fight, and, furiously brandishing his mallet, did such fearful execution that victory soon declared itself for him.

When Robert of France heard of these feats of arms he lavished favors and honors on the gallant knight, and was the fame of the exploit that it was commemorated in the pantomimic representations that formed part of the rude dramatic performances of the age. By degrees the children learned to act it for themselves, and it took the form of the familiar sport.

The blindfolded pursuer, as, with bandaged eyes and extended hands, he gropes for a victim to pounce upon, seems in some degree to repeat the action of Colin Maillard, the tradition of which is also traceable in the name—blind man's buff.

To Hypnotize a Chicken.

There are many interesting tricks children can do with little trouble and expense. There are really applications of scientific principles, but when properly done look like magic.

For the first thing they might hypnotize a chicken. To do this have a dark table and draw a white chalk line across it, beginning from directly under the bill of the chicken, whose beak should be held down to the table so that it must look at the line. A rooster will become senseless and nerveless by the time the line is two feet long, and remain with his beak glued to the line sometimes over a minute—and that seems long.

Excuses for Baby.

Tessing Friend—What makes that new baby at your house cry so much, Tommy?

Tommy (indignantly)—It don't cry so very much; and, anyway, if all your teeth were out, and your hair off, and your legs so wabbly you couldn't stand on them, I fancy you'd feel like crying yourself!

ABOUT THE APPLE.

IT IS THE MOST EXTENSIVELY USED OF ALL THE FRUITS.

Has Figured in History and Possesses Many Virtues—An English Ceremony Which Insures a Full Crop—Where the Fruit Came From Originally.

The apple is the most used of all the fruits grown. It is world renowned, and has figured in history and the lives of nations almost since the earliest record. Poets and philosophers have told of it, and mythology has endowed it with wonderful virtues. The golden fruit of Hesperus was an apple; also the famous tree of knowledge bore apples. It was an apple which Eve ate and offered to Adam, and the fruit in the garden guarded by the dragon which Hercules finally overpowered were apples. Apples were fabled in all the myths and were believed to have many wonderful powers, such as conferring immortality, and were reserved by the gods as a special food for those who felt themselves growing old. Because of this old reverence for apples, the farmers of Devonshire, in England, still keep up the custom of "saluting the apples" in a ceremony to insure the crop. This ceremony consists of the farmers going out under the tree and pouring part of a wassail bowl of cider on the roots, then hanging a bit of the toast (which is in the bowl) on the branches, while the farmer and his men dance slowly around the tree, singing tae following:

Here's to thee, old apple tree,
Whence thou may'st bud, and
whence thou may'st blow,
And whence thou may'st bear apples enow,
Hats full, caps full,
Bushels full and sacks full!
Huzza!

The apple is a native of all temperate climates, and although most of the kinds cultivated in this country are from seed brought from some part of Europe ,the trees have so adapted themselves to the soil as oftentimes to bear better in this country than in their original homes. It is a very hardy and somewhat slow bearing tree, but is argued in favor of the well theory. But there near Lamont is ocular proof of the well theory. The nest holes of the dogs were five or six feet deep, but four or five holes went straight down as deep as the excavation had been made and evidently on digging and carrying sand beneath. These holes appeared to be used by the whole colony commonly, and were a little larger than the holes used for their homes.

Novel Merry-Go-Round.

At a recent class picnic at Tomah, Wis., some of the boys discovered a fine merry-go-round in a tall pole standing near the picnic grounds.

A rope was attached to the top and the boys wound it about the pole by carrying it in a circle. One of the boys then grasped the rope as high up as possible and ran in a circle around the pole as far from it as the rope would allow until the centrifugal force raised him from the ground. This start and the unwinding of the rope caused him to make four or five revolutions at a distance of fifteen or twenty feet from the pole before his feet touched the ground. This performance was then repeated by all the other boys and was declared the most pleasing feature of the day.

Could Not Be Returned.

Six-year-old Tommie was sent by his eldest sister to the corner grocery to buy a pound of lump sugar. He played allias on his way to the store, and by the time he arrived there he had forgotten what kind of sugar he was sent for. So he took home a pound of the granulated article. His eldest sister sent him back to the store to get lump sugar. After the proprietor of the grocery shop had made the change for the little lad he engaged Tommie in conversation.

"Tommie," he said, "I understand there is a new member of your family?"

"Yes, sir," replied the kid, "I've got a little brother."

"And how do you like that, hey?" inquired the groceryman.

"Don't like it at all," said Tommie; "rather have a little sister."

"Then why don't you change him, Tommie?"

"Well, we would if we could; but I don't suppose we can. You see, we have used him four days now."

PRAIRIE DOG'S WELLS.

How the Frisky Animals Go to the Water Level for Their Drink.

"The most interesting thing I have seen in many a day," said Mr. Harvey Geer, of Lamont, Col., "was a prairie dog well. Did you ever see one? It isn't often that a chance occurs to explore the homes and haunts of these expeditious little inhabitants of the plains. A few miles from my town a large force of men have been at work making a deep cut for a short railroad up into the mines. A friend of mine is in charge of the job, and I went out to see him and the work that had been done. The first thing that attracted my attention when I got there was the fact that the cut was being made through an old alfalfa field, and the roots fringed the side of the cut and hung down fifteen to eighteen feet. Up at the surface of the ground were the stubbed green plants, and reaching down deep into the earth were the fat, businesslike roots, getting their living far below where ordinary plants forage for subsistence.

"But the most remarkable thing was the prairie dog wells that had been dug into. The cut went through a dog village, and being a deep one—some forty feet—it went below the town. There has always been a discussion about where the prairie dog gets his drink. Some say he goes eternally dry and does not know what it is to have an elegant thirst on him. Usually their towns are miles from any stream and in an arid country, where there is no surface water at any time sufficient to meet the needs of an animal requiring drink. The overland travelers back in the days of pioneering used to find the dog towns out on the prairie scores of miles from the streams. There was no dew, the air was dry as a bone, the buffalo grass would be parched brown, and there would be absolutely nothing to quench thirst. I remember a discussion begun thirty years ago in the American Naturalist by Dr. Sternberg, now Surgeon-General, on the subject, and he argued in favor of the well theory. But there near Lamont is ocular proof of the well theory. The nest holes of the dogs were five or six feet deep, but four or five holes went straight down as deep as the excavation had been made and evidently on digging and carrying sand beneath. These holes appeared to be used by the whole colony commonly, and were a little larger than the holes used for their homes.

TRICKS WITH MATCHES.

They May Be Easily Done by the Boys and Girls.

Volume upon volume has been written about magic; thousands of works on second-sight tricks which only adepts could master have been produced, but the most novel recent contribution to literature of this nature is that of a Frenchman named Emmanuele. This man has spent a lifetime conceiving tricks to be performed with ordinary household matches.

In his work more than a thousand tricks are illustrated, with full instructions how to perform them. They range from the construction of animated figures to the building of temples of intricate architecture. All are produced by the clever use of that commonest and cheapest of all household necessities, the wooden match.

One of the simplest tricks demonstrates the old story of the marooned negro, the sailor-captors and the negro all being represented by matches. There are nineteen sailors, making twenty men, represented by twenty matches all told. It is decided to kill one man, and the marooned negro is given his choice of position in line. He is represented by a reversed match. Count is to be made in rotation, and each seventh man is to go free. The last man left is to die.

Where must the count begin so that the negro captive will be the victim?

The solution is simple. Let him select any position and then begin to count so that he will be No. 2 at the outset and his white captors will be in position at the conclusion. Figure A shows one of the many positions in line in which the reversed match may be placed.

Several different sets of ten matches each may be taken from twenty-five arranged as in figure B, in such a manner that only four squares remain. Figure C shows three solutions.

From forty matches arranged as in figure D sixteen are to be taken so that two large squares, equal in size, remain. Figure E shows how to do it.

Figures of persons and animals made to move by means of bent matches are amusing. Cut the body of the object you wish to represent out of thin cardboard. In order that they may move, the limbs must be cut out separately. On the back of the figure—to be more realistic, the front might be decorated by a colored drawing—fasten the limbs to the body by using bent matches, the hinges being near the top of the limbs. Each end of the bent match must be fastened to the cardboard. For this the best thing to use is a drop of shellac. Figures F, G and H illustrate how this may be done. When complete place the figure flat on a thin layer of water, touching the matches only, and it will move and appear to be animated. After drying, the figure may be used again.

This French match expert gives hundreds of simple problems, but they are none the less puzzling because of their simplicity. Here is one of them: How can you take fourths of a dozen matches be placed on a table so that they will form three and a half dozen matches? Following is the explanation: Place three matches together in a pile and six others in another pile, and there you have three and a half dozen matches.

Here is another: Three matches rest side by side. How can the middle one be taken out of its position in its group without touching it? By placing one of the outside matches next to the other outside match.

A Mean Dog.

He was a small boy—not such a very small boy—in an out of town school. He had written a composition. It was upon the subject of dogs. Now, the teacher of the school was a man, and he was not popular. He was what the boys call "mean." They disliked him thoroughly, from the tips of his shining shoes to the end of his pompadour forehead. He had announced that the subject of the Japanese. While climbing Green Mountain, near Bowdler, Col., Professor Beseey found growing from a crevice in one of the rocks at the summit a small pine tree, about 5½ inches high, and barely a quarter of an inch in diameter. It was unbranched and bore a single terminal tuft of leaves. The tiny tree had made a good fight for existence amid the inclemencies of its exposed situation, and after it had carefully examined twenty-five distinct annual rings were discovered. Such a case of natural dwarfing is almost unprecedented.

A Convenient Sewing Table.

Get two wooden boxes exactly similar in size and shape, about 12x18, and five or six inches deep. Cover these with cretonne and line with plain cambric to match. Cover four legs about two inches square with cretonne, and line with cambric and finish with rosettes. The legs can be of any length resired, and need not be planed, as they are to be covered. One box is to stand on end for the legs and the other about a foot from the floor. Cretonne curtains can be shirred full and fastened around the upper box, twill on each side. The boxes are held by each leg with ribbon bows just at the top of the lower box. Brass-headed furniture tacks to tack the covering give a finished appearance.

AN ODD CHRISTENING.

But It Was Strictly According to Tradition Alone of the Sea.

There lives a man in Detroit, intelligent, prosperous and happy, who does not know that he has a living relative in the world. He bears the deprivation philosophically, and seems to regard it as something of a distinction to be alone in the world.

"Nearly fifty years ago," he relates, "I was picked up by a slow sailing vessel in the South Pacific ocean. I was a lusty youngster of five, lashed to a mast, a pleasing assurance that the parents whom I barely recall loved me and had taken every measure of safety in the catastrophe that must have caused their own deaths. I was cold, hungry, thirsty and sleepy when taken aboard the old-time trader. My appearance was, of course, against me, and my clamor to be supplied with creature comforts did not please the gruff captain, who had a deep contempt of children and their management. His first order was to give me the rope's end, but there was successful intervention. Some one cared for, while he growled at his hard luck.

"But the captain took sick and found more comfort in my prattle than in anything else aboard, so for days he took a great liking to me and called me his son. As soon as he was up he decided that I must be christened, one of the few things that could not long be attended to in the case of children. Of course, there was no chaplain aboard, so the captain himself undertook the task. He gathered the crew about and with a mixed knowledge of his duties he glared about him as he asked whether anyone knew just cause why I should not be christened.

"'If there is,' he roared, 'speak up like a man or forever hold your clapper.' Then he suddenly cracked it the side of his over my head and christened me."

Here the citizen laughed and added that he was nine when the captain died, and had made his own way ever since.

The Power of Imagination.

The fact that the throes of the imaginary pangs of nervous excitement often produce a corresponding physical frenzy was illustrated recently in the case of a man who had gone to sleep with his artificial teeth in his mouth. Waking suddenly with a choking sensation he found his teeth had disappeared. He looked in the glass of water where they were usually deposited, did not see them there, and realised that they must be far down his throat. Choking and struggling, he hammered on the door of a friend sleeping in the house, who, seeing his critical condition, wisely endeavored to draw the teeth out of the sufferer's throat. He could feel the teeth, but had not the strength to extricate them. He ran for a blacksmith, who lived a few doors away, but the blacksmith's forceps was too gig to put into the man's mouth.

A doctor had been sent for, but he was so long in coming that the victim of the nervous excitement died. The cause of suffocation before the physician arrived. A little girl of ten years was brought, under the impression that her small hand in the mouth could reach and withdraw it, but she got frightened and began to cry. The sufferer became black in the face, his throat swelled out as the blood accumulated, and every moment to be his last, when finally the doctor arrived. He heard the history of the case, saw that the teeth were not on the mantel, put them in their nightly receptacle, felt the throat and chest of the sufferer, and cast his eyes seriously upon the corpse. Then he saw the whole set of teeth. He adjusted them in the jaws of the patient, told him to breathe freely, and every symptom of suffocation disappeared.

Tiny Pine Tree.

One of the most remarkable features of Japanese gardening is the way in which trees are dwarfed and tree in a famous garden will be reproduced in miniature, by a system of dwarfing which has been carried on for many generations back. Every characteristic of a large tree will be preserved, the foliage, the color and the texture of the bark, and the form of the branches, but will often be not more than from one to three feet high. Professor C. E. Bessey tells of a case in this country in which a dwarf pine was found by one

Trolley Transfer Trouble.

From all the information that can be secured concerning the differences between the Plainfield Street Railway Company and the Brunswick Traction Company, which is preventing the issue of transfers both ways between Dunellen and this city, it appears that the attitude of the Plainfield Street Railway Company is one inimical to the best interests and unjust to the community from whom they have obtained privileges of great value. The officials of the local company, accepting their verbal statements in relation to the matter as an indication, seem to take grim pleasure in the fact that the people of Dunellen are in trouble over their trolley facilities. This feeling with the Plainfield Street Railway Company overrides other more serious considerations because the company was not allowed to operate in Dunellen, while the Brunswick Traction Company, a competitor, is—but only after the borough had obtained much better terms from the latter corporation for the privileges granted.

Judging from all appearances it is a case of "sour grapes" with the Plainfield Street Railway Company. In the parlance of the day they are "getting even" with Dunellen for having refused them a franchise. But their discrimination is the matter of transfers, or rather their refusal to enter into any equitable arrangement with the Brunswick Traction Company, is not hurting Dunellen alone; it is injuring Plainfield for whom the Plainfield Street Railway Co. professes much love and consideration. Therefore the transfer arrangement is of much concern to this city and its business interests, and in taking up the difficulty and trying to adjust it satisfactorily the Board of Trade has acted within the bounds of good business sense.

What is fair for the Brunswick Traction Company would seem fair for the Plainfield Street Railway Company in the matter of transfers, and as the former company seem willing to make arrangements of most any kind it ought not be so difficult to fix up the differences to the satisfaction of all.

The Plainfield company dwelt at considerable length on conditions under which they secured their franchise, but they seem to lose sight of the public at the present time. An institution that exists because its only asset is the one which the public confers should be prompted somewhat to act as the interests of the public warrant. The company does not pretend to say that the present transfer arrangement is right; it simply holds to a technicality and says in effect: "The public be damned. We are in this business to make all the money we can irrespective of what the people want."

That idea, of course, prompts nearly all corporations of that sort, but it is one which in this particular case ought to be disabused in short order.

Sunday Bicycle Racing.

That horse racing with its betting ring has been abolished and prohibited in New Jersey by legislative laws no one but the sporting men who profited by betting on the races will regret. But up comes another equally as bad practice in Sunday bicycle racing for a purse of $1,000, next Sunday on the Vailsburg race track, in Essex county, near Newark. If there is no law to prohibit such public racing on God's holy day, we hope to see one enacted by next winter's Legislature. If horse racing was lowering to the morals of a State and a community on week days, surely Sunday bicycle racing is equally as bad, if not worse.

The city of Newark has just received nearly $80,000 as the annual tax levied by the city on the trolley roads there who operate under a franchise that allows the municipality four per cent. of the gross receipts. This is the same kind of an agreement that Plainfield now holds with the Plainfield Street Railway Company to take effect when the company's receipts reach a total of $80,000. The experience of Newark has been very satisfactory in this connection, and Plainfield's ought to be the same.

Discussing the growing power of trusts and the demonstrated impotency of attempted State control, the Buffalo Courier says: "If congress is honest with the people, a remedy for this menacing evil must be found. The control, the regulation and the responsibility of excessive combinations of capital are as much the business of the nation as they are of the States.

Not a Tax Dodger.

The Elizabeth Journal calls Plainfield "a tax dodger"—referring, of course, to the proceedings before the County Board of Assessors in Elizabeth Monday when there was a crazy outbreak against the valuations fixed by the Board of Assessors of this city.

In the valuations fixed by the local Board of Assessors there was an apparent decrease of $189,200 as compared to the valuations submitted from Plainfield last year. There was a just cause for this decrease, and had the Board of Assessors passed over it they would have been perpetrating a wrong upon the city. The plain facts are these:

In making up the assessed valuations of property in Plainfield one year ago an error of $143,000 crept into the figures of the Second ward. This error was not detected in time, and as consequence Plainfield was compelled to pay a county and State school tax on $143,000 which should not have existed.

Right here it is opportune to explain that the county and State school tax that Plainfield pays is levied on the basis of the valuation reported to the County Board of Assessors. But it is a fact that every year the city valuations are scaled down several thousand dollars by the Commissioners of Appeals, and it is on this latter sum that property owners pay rather than on what the Board of Assessors fix. Thus, where the Commissioners of Appeal scale down the assessments to the extent of several thousand dollars, that difference is paid by the city to the county without getting one cent of return when the collections are made.

In addition to rectifying the error of $143,000 made last year, and in accordance with the reductions made by the Commissioners of Appeals last year, the Board of Assessors this year made their valuations on the basis of paying a county and State school tax that would not be fixed on a sum much greater than the city would actually have to collect from.

Notwithstanding this condition of affairs, which should commend itself in fairness to both County Assessors when the explanations are made by the local representatives, the majority of the Assessors from other sections doggedly insisted, without reason, in raising Plainfield's valuation. Chairman Eckerson stated that "it would give Plainfield a black eye to have it go out that it is depreciating in taxable valuation." That is merely sentimental; taxation is a business proposition, and as such ought to be fixed on a business basis. Assuredly, the County Board displayed but little fairness in arbitrarily raising Plainfield's valuation in face of the actual conditions that prevail.

Suppose that race tracks flourished in New Jersey now and Valentine, the Perth Amboy bank wrecker, had lost $250,000 of other people's money "playing the races." Would attention have been directed so much to Valentine as a hue and cry raised against the tracks, which might have caused his downfall? We think there would have been a whole world of moralizing about the iniquities of race track gambling. However, the fact is that Valentine lost his money in the hands control of in Wall street, in a species of gambling a little more respectable but just as bad as that of "playing the races." But do we hear any sermonizing or moralizing with Wall street the butt of all criticism. No! There is a deal of truth in judging the world of today by Zaza's statement that "money is so respectable."

The very least punishment that George Valentine, the Perth Amboy bank wrecker, should have received at the hands of Middlesex county was the full extent of the law—seven years in State Prison and a $2,000 fine. Instead he got off with six years, the prosecution and the defense conduting the negotiations for such a disposal of the case in secret conference. Leniency seems to be typical of Middlesex county justice at all times, but it is too often placed on the wrong criminal. Valentine deserves as long a sentence as could be given him. By good behavior he will get out of prison in a little over four years. This will mean that he will make legal amends for stealing about $250,000 at the rate of $34,000 a year.

Good returns from advertising are secured in the same manner as other profitable results are attained in any line of human effort—that is, by keeping at it, says the Philadelphia Record. Sporadic trials of the advertising columns of even the best newspapers bring only intermittent gains. A hoop which wabbles in its rotations over the ground does not, of course, follow a straight line, and the tradesman will discover by observation and experience that in the matter of advertising he must be as regular and systematic as in the management of other departments of his establishment if he be anxious to keep on the direct road to success.

The New York Tribune credits Robert Davis, the Hudson county Democrat leader, as the most powerful Democrat in New Jersey today and the practical boss of the party.

The spirit of colonization and trading which received so great an impetus from the accounts of the New World given by Sir Walter Raleigh and other adventurous voyagers during the reign of Queen Elizabeth has expanded into the mighty commerce of the world as carried on in these days, says the Philadelphia Record. In like manner the small beginning of systematic advertising a century ago has developed into the interesting and extensive methods now employed with profitable results by enterprising merchants, who are careful to select the proper newspaper agency through which to exploit their wares.

Public convenience and accommodation demands that the Plainfield Street Railway Company shall enter into a fair agreement with the Brunswick Traction Company for a complete system of transfers between Dunellen and Plainfield.

Aguinaldo still remains a hard proposition for the United States.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

An amusing sight was witnessed at the North Avenue station last evening when one of the hack horses laid down in the roadway to take a nap. The animal had evidently been standing in one place for some time and was very tired. He laid down with all possible ease and was just about to go to sleep when some young men came along and assisted him to his feet. No damage resulted.

It is reported that the Plainfield Street Railway Company recently proposed, for the consideration of the privilege of laying double tracks from North and Watchung avenues to Front and Somerset streets, to stand the expense of putting down a permanent pavement for that entire distance, but those in authority decided no. On the other hand the Council gave the company the privilege of extending their turnout on Watchung avenue and taking up a whole block, for which the city receives nothing more than the macadamizing of that block.

BABY CAMP OPENED.

ternoon.

One wagonette ran between the terminus of the trolley and the camp and was kept busy carrying the guests to and fro. There were others who walked up to the camp. A few went in carriages. The guests registered at the camp and were served with refreshments. They numbered about a hundred in all.

It is the intention of the City Union to send detachments of six babies from Plainfield to the camp three days a week. Miss Setzer, the city nurse, will look up all sick babies reported and will take charge of them. The parties will usually number from four to six. Each baby taken to the camp will be accompanied by some grown person to look specially after its wants while at the camp. A comfortable vehicle will be furnished to convey the babies to the cottage. The food for the babies' lunch will be furnished when necessary. Miss Setzer, the nurse, is a very efficient young woman. She was a government nurse during the Spanish war and was on duty at Camp Alger, Huntsville, Alabama at Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, L. I.

DEATH OF H. B. WELLS.

Succumbed to an Illness That Extended Over a Period of Three Years.

After a long illness, originating in a severe attack of pneumonia, and developing into serious lung trouble, lasting through a period of three years, Henry Bartlett Wells, of Washington avenue, corner of Rockview avenue, died Wednesday a. m., at his home.

Mr. Wells was one the best-known and highly-respected citizens of the borough, where he had resided for many years. He was a charter member of the Borough Board of Education, having served with conspicuous ability on that Board.

He was one of the organizers of the Unitarian church and always prominent in its affairs.

He was about fifty years of age and leaves a widow and five children—two sons and three daughters.

Mr. Wells was engaged in the dry goods business in New York, representing a large eastern woolen goods concern.

The funeral and interment were in Mount Auburn, Mass. He was born and brought up in Boston, living there till he went to New York.

METUCHEN'S CHOIR HAS ITS VIEWS.

Thinks Persons Who Sing in Choirs Should Not Seek Divorces.

New Brunswick, July 19.—Something interesting is confidently expected by the members of the vested choir, and in fact the whole congregation of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal church of Metuchen if Editor St. George Kempson appears in the vestry room some Sunday morning, as it was recently exposed he will, prepared to take his place in the old choir.

The expectation that Mr. Kempson, who went to Dakota some months ago for the purpose of acquiring a residence there and obtaining a divorce, will again lend his voice to the surpliced singers of St. Luke's has set the whole village agog. Yesterday it was gossiped about the village and got into some of the newspapers that Mr. Kempson had appeared in the vestry room and that the rest of the choir thereupon held an indignation meeting and compelled Rector H. Fenton to wait while they talked it over, but there was no truth whatever in this.

As for Mr. Kempson, he has returned to his home and resumed his place in the bosom of his interesting family of ten, and believes that he is quite as respectable and altogether as worthy a choir singer as he was before he went to Dakota. He has not said positively that he will sing again in the choir. He did say to somebody that he rather missed being in the choir loft on Sundays, and in Metuchen these remarks speedily grow into the story of the three crows, into an emphatic declaration of intentions, and it was still growing when a reporter visited Metuchen.

Rector Fenton said that he had no heard of any indignation meeting among the singers, and Mrs. Fenton added that there certainly had not seen any trouble as yet. The rector's wife said, however, that some of the choir had told her that they would not sing if Mr. Kempson returned, and she was satisfied in her own mind that her husband would have to worry along without choir if Mr. Kempson did return. Rev. Mr. Fenton smiled and said he thought it highly improbable that Mr. Kempson would care to sing again and furthermore, he was not borrowing trouble this warm weather.

A DISASTROUS COLLISION.

David Angerbauer Came in Contact with W. O. Worth's Rig.

David Angerbauer has a broken bicycle. The damages are the result of a collision Tuesday morning on East Second street near fire department headquarters. He was riding on that thoroughfare toward Park avenue when he met the carriage of W. O. Worth, of Rockview avenue. Angerbauer was on the right side of the road, so was Mr. Worth's carriage. Worth's coachman attempted to pass a vehicle in front of him and turned directly in the path of the approaching wheelman. Angerbauer struck between the shafts and the wheel. His wheel was wrecked and his arm and leg injured.

The South Orange Village Board of Trustees have decided to take possession of unclaimed property opposite the Mountain Station of the Lackawanna Railroad and to convert it into a little park.

Cortlandt Lenkrom, a Hackensack liveryman, created a sensation yesterday when he skimmed along Main street in a horseless carriage or automobile. It is a gasoline machine and the continual buzzing seemed to rack the nerves of the untutored Hackensack animals.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it because when prepared it has the finest coffee but it contains none of its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15c. and 25c.

MAKING CANDIED CITRON.

It Goes Through a Complicated Process Before Ready for Use.

The making of what we call citron is a complicated process.

The fruit from which the finished product is made is very like a large lemon eight or 10 pounds in weight. It grows in groves in Corsica and Calabria upon trees about 6 feet in height.

The first process is to cut the fruit in halves and take out the cores, which are discarded. The peel is then sealed in barrels of salt water for two or three weeks. It is then withdrawn and soaked for 21 days in a succession of syrups, beginning with eight parts of sugar to 20 of water until the final one contains 20 parts of sugar to one part water.

The fruit thus treated is then cooked in a number of large cauldrons, where it simmers for 24 hours. When cool it is skimmed, cooked again with fresh syrup, cooled and cooked a third time. When it is ready it is packed in wooden boxes, in which it is sold by wholesale.

The peel thus treated will keep for 10 years, although the fresher it is the better. The slightly bitter flavor of preserved citron is caused by the soaking in salt water. Two hundred people are employed in the factory. The women receive 18 cents a day.

New to Hotel Ways.

Someone had told her that you always have to register, but she wasn't used to hotels, that was apparent from the way she lingered behind the oldtime traveling man who stood by the clerk's desk. She wanted to see how it was done. The old fellow had had the same room in the house for nine years. It was always waiting for him. No. 63 on the second floor. He had wired three days before that he was coming, so it was all ready for him. He dipped the pen in the inkwell and with an extra flourish or two, scratched down the name. "James Edward Clifford."

"The same old thing?" he asked of the clerk.

"Yeup," was the answer.

Whereupon Mr. Clifford wrote down opposite his name "63."

Then the bellboy grabbed his traveling case and conducted him to the elevator.

The clerk dipped the pen in the ink and handed it to the demure maiden who had stood behind the old traveler. She glanced at the last name on the page, then turned for a parting look at the form just passing into the elevator car. She took her handkerchief and pocket-book on the desk and wrote, "Faith Merreweather."

Then she shot the clerk a modest little glance and finished out the line by placing "24" after the signature. She looked up blushing.

The clerk smiled, and when he had whispered a room number to the porter and the girl had passed behind the screen he said to himself, "By Jove, she doesn't look it."

Brain Weight of Men and Women.

Sir William Turner shows that among civilized races men have the advantage over women in internal capacity of the cranium and in weight of brain itself. The average brain weight of the European male is from forty-nine ounces to fifty ounces, in the female it is only forty-four ounces to forty-five ounces. The difference in size and weight begins at birth. Nor is the inequality confined to European races. It is observable among savages, though in a lesser degree. Man is not only the larger and stronger animal, but is fitted with a larger and more powerful supply of brains.

Insects Guided by Smell.

Some experiments recently made in Belgium tend to throw doubt on the truth of the assumption that insects are guided to flowers by the brightness of their colors. Brilliantly colored dahlias were covered so as to show only the disks, the butterflies and bees sought these flowers with the same eagerness and frequency as those which were fully exposed. The conclusion reached that the insects were guided by the sense of smell rather than by their sight seems conclusive.

American Women.

A prominent Spaniard, a long resident in Havana and a man of unusual observation and intelligence, attributes the strength of the United States to the strength in mind and body of the American women. He says: "Give a million American women as wives to the young men of Spain and the nation in a quarter of a century will take its place again among the greatest nations of Europe."

JERSEY BANKS SATISFIED

NO ORGANIZED OPPOSITION TO CHECK-TAXING RULE.

The Belief Expressed By Many That the Practice Will Soon Be Adopted in Other Cities—Views of Bankers.

Ever since the New York Clearing House adopted the rule of charging a small percentage upon the collection of out-of-town checks, says the New York Times, there has been more or less said and done about the combination of banking institutions in other cities to do a clearance business on their own account for the purpose of drawing off some of the capital from the metropolis. The Philadelphia banks began the active soliciting of business that had formerly come to New York. They have succeeded, up to the present, in the two or more months in which the New York Clearance House rule has been in operation, in getting about $10,000,000 of collections from out-of-town banks, all of which formerly found its way to New York.

There was also some talk of forming a combination of the banks of New Jersey. It was learned Saturday night, from bankers of Jersey City and Paterson, that there is not much prospect of the success of the reported effort.

The report that the New Jersey banks contemplated this action grew out of a circular sent out by some of the bankers of the State protesting against the action of the New York Clearing House. This movement, it was said, was started by B. W. Spencer, president of the People's Bank and Trust Company, of Passaic. President Spencer and a great many other bankers of north New Jersey to a conference, which considered the action of the New York Clearing House, and sent a protest against charging for the collection of out-of-town checks. The protest had apparently no effect.

It was the expectation of many Jersey bankers that some more positive action would be taken in opposition to the new rule of the Clearing House in New York. The Jersey City banks, who are not, however, deeply interested in the matter, as that city, as well as Hoboken and Bayonne, is treated as part of the New York Clearing House system, received an intimation some weeks ago that such a combination was contemplated. This was the last of the matter, as far as can be learned.

The bankers of New Jersey now seem to be of the opinion that the rule is proving to be a good one. J. D. Carscallen, president, and R. S. Ross, cashier, of the Third National bank, of Jersey City, said yesterday that the policy would prove advantageous to New York, and could not possibly do any permanent injury. President W. Hogenkamp, of the Second National Bank, of Jersey City, declared the policy of the banks of that city, of Philadelphia, Chicago and other cities are seriously considering the adoption of the same rule.

KICKED IN THE DASHBOARD.

Edward Hooley's Spirited Horse Made Things Very Lively.

A spirited horse belonging to Edward Hooley, of North Plainfield, and attached to a light carriage, became frightened when in front of the drug store of Horsley Barker on West Front street about 9 o'clock Monday morning. The animal reared and plunged and began to kick. Before the driver could curb the excited beast it had put its hind feet into the dashboard and completely ruined it. The driver was also slightly injured on the legs by the horse's hoofs. The damaged carriage was taken to French's carriage factory for repairs.

An Attempt to Get Dusky Voters Into a Club.

The colored Republican workers of this city are going to organize again. There have been organizations in the past but they haven't survived, and a new attempt is now to be made to get the dusky voters in unison. Tom Martin, warden of the city jail, is one of the leading movers in this new attempt, and a meeting has been called for Thursday evening at 124 West Second street to which every good Republican voter of color is earnestly requested to be present.

HIS HAND STUCK FAST.

STRANGE EXPERIENCE OF PATRICK GRIFFEN WITH A PIPE.

He Picked it up on the Mountain Yesterday, but Found it Charged With Electricity, Which Gave Him a Shock.

Patrick Griffen, of North avenue, will in the future be very careful how he takes hold of a strange pipe, as his experience Sunday afternoon on the mountains has taught him a lesson. Mr. Griffen, in company with some friends, went to the mountains for a stroll, and while wandering about he discovered a pipe. Being a machinist and interested in all the branches of the trade, he took hold of the pipe. He suddenly received a shock and to his surprise he learned he could not let go.

He screamed and cried in several different languages. The attention of his friends was attracted and they hastened to learn the cause of their comrade's trouble. They caught hold of the other arm and tried to pull him away from the pipe. In doing so they also received a shock and it was all they could do to break away. Finally, the shock knocked Mr. Griffen down and he managed to get his hand off the pipe.

It was afterward learned that the pipe was charged with electricity that was used to pump water to one of the cottages on the mountain. Mr. Griffen is not any worse today as a result of his experience.

COURAGEOUS ACT.

Councilman Hetfield's Family Saved From a Serious Accident.

Councilman Hetfield was out riding Sunday afternoon. He had a two seated carriage and was accompanied by his wife, a lady friend and little daughter. About 7:30 last Sunday he drove up North avenue and stopped in front of a fruit store, leaving the horse in charge of the little girl, who occupied the front seat with him. The child picked up the lines and the horse made a short turn—so short, in fact, that the carriage tipped upon the side wheels and was in immediate danger of upsetting. The ladies screamed and the horse becoming frightened started to run.

The danger which threatened the occupants of the carriage was noticed by a number of men sitting in front of McVey's Hotel. One man, tall and of athletic build, was quick to act. He dashed into the street and in two strides was beside the runaway horse. Grasping the headstall firmly in his hand he threw his entire strength and weight upon it, and with a couple of well directed jerks brought the horse to a standstill. The courageous act was heartily applauded by those who witnessed it. The spectators realized that a serious accident had been averted by the man's nerve and presence of mind. The name of the brave man is John Keefe, of New Haven, Conn., superintendent of the Alluminum Works in this city and a boarder at McVey's Hotel.

WANTS FREE DELIVERY.

Cranford Looking for Up-to-date Postal Service.

Cranford, July 17—Postoffice Inspector Snow, of New York City, who is connected with the Philadelphia department of the United States postoffice of Washington, D. C., recently visited this place and was shown around town by Postmaster John L. Derby.

Inspector Snow expressed himself as being well pleased with Cranford as a suburban town, and said the sidewalks at this place were in better condition than those of the average town of the same size as Cranford.

Inspector Snow examined the postoffice, and when informed of the receipts and other business, and after having looked over the town, said that he would recommend a free delivery system for Cranford.

Such a system, if awarded this place, will take in a territory of one and a half miles, the depot being the central point. Two letter carriers will be required, and 16 mail boxes. Inspector Snow suggested that a good word from Congressman Fowler in behalf of the town might be the means of bringing a free delivery system to this place.

Funeral of an Infant.

The funeral services of the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles VanMiddlesworth, of Somerset street, were held from the house at 5 o'clock last Monday, and was quite largely attended by relatives and intimate friends. The service was conducted by Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel. Interment was in North Plainfield cemetery

$200,000 DROP IN THE TAXABLE VALUATION.

Plainfield Real Estate Gets a Lower Assessment

OTHER ASSESSORS OBJECT.

EXCITING SESSION OF THE COUNTY BOARD MONDAY.

A Resolution Was Offered to Increase Plainfield's Valuation $300,000, But the Local Assessors Explained That Last Year's Assessment Was Too High—Taxable Valuations Are Fixed by Wards.

Elizabeth, July 18—The annual meeting of the assessors of the various cities and towns of Union county was held yesterday, and quite a sensation caused by the drop of $200,000 in the taxable valuations fixed by the Board of Assessors of Plainfield. The announcement of this reduction in the taxable valuations in the Eldorado of the East caused a great storm of protests from other assessors because every other part of the county showed increased valuations and it was considered that Plainfield had grown as much or more than any of the other places and therefore should also have shown an increase.

Assessor Hughes, of Elizabeth, offered a resolution making the valuation of Plainfield $300,000 more than submitted by the local Board of Assessors, and this immediately stirred up a hot fight, in which the Plainfield officials took to explaining matters. They stated that the valuation last year was greater than it should have been, and that the lowering of the amount this year was to get it back to an equitable basis.

It was finally decided to raise Plainfield's valuation back to the amount named last year, which is $8,000,000. The local Board of Assessors had decided to make it $7,810,000.

The county tax rate will be 56 cents on the $100, an increase of five points over last year. The school tax will be 28 cents on the $100, the same as last year.

The valuations by wards are as follows in Plainfield and neighboring towns:

Plainfield: First ward—Real estate, $1,476,325; personal, $350,725; liabilites, $73,230; poll, 705; total, $1,753,800. Second ward—Real estate, $1,994,440; personal, $292,585; liabilities, $63,925; poll, 750; total, $2,223,100. Third ward—Real estate, $1,869,975; personal, $220 300; liabilities, $29,475; poll, 636; total, $2,060,800. Fourth ward—Real estate, $1,511,000; personal, $269,300; liabilities, $27,200; poll, 1,309; total, $1,773,100.

Fanwood—Real estate, $434,000; personal, $192,600; liabilities, $16,600; poll, 267; total, $610,000.

Fanwood Borough—Real estate, $198,000; personal, $34 000; liabilities, $15.000; poll, 47; total, $217,000.

Westfield—Real estate, $1,659,950; personal, $137,650; liabilities, $59,600; poll, 728; total, $1,728,000.

The gains reported in the county were not large. Cranford, Fanwood, Westfield and some of the other town ships reported increased valuations.

Death of an Infant.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles VanMiddlesworth, of Somerset street, have the sympathy of their many friends in the loss of their infant daughter, Lillian Estelle, which occurred Monday afternoon. From birth the child was not well nor strong and her death was not wholly unexpected. The child weighed two pounds at birth and as far as can be learned it held the record for the smallest baby that lived for any length of time.

MURDERER IS CAUGHT.

After Four Years William Darling Is Run Down.

KILLED HARRY DUNHAM.

CRIME WAS COMMITTED IN COLD BLOOD AT NEW MARKET.

Darling was Living in McConnellsburg, Pa., Under the of Ralph E. J. Walton —Married Last June —Fought Fiercely but Overcome — Confessed He was Wanted.

A dispatch from McConnellsburg, Pa., says that William Darling, formerly a resident of this place, who killed Harry Dunham in cold-blood at New Market four years ago this month, was arrested in Thompson township, Fulton county, Monday by Sheriff Sheets and District Attorney Daniels, after a fierce struggle. Darling was living under the name of Ralph E. J. Walton. He is wanted by the authorities of Middlesex county for one of the most deliberate and cold-blooded murders ever committed in New Jersey.

Darling was living with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Darling, of Proepect avenue, this city, four years ago. He was a great devotee to bicycle riding, and one afternoon he dressed up in his bicycle clothes and told his mother that he was going out for a short spin. He rode to New Market, where he visited a hotel. There he met Harry Dunham, who formerly lived in this section and with whom Darling had gone to school in his younger days. Dunham was then residing in Hornellsville, N. Y., but was visiting relatives in New Market. The two men greeted each other pleasantly, shook hands, and one of them proposed renewing acquaintance over a glass of beer in the hotel.

After chatting for a few minutes at the bar, they concluded to play a game of pool. After playing several games they fell to joking with one another. What passed between them seemed of the most trivial nature.

Darling, though, without the slightest provocation, drew a revolver from his hip pocket and fired twice at Dunham. The bullets took effect in the head, and Dunham dropped to the floor and expired in a few minutes. There were few people around the hotel and those that were were frightened out of their wits by the murder. Holding his smoking revolver in his hands Darling backed out of the hotel and jumped on his bicycle, standing at the door, and rode off in the direction of South Plainfield. No one attempted to follow him until he had had quarter of an hour the start. Then a posse of men gave chase in the direction he had been seen to speed away on his bicycle. But it was a fruitless chase. No one in this section has seen him since that day, and up till he was arrested yesterday he had succeeded in eluding the Middlesex county authorities.

During all these four years, however, the authorities have been prosecuting a quiet search for the murderer. Recently they secured traces of a man they supposed to be him in Pennsylvania. Yesterday they received assurances that the "Ralph E. J. Walton" was none other than William Darling. He had been making his home in Fulton county for over three years. Last June he was married to a Miss Gordon and was apparently living perfectly respectable and happy. When captured he threatened to kill himself, and afterwards confessed that he was the man wanted. Prosecutor Voorhees will make application for his extradition immediately, as he was indicted for murder in Middlesex county soon after he committed the crime.

Darling always had the reputation of being wild when he lived in Plainfield. He was concerned in numerous escapades of an unsavory kind. He is an expert telegraph operator and has spent much time in the western States.

Darling was married to a Miss Mundy in this city several years ago, but deserted her. He was never divorced and is therefore guilty of not only murder but bigamy.

GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, ruins the digestion, affects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. BOARD OF TRADE HAS TAKEN A HAND.

In the Fight Against Trolley Roads' Imposition.

RAILROAD OFFICIALS TALK.

PLAINFIELD STREET RAILROAD IS PLACED IN A RIDICULOUS LIGHT.

Representative of the Brunswick Traction Company Says His Road Would Like to Come Into Plainfield—Is Willing to Do Anything to Give Satisfactory Service to Citizens of This City and Dunellen.

A ray of sunshine is appearing in the trolley clouds. It begins to look as though the much abused public may have their grievances with the Plainfield Street Railway Company and the Brunswick Traction Company adjusted satisfactorily in the near future.

The efforts that are being made by the citizens of Dunellen and this city to compel the Brunswick Traction Company to carry its passengers at one rate of fare from this city to Bound Brook, instead of leaving them at the Plainfield boundry line, it is believed are so shaping themselves as to bring about the desired results.

When the citizens of Dunellen called a mass-meeting last week to protest against the method in vogue by the Brunswick Traction Company in exacting an extra fare of the passengers returning from Plainfield, they took the initiative that at once interested the citizens of Plainfield, who were quick to realize that their interests were mutual in respect to the evil that existed.

With this end in view the Board of Trade took up the question and gave the citizens of Dunellen to understand that they were aware of the injustice that was being done them. They also felt that by the existing state of affairs the business interests of Plainfield were effected.

Therefore, when the Board granted permission for the committee—Messrs. Wingee, Fredericks and Snyder—appointed by the citizens of Dunellen to meet with them at last Monday's regular meeting they took a step in the right direction. The above committee was present when President Lounsbury called the meeting to order, as was also Dr. J. T. Fritts, vice-president of the Plainfield Street Railway Company. Supt. Adelman and Mr. Radell, the secretary and one of the directors of the Brunswick Traction Company. There were also present a large number of the members of the Board of Trade. The meeting was the most interesting of any held by the Board in some months There was also a quantity of talk and some pretty strong language used, especially by the representatives from Dunellen.

Chas. W. Runyon was one of the first speakers after the president had stated the principal object of the meeting. He said that it was useless to have any argument as to what agreement the two trolley companies had between them. What the people of Plainfield wanted was to bring the citizens from Dunellen as cheaply as possible—this city wanted their trade. Mr. Runyon said he would like to hear from the representative of the Traction Company.

Mr. Radell said his company was willing to do what was fair in the matter. The Brunswick Traction Company was now carrying the Plainfield Street Railway Company's passengers one way but did not propose to carry them both ways for nothing. His company was willing to give the Plainfield Street Railway Company one cent a passenger for each passenger carried on a transfer if they would give his company the same amount. All efforts he said, to make satisfactory arrangements with the Plainfield Company had been futile. They were living up to their franchise but were not willing to do all the carrying for nothing.

Dr. Fritts claimed that Dunellen had no one to blame but her own citizens and not the Plainfield Street Railway Company. His company had made an application to go through the streets of Dunellen, but owing to certain objections and restrictions made by the citizens of the borough had to abandon their efforts. "Why," said he, "we were even ordered to remove the ties and rails from the streets, because we wouldn't macadamize their streets. The Brunswick Traction Company then came on and secured a franchise giving Dunellen all she asked for—macadamized streets, etc. The citizens of Dunellen, through their Common Council, had granted the Brunswick Traction Company a franchise with the understanding that they should carry passengers to the Plainfield line from Bound Brook for 5 cents, which they are doing. They did not say anything about bringing them back."

The doctor said, rather ironically, "that he did not think the Plainfield Street Railway Company or Mr. Radell should now be blamed for something the citizens of Dunellen didn't ask for."

'TWAS ALL A HOAX.

Story About Pugilist Jeffries Caused Much Excitement Around City Hotel.

Jim Jeffries, the champion pugilist, was reported to have been in Plainfield Monday. He was said to be stopping at the City Hotel. The story of the noted pugilist's arrival spread as rapidly as a prairie fire. The City Hotel was the objective point of many of the sporting fraternity, the colored element being in the majority. But there was nothing in the rumor. It was purely a hoax. The story eminated in the fertile mind of a well known joker who had noticed a tall man of athletic build, dressed in dark clothing who suggested the prize fighter's physique.

But that was all. In a spirit of fun the joker had said to a friend, "That's Jeffries, the man who licked Bob Fitzsimmons." Then the news spread.

The victim of the hoax, a well known traveling salesman for a coffee house, was unconscious of the excitement his presence had caused.

Later, when he learned that he had been taken for a prize fighter he was madder than a wet hen. Clerk Rogers, with commendable tact, finally after much persuasion succeeded in convincing his guest that it was all a joke.

The traveling man in question does not in the least resemble Mr. Jeffries save in size. Neither is he possessed of any pugnacious proclivities.

CHAS E. FABER WINS AT PARK GOLF CLUB

Made Best Score of Saturday Afternoon.

FOR M'CUTCHEN TROPHY.

MANY GOLFERS OUT ON THE PARK CLUB LINKS.

Some of the Usual Competitors for the Cup Were Off Their Usual Form and Did Not Record Their Scores—W. del. Anderson Out Again and Was Second, Playing Without Handicap.

Memories of the week before and the threatening clouds over the mountain kept some of the golfers near the clubhouse of the Park Golf Club Saturday afternoon. There was, however, a very satisfactory turnout of members on the course, and a number contested for the McCutchen and Buttfield cups.

The fair greens and putting greens were in good condition after the recent rains, although not quite as fast as two weeks ago. The high grass at the sides had just been mowed, and those who were unfortunate enough to get out the course had easier work than usual overcoming that hazard.

For the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen Cup, Charles E. Faber carried off the honors of the day. His fat handicap of 30, with careful playing, sent his net score down to 94, which was lowest for the day. W. de L. Anderson, who is considered the best player in the club, was out on the course for the first Saturday afternoon for several weeks. He was in excellent form. His first was completed in 52. Then he showed marked improvement and finished the last nine holes in 46, making a total of 98. Although Anderson is scratch, Faber's 94 was the only net score before him.

G. W. Faber played a steady game and finished third for the McCutchen Cup. He held his score down to the Bogey score on the opening of his first round, but was weak in putting as the round advanced and failed to go better than 52. His second round showed his weakness in putting, although his field shots with the brassie were remarkable.

The Townsend brothers, William and Morgan, went round together but they were not up to their usual form and did not finish when their scores began to get unpleasantly high. J.T. Scott and Dr. Endicott also played around, but did not take part in the contest for the trophy. Gifford W. Cooley, who was paired with Anderson, did not play in his usual good form. W. J. B. Thiers competed and showed fine form, particularly on his drives, but his shots were rather weak.

A veteran trio, composed of George T. Rogers, J. H. Howell and Samuel Townsend, played together and had a rather exciting time of it. Mr. Howell was, however, the only one of the three to record his score in the cup contest.

The scores for the McCutchen cup handed in were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Chas. E. Faber.....	125	30	94
W. de L. Anderson.....	98	0	98
G. W. Faber.....	103	3	100
J. H. Howell.....	120	18	102
G. W. Cooley.....	113	9	104
W. J. B. Thiers.....	126	12	114

The usual Saturday afternoon tea was held at the clubhouse during the afternoon and proved as pleasing a feature of the club life as ever. Mrs. J. H. Howell and Mrs. George D. Hallock presided at the tea table. They were assisted by Miss Saidee May Howell.

There were two young women of the club who played during the day for the Buttfield Cup. Miss Sadiee Mae Howell completed her round in the morning in 79, which, with a handicap of 4, gave her a net score of 66. In the afternoon, Miss Daisy Elsberg played nine holes. In the first two, she holed out in ten strokes each. Her play improved as she advanced and she kept her gross score down to 83. Her handicap of 18 reduced her net score to 65, which was low score for the day in that competion.

Announcement of a Marriage.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Margaret Ball, daughter of William Ball, of 515 West Front street, and Albert T. Morgan, of Florida, which took place last Thursday evening at the home of Rev. W. C Snodgrass, who performed the ceremony at the parsonage. Mrs. Morgan and her father were residents of Plainfield many years ago, but for twenty years resided in Florida, recently moving back to this city. The groom is a resident of Florida, and came to this city very recently to be married.

Quick Recovery.

George A. Moncton, who was tricken with paralysis on the 5th of July, is so much improved as to be able to have the use of his limbs. He expects to visit his mother in Newark in a few days. Mr. Monoton was wounded twice in the right side at the battle of San Juan, and it is this side that was paralyzed. His physician was Dr. Zeglio, and it was through the doctor's skill that the unfortunate man has recovered so nicely.

WAKE ISLAND AWAKENED.

Old Glory Hoisted Over a Little Piece of Territory in Mid-Pacific.

The conditions under which Wake Island, midway between Honolulu and the Phillippines, was taken possession of in the name of the United States by the commander of the Bennington on her voyage across the Pacific are given in a report to the Navy Department from Commander Taussig.

The officer says he approached the island with the navigator at the mast-*head, steaming slowly along the south*ern and eastern sides to discover signs of habitation, and looking in vain for an anchorage. He did not circumnavigate the island, but seeing that the sand reefs were dry, passed not only by a wall of coral but also by a sand-pit, he returned to the lee of the island. A landing was made and a flagpole was raised. Besides some pieces of wreckage, no signs of human occupation were visable. On the eastern side of the island, imbedded in the sand, the anchor was found and what appeared to be the wreck of a lower mast was higher up the beach.

"When the flag staff was in place the salute was fired, 21 guns, and the flag was hoisted to the masthead with battens, and a brass plate with the following inscription was screwed to the base of the staff:

"United States of America. William McKinley, President; John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy; Commander Edward D. Taussig, U. S. N., Commanding the U. S. S. Bennington, this 17th day of January, 1899, took possession of the Atoll known as Wake Island for the United States of America."

Commander Taussig describes the island thus: It was more heavily wooded than I had been led to expect. Patches of grass were growing on the lagoon side of the western islet, and the shrubbery afforded nesting places for sheets were crowding around our boats and around the ships.

"Had I been able to find an anchorage, I would have remained in this locality two or three days to recconoitre more thoroughly the island and to take astronomical and magnetic observations, but, having carried out the orders of the department, I took my departure for Guam."

Puerto Rico's Tobacco.

Home-cured, molasses-soaked plug tobacco, in ropes a hundred feet long, is one of the primitive wonders of the island. On any market day one may find the tobacco man with his little table piled up with bad cigars black as your hat, so green that you may wring water from them, and so cheap that a silver dollar will buy out his stock in trade; but the thing which catches the eye is the cylinders, eighteen inches high by six in breadth, hung where you would sweep, from bights of hawsers soaked in tar, but in reality chewing tobacco. Try it once and quit. A tobacco-chewing Jackey from Arecibo had a bad time before Ponce, volunteered the information: "Yes, Suh, that's the moat pow'ful stuff I ever asked for my wisdom teeth to. Suh, Suh, that's 'right.' I agreed with him.

Smoking is almost universal in Puerto Rico, the cigar and the cigarette being alternated by most natives without any apparent preference. The better classes of the women seem never to use tobacco in any form, and to one accustomed to see the dainty fingers of Mexican senoritas hold lighted cigarettes after the black coffee is served the sight is a lacking in the in the familiar ensemble of tropical home life.

The peasant woman dearly loves her black cigar, and in the early morning irresibility is the common one of a huge black aunty rolling down the centre of a street, burdened with head balanced load heavy enough for a horse, placidly smoking an inky cigar of able proportions, whose clouds of smoke en shroud her head and waft into her con fended half dowsed in the gutter. She has only half enough to eat, but is rich in the soothing of nectar nico tine.—Harper's Weekly.

Sign Umbrellas.

The sign umbrellas seen in front of stores when rain waits, are not, as are commonly of cloth, though made in a very considerable variety of colors and combinations of colors, and sometimes of striped. The umbrellas there are used for the same purpose balloon shaped contrivances of cloth. In front of retail establishments where umbrellas are but an item of stock, as, for instance, men's furnishing goods stores, the umbrella sign goes out only in rainy or threatening weather, to call attention to the fact that there umbrellas are sold; the sign in this case is like the sign of rubber shoes set out in like circumstances in front of a shoe store. Such signs for umbrellas are commonly supplied by wholesale dealers to their customers. The wholesale dealer is likely to keep sign umbrellas on hand over and above umbrella emblems dying all the time, as do also the establishments selling at retail umbrellas exclusively, of which there are a number in London. Each an establishment, however, the sign permanently displayed may be of rather the elaborate and costly character than those more commonly used, being perhaps not a folding umbrella, but one made of metal, with the inside painted and the top gilded—a gold umbrella.

10 MAKE AVENUE WIDE.

PROPERTY OWNERS WILLING TO DO THEIR SHARE.

City Will be Asked to Aid in the Project For a Fine Road to Oak Tree by the Way of Woodland Avenue.

A great effort is being made to get the Council interested in making improvements in Woodland avenue. A grand opportunity is afforded to make this one of the finest thoroughfares in this vicinity. The idea is to have the avenue macadamized and widened to eighty feet from LaGrande avenue to Oak Tree, thus making a fine speedway. This would give a wide avenue from the Central Railroad to the Lehigh Valley Railroad, making both roads accessible. Charles Hyde, one of the large property owners along the avenue, is much pleased with the improvement and offers to give the necessary land in front of his property to make it possible. A. P. Fisk will do likewise.

No doubt at an early date the attention of the Council will be called to the matter and efforts will be made to have that body act regarding it. The benefit to be derived from such an improvement cannot be too highly estimated and it would appear to be well worth the attention of the Council. There is a building boom on at Netherwood and a large number of houses are being erected in that locality. This improvement would tend to invite the attention of other wealthy people and thus a valuable section of the city would be built up.

HELD VICTIM'S HEAD UNDER WATER.

Novel Way in Which Tramps Robbed a Traveler.

Westfield, July 17—A man who gave his name as William Hargan complained Saturday night to the Westfield police that he had been robbed by a couple of tramps.

Hargan said that he was walking from Easton to Newark, looking for work as a moulder, and that he stopped to cook his supper beside the brook, near Garwood, at a place called the "Tramps' Kitchen." Two other men were there, and they became very friendly. Finally one of the men pushed him over into the brook and sat on his head, holding it under water, while the other man went through his pockets and took $3 in money and a silver watch.

When Hargan was released he was nearly unconscious, and when he fully recovered the men had gone. Search was made at all the popular tramp quarters, but the men could not be found.

FRANCHISE FOR TROLLEY ROAD.

Line Between Somerville and South Amboy Will Soon Be Complete.

New Brunswick, July 17—The Town Committee of Sayreville Friday night passed on final reading the ordinance granting the New Brunswick Traction Company a franchise to lay a road from its present terminus, at the South River limit of the township, through the township in the direction of South Amboy. The committee has had the franchise under consideration for some weeks. The company will begin work at once.

An application for rights of way through South Amboy has been pending for some time. Favorable action upon this franchise is confidently expected and the company will then have a complete line from Somerville to South Amboy, via Bound Brook, New Brunswick and South River.

NEED OF THE FOUNTAIN.

It is Greatly Missed By the Thirsty Public on Hot Days.

If there ever was a time when the Chistian Endeavor drinking fountain at the corner of Front and Somerset streets was in need, it is now. The fountain was taken down some time ago by Street Commissioner Gavett in order to connect the run-off pipe with the storm sewer, but evidently its reestablishment has been forgotten. The fountain is a great convenience to the thirsty public these warm days, and it ought to be put in working order at the earliest possible moment.

Property to Be Improved.

There are good prospects that the property at the corner of Lincoln place and Duer street, owned now by Mrs. A. C. Baldwin, of Park avenue, will soon be greatly improved, and a first-class grocery and meat market will be opened. Arrangements are now being perfected to close the deal, and a proposition has been made to the owner for the property.

Fractured His Arm.

William Mulford Darling, aged five years, is confined to his home on West Fifth street, the result of a fractured arm. The little fellow was playing on top of the fence at his home when he slipped and fell. The arm was fractured at the elbow. Dr. Tomlinson set the broken member which now seems to be knitting satisfactorily.

Band Leader Resigns.

For the second time in the history of the Queen City Band, Benjamin LaVere, the leader and organizer, has resigned. What will become of the band is not known, but it is about time Plainfield supported a first-class band that would give creditable concerts during the summer.

MILK CARRIED THE DIPHTHERIA BACILLI.

Board of Health Acted Promptly and Effectively.

AN ABSOLUTE QUARANTINE.

THE DISEASE PREVALENT IN THE MILK DEALER'S FAMILY.

Malady Carried Into Several Families in This City, But Not in a Malignant Form—Aid of the state Board of Health Was Secured By City Officials—There is No Danger Now.

Last week it was reported to the local Board of Health that there were several cases of diphtheria in this city. The Board immediately commenced an investigation of the cases and found that in each family where the disease prevailed the supply of milk was obtained from the same man.

The milkman in question resides out of the city, but it was soon learned that there was a case of diphtheria in the milkman's family and that undoubtedly the milk that he was serving had been filled with the contagious bacilli of the disease.

The Board served a notice on the milkman prohibiting serving milk within the city limits for the time being, and at the same time notified the State Board of Health. An inspector was sent from the latter Board and together with the local officials they went to work on the case in a vigorous manner.

It was concluded that undoubtedly the disease had been spread to the families in this city by the milk. The dairy in question was immediately put under an absolute quarantine by the State Inspector, who had the authority to do this.

This effective work of the health officials nipped the epidemic in the bud, and now it is stated that there is no probability of anything serious coming from the diphtheria; in fact, when they first reported they were not in a malignant form and were easily controlled.

The prompt and good work of the Board of Health is the cause of much congratulation among city officials today who were aware of the quiet investigation that had been in progress.

SERMON TO BUSINESSMEN

DR. LEWIS' HELPFUL DISCOURSE IN TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

Without the Bible's Teaching the Social and Business World Would Suffer Immeasurably—Makes Confidence.

Despite the very warm weather of last Sunday a good-sized congregation assembled at Trinity Reformed church and listened to a powerful sermon delivered by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city. His remarks were appropriate to the business men especially, and his text, "The Law of the Lord is Perfect," was made the basis for a very interesting discourse.

He held that many thought that Christianity was good enough for women and children, but not for men. He then went on to prove what the business and social world owes to the law of God. He quoted six commandments and gave brief expositions of each one, and proved that without the law of God the world would be in darkness.

The social and business world, he said, would suffer immeasurably and everybody would lose confidence in one another. He spoke especially of the amount of faith that enters daily into all business transactions, and how people would take one another's word in various deals. "Honor Thy Father and Mother," "Thou Shalt Not Kill," "Thou Shalt Not Commit Adultery," "Thou Shalt Not Steal," "Thou Shalt Not Bear False Witness Against Thy Neighbor," and "Thou Shalt Not Covet," were the six commandments dwelt upon, and strong lessons were drawn from each. The congregation was deeply impressed with the sermon and thoroughly enjoyed the helpful words uttered.

MIKE DONKO UP AGAIN.

Only Out of Jail a Few Days—Now Will Go Down Again.

Patrolman Myers found Michael Donke at the corner of East Fourth and Sycamore streets, Saturday evening, in an intoxicated condition. Donko has only been out of jail for a little while. He was in an unpleasant mood and defied the law, the city and its representative. So Myers felt constrained to lock him up.

Monday a. m., City Judge Runyon disposed of Donko in a brief space of time. He had his choice between a fine of $20 or sixty days in Jail. Circumstances will probably compel him to select the latter.

Real Estate Active

The demand for real estate at Netherwood can be determined by the fact that one resident in that locality who, a short time ago, owned a number of lots, has only one piece of the property left.

AT THE SUMMER RESORTS

SOCIETY FINDS DIVERSION IN MUSICALES AND DANCES.

Pleasureable Events at Mountain Park Inn and the Hotel Hunterston Saturday Night — Cake-Walk a Feature.

While such of Plainfield society that is still at home finds little to occupy itself beside golf and other outdoor pleasures, the social life at the two local summer hotels, the Mountain Park Inn and the Hotel Hunterston, is at its height. Saturday evening saw charming affairs at both hostelries.

A concert and cake-walk was held at the Mountain Park Inn and was attended, besides the guests, by a number of young people from this city and borough. Miss Emma R. Steiner, the famous women orchestral director and composer, was present and gave a number of delightful selections on the piano. She is considered one of the most talented women in the musical world and Plainfield was unusually fortunate in being privileged to listen to her selections.

After the concert the young people spent most of the evening in dancing, while the cake-walk proved a pleasing means of entertainment.

Two weeks from last Saturday night a formal hop will be held at the Inn.

The Saturday evening dances at the Hotel Hunterston have proved very attractive features so far this season, and the one held in the spacious hotel parlor, Saturday evening, was no exception. There were nearly 200 present, including the hotel guests and a number of visitors from Plainfield, North Plainfield and Somerville.

The evening passed away very delightfully, Rogers' hotel orchestra playing the popular waltzes and two-steps in very satisfactory fashion. When the young people tired of dancing the broad piazzas, with a cooling breeze from the west, were a favorite resort.

GOLF CLUB AS A WEAPON.

Joseph W. Reinhart's Gardener Assaults Coachman Leary and Cuts His Head.

Edward Coughlin, a gardener employed by Joseph W. Reinhart, of 813 Belvidere avenue, Netherwood, was arrested Saturday charged with assaulting Michael Leary, the coachman. The men got into a dispute Friday afternoon over some trifling matter and finally came to blows. Coughlin finally picked up a golf stick and dealt Leary a severe blow across the forehead, cutting a gash about three inches in length. The injured man had his wound dressed by Dr. Probasco. Saturday morning he went before Justice Mosher and swore out a warrant for his assistant's arrest. Monday morning the accused appeared before the Magistrate and through his attorney, William N. Runyon, waived examination and gave bail in the sum of $200 for his appearance before the Grand Jury, his bondsman being Mr. Reinhart, his employer. Counselor Walter L. Hetfield appeared for the complainant.

DIED SUDDENLY.

Quick End of a Westfield Resident From Heart Failure Yesterday.

Westfield, July 17—Sitting on the front porch of his residence on Elmer street yesterday about 4 o'clock Julius Scheele, one of the foremen at the G. Ohlen Works, threw up his hands and with the words, "What is this?" fell over dead. He had been talking to Jacob Daub, of New York, his brother-in-law, who was visiting him.

Dr. J. B. Harrison was called and pronounced the case that of heart failure. Mr. Scheele came from New York to Westfield about five years ago and had lived during that time on Elmer street where he died. He was 37 years of age and leaves a wife and three children. He was a member of Enterprise Lodge, I. O. O. F., of New York, and carried insurance in the New York Life Insurance Company.

GOOD FISHING OFF JERSEY.

Sea Bass in Great Schools, But Found Nets Make Bluefish Scarce.

Fishing was good every day last week along the Jersey coast. Off Cape May the anglers have had excellent sport with sea bass. It has not been unusual for parties of two or three, with a good guide, to book from fifty to a hundred big sea bass in three or four hours.

Weakfish have also been taken in the outside waters, but bluefish have been scarce, owing it is thought, to the big pound nets along Five and and Seven Mile Beacoes, which swallow up great schools of fish almost every day.

Local and visiting anglers are complaining greatly of these onslaughts on the food fishes by the pound nets, and they fear that outside fishing will sooner or later be almost destroyed if restrictions are not put on the seines.

George Ogden, who recently opened a bicycle repair shop on Westfield avenue, is kept busy attending to the many wants of the riders of the silent steeds in town.

SIGHED FOR GUM.

How the American Soldiers Suffered in Santiago.

"There has been a great deal written about the troubles our army had in Cuba in consequence of the scarcity at times of chewing gum and smoking tobacco," remarked an officer of the regular army, "and every word of it was true, but I have not seen anything about the difficulties the men who used chewing gum had when their supply ran out. It is wonderful how many soldiers chew gum. The popular opinion is that chewing gum is used only by girls and boys and occasionally by a few women folks. I had that opinion myself until after I arrived in Cuba, but soon ascertained that I was seriously mistaken.

"Many tobacco chewers resort to gum as a substitute for tobacco and the habit grows on them so that they look for it, especially after meals, as the tobacco chewer hankers after his weed. The theory is that it aids digestion But whether that is so or not, I was in a position to find out how many there were who use chewing gum, for being in the commissary department such demands came to us, and I assure you they were numerous and pressing.

"I am a tobacco chewer myself, and while I do not smoke much, I find great comfort from an occasional cigar and then hit the pipe also. The absence of tobacco from a man who is accustomed to use it in any form is a great deprivation. But though we ran out now and then, it was only for a few days at the most that we were out of it entirely, on account of the non-arrival of the supply we had ordered.

"We had not ordered any chewing gum, but when it was found impossible to furnish it, numerous as were the applications for it. The kind of men who asked for chewing gum were, as a rule, the most reliable of the volunteers. The regulars had not been able to advance beyond tobacco and seldom asked for it, even when tobacco was rather scarce.

"The chewing gum man makes no defense for the habit. He says he acknowledges he has the habit and has no desire to break it off; that he thinks it more of a benefit than a disadvantage and that if a man must chew something it is better that he should chew gum than tobacco. He was many years before the government regarded tobacco as a necessary in connection with the ration for the soldier or sailor, and what quantities were made to issue it to those who desire it it is issued at the expense of the man who receives it, who is required to pay cash on delivery, though an account is kept with officers. The government charges the recipient the cost of it, which includes in many instances the cost of its transportation; so that, while Uncle Sam in a measure furnishes tobacco, it is done at the expense of the man who uses it.

"If a chewing gum attachment is made to the ration it will be used in the same way, the chewing gum man paying the bill. The commissary department is conducted as an accommodation only, and does not bond itself to have a supply on hand under all circumstances, though practically it is always in stock."

Spain's Young Farragut.

When, in February last, the now wrecked and stranded but then powerful Spanish cruiser Viscaya paid a visit to New York, the naval authorities took almost unheard of precautions to insure her safety. The Maine, it will be remembered, had been blown up only a few days before her arrival. The commander of the Viscaya, Capt. Eulate, protested against these precautions, declaring in the strongest terms that he was willing to trust his ship unguarded in the harbor. To the reporters who visited him on the ship he recalled the many years of peace and social intercourse that existed between the two nations, and then, struck by inspiration, he ordered to the quarter-deck a young midshipman, and, pointing to him, asked the reporters how two nations could ever be other than friends when each had raised a Farragut. One was already immortalized, he said, and he had yet to show by deeds of valor that the real Farragut blood was in the veins of his son.

Capt. Eulate, becoming enthusiastic as the conversation progressed, the situation developed, went on to explain that his young midshipman was Sanchez Farragut, who was born in Minorca, off the coast of Spain, whence the great American Admiral's progenitors had come. He had no doubt that this young man was of the real Farragut stock. The reporters were struck by the excitement of the war that followed Mr. Midshipman Farragut was all but forgotten. Following the destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet, and the rupture of so many prisoners, the few who remembered the Farragut incident looked in vain for a line about the fate of young Farragut. Weeks passed and the great naval battle bade fair to pass into history without the mystery being solved, until after it arrived in Cuba, but soon ascertained that I was seriously mistaken.

"Many tobacco chewers resort to gum as a substitute for tobacco and the habit grows on them so that they look for it, especially after meals, as the tobacco chewer hankers after his weed The theory is that it aids digestion But whether that is so or not, I was in a position to find out how many there were who use chewing gum, for being in the commissary department such demands came to us, and I assure you they were numerous and pressing

The government charges the recipient the cost of it, which includes in many instances the cost of its transportation; so that, while Uncle Sam in a measure furnishes tobacco, it is done at the expense of the man who uses it.

"If a chewing gum attachment is made to the ration it will be used in the same way, the chewing gum man paying the bill. The commissary department is conducted as an accommodation only, and does not bond itself to have a supply on hand under all circumstances, though practically it is always in stock."

Spain's Young Farragut.

When, in February last, the now wrecked and stranded but then powerful Spanish cruiser Viscaya paid a visit to New York, the naval authorities took almost unheard of precautions to insure her safety. The Maine, it will be remembered, had been blown up only a few days before her arrival. The commander of the Viscaya, Capt. Eulate, protested against these precautions, declaring in the strongest terms that he was willing to trust his ship unguarded in the harbor. To the reporters who visited him on the ship he recalled the many years of peace and social intercourse that existed between the two nations, and then, struck by inspiration, he ordered to the quarter-deck a young midshipman, and, pointing to him, asked the reporters how two nations could ever be other than friends when each had raised a Farragut. One was already immortalized, he said, and he had yet to show by deeds of valor that the real Farragut blood was in the veins of his son.

Capt. Eulate, becoming enthusiastic as the conversation progressed, the situation developed, went on to explain that his young midshipman was Sanchez Farragut, who was born in Minorca, off the coast of Spain, whence the great American Admiral's progenitors had come. He had no doubt that this young man was of the real Farragut stock. The reporters were struck by the excitement of the war that followed Mr. Midshipman Farragut was all but forgotten. Following the destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet, and the rupture of so many prisoners, the few who remembered the Farragut incident looked in vain for a line about the fate of young Farragut. Weeks passed and the great naval battle bade fair to pass into history without the mystery being solved, until after it arrived in Cuba, but soon ascertained that I was seriously mistaken.

"Many tobacco chewers resort to gum as a substitute for tobacco and the habit grows on them so that they look for it, especially after meals, as the tobacco chewer hankers after his weed The theory is that it aids digestion But whether that is so or not, I was in a position to find out how many there were who use chewing gum, for being in the commissary department such demands came to us, and I assure you they were numerous and pressing

"I am a tobacco chewer myself, and while I do not smoke much, I find great comfort from an occasional cigar and then hit the pipe also. The absence of tobacco from a man who is accustomed to use it in any form is a great deprivation. But though we ran out now and then, it was only for a few days at the most that we were out of it entirely, on account of the non-arrival of the supply we had ordered.

"We had not ordered any chewing gum, but when it was found impossible to furnish it, numerous as were the applications for it. The kind of men who asked for chewing gum were, as a rule, the most reliable of the volunteers. The regulars had not been able to advance beyond tobacco and seldom asked for it, even when tobacco was rather scarce.

"The chewing gum man makes no defense for the habit. He says he acknowledges he has the habit and has no desire to break it off; that he thinks it more of a benefit than a disadvantage and that if a man must chew something it is better that he should chew gum than tobacco. He was many years before the government regarded tobacco as a necessary in connection with the ration for the soldier or sailor, and what quantities were made to issue it to those who desire it it is issued at the expense of the man who receives it, who is required to pay cash on delivery, though an account is kept with officers. The government charges the recipient the cost of it, which includes in many instances the cost of its transportation; so that, while Uncle Sam in a measure furnishes tobacco, it is done at the expense of the man who uses it.

"If a chewing gum attachment is made to the ration it will be used in the same way, the chewing gum man paying the bill. The commissary department is conducted as an accommodation only, and does not bond itself to have a supply on hand under all circumstances, though practically it is always in stock."

PISCATAWAY DEFIES STANDARD OIL CO.

Refuses to Grant Franchise Without Compensation.

FOR CONNECTING PIPELINE.

STANDARD WILL NOT PAY THE $100 ASKED FOR.

Wanted to Lay a Line Connecting the Trunk Pipe Lines Running From the Oil Regions to the Seaboard. They are Only a Mile Apart Near New Market—Matter Still in Abeyance.

Piscataway township has been trying to accomplish a pretty big feat this summer. It has tried to bust up against the Standard Oil Company and has, so far, been successful. The trouble was over a pipe line running through the township.

There are two pipe lines running through Piscataway township now. One belongs to the National Transit Company, which is owned by the Standard, and the other by the Tide Water Pipe Company. They run from the oil district in Pennsylvania to the seaboard and through them many thousands of gallons of crude petroleum are pumped daily.

Last April a representative of the National Transit Company came to the township committee of Piscataway and asked for a franchise granting the privilege of laying another pipe line connecting the two at a point near New Market. This connecting link was to be a little over a mile long and crossed four roads. These crossings necessitated a franchise. The rest of the line ran over a private right of way.

The franchise was introduced but that was as far as it ever got. The committeemen said to the company that it must pay the sum of of $100 for the necessary expenses made by the passing of the franchisee and a little over. The Standard Oil representative wanted the franchise without cost, however, and refused to turn over the amount demanded. The proposed ordinance was allowed to lie on the table and there it remains to this day, and the connecting link is not yet built.

A prominent official of the township said the other day that the ordinance would never be passed until the Standard paid that $100. He thought, however, that the company would likely go ahead some night and put down the line without the permission and before an injunction could be served.

PUBLIC DRINKING FOUNTAIN.

The Fund to Build it is Not Growing Very Fast.

The public drinking fountain fund *is not increasing as rapidly as its pro*moters would wish. The people of Elizabeth are making rapid progress with their fund, which was started about the same time. Generous and philanthropic citizens are sending checks for sums as high as $25 to the treasurer of the fund. Are there not as many public-spirited people in Plainfield as Elizabeth?

Now that the Fourth of July is over it is hoped that the citizens will make the erection of this much-needed fountain the object of their contributions, and send as large sums as possible at once to Mrs. D. S. Miller, 448 Orchard lace.

SHANLEY STILL PRESIDENT.

Consolidated Traction Company Holds Annual Meeting.

The stockholders of the Consolidated Traction Company have elected the following directors: B. M. Shanley, Sr., B. M. Shanley, Jr., C. A. Grissom, R. C. Jenkinson, Jeremiah O'Rourke, Thomas F. Ryan, E. B. Gaddis, A. H. Paget, John E. McArthur, Henry Lembeck, Albert G. Jennings, L. F. Ward, Dudley Farrand and James J. Corbierre.

At a meeting of the directors the old officers were re-elected. They are: President, B. M. Shanley, Sr.; secretary, T. J. George; treasurer, E. N. Hill.

Pension for Mrs. Wright.

Gen. W. H. Sterling, of this city, has again shown himself to be a friend of the soldier, his widow and children. He has just received word that the widow of the late Benjamin Wright has been granted a pension of $8 per month, dating from October, 1898, which is well deserved and will be appreciated. As usual, Gen. Sterling accepted no fee, to which he is entitled.

Entertained Sewing Circle.

Mrs. Andrew Cox, of Liberty street, entertained the members of the Mizpah Sewing Circle at her home last Friday. There was a good attendance and an evening of sociability was enjoyed by all. During the evening a musical programme was presented after which refreshments were served by the hostess.

There is some talk of arranging a bicycle race between Arthur Chapin, of this place, and Charles Dodd, of Elizabeth. As both are speedy riders a fine race would be assured if it can be arranged.

CHIEFS WERE RAISED UP

INSTALLATION CEREMONIES OF MIANTONOMOH TRIBE.

Ceremony Was Performed by Deputy Great Sachem Westphal and Staff —Followed by a General Good Time.

The chiefs of Miantonomoh Tribe of Red Men were raised up last Friday in right and proper fashion and with all due ceremony by Deputy Great Sachem W. A. Westphal and staff. It was made the occasion for general rejoicing among the braves who turned out in goodly numbers.

The installation ceremonies occupied the first part of the evening. The raising up was done well and to the satisfaction of all. The chiefs installed were: Prophet, George Housman; sachem, Frank Sowden; senior sagamore, Howard Woolston; junior sagamore, Foster M. Johnson; first sannap, Joseph Neuman; second sannap, Charles Fulmer; first warrior, John Cashman; first brave, Charles McGinley; second brave, Charles Shirley; third brave, James Savord; fourth brave, William Smithers; guard of the wigwam, William James; guard of the forest, Frank VanPelt.

Following the raising up, there came an elaborate collation and speeches by the old and new chiefs and the guests.

The committee in charge of the Fourth of July picnic at Mountainside Grove made a partial report, showing the receipts up to the present time as $490, and some tickets still to be heard from. The total disbursements amount to $207.

FLAG FOR CADET CORPS.

HIGH SCHOOL CADETS PRESENTED WITH AMERICAN COLORS.

It Was the Gift of Lieut. T. N. Horn, of the First United States Artillery, a High School Boy Himself.

The Plainfield High School cadets are now the owners of a handsome American flag, the gift of First Lieut. T. N. Horn, of the First U. S. Artillery. It will be remembered that Lieut. Horn reviewed the cadets one evening last winter and was much impressed by the excellent showing that the school cadets made. He remarked at the time that all that was lacking was a flag.

July Fourth, before the parade, the High School cadets marched to the home of Col. Mason W. Tyler, on West Seventh street, and the flag was presented by Col. Tyler in the name of Lieut. Horn. Capt. George F. Edwards, of the cadets, responded with a few words and then the company marched to its position in line. Harold Davis acted as color bearer.

Lieut. Horn was graduated from the High School in 1886, and so is particularly interested in the local school company. Captain Edwards will take charge of the flag until the company assembles in the fall.

WANTS THAT MACHINE.

Surrogate Spencer Would Like to Have Uniform System of Copying.

The Somerville Messenger says that Surrogate Spencer has not given up the idea of the purchase of a book typewriter for his office, by any means, although the Freeholders have tabled his application for such a machine for the time being. Mr. Spencer will again bring the matter up shortly, as he is of the opinion, as a taxpayer, that our country should not be behind others of the State in this particular. There is no doubt that such an instrument would be the means of a great saving of public funds eventually, not only in the number of record books to be purchased, but as to economy of space in the record room, which is fast filling up, and, at the present rate, will soon have to be enlarged, at a small amount of expense. Then, again, the machine would be the means of establishing a uniform system of writing in the office, which cannot be brought about in any other way; and this is a very desirable manner in which to have the county's records kept.

Free Delivery in Somerville.

Postoffice Inspector Benjamin R. Shopp recently visited Somerville for the purpose of completing such arrangements as might be necessary to establish the free delivery system. There are a number of conditions that the residents of the place will have to comply with before they can get free delivery, such as numbering their houses, street signs, well paved sidewalks and streets, etc. The residents are confident that they will secure free delivery at an early date.

MAD RELATIVE PUTS UP A SPITE FENCE.

Trouble Between John G. Bantle and Gustavus Weissner.

FENCE IS NINE FEET HIGH

TWO MEN WERE BEST OF FRIENDS TILL LATELY.

Both Putting up New Buildings on Watchung Avenue, But Bantle Adds the High Fence to His Property Because He Says He Had Been Annoyed —Both Families Seem Contented Now.

John G. Bantle and Gustavus Weissner are relatives by the fact that the latter's brother married the former's wife's sister. They both live on Watchung avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets, and both own the property they occupy. Both families have always been on good terms, but, notwithstanding, Friday Mr. Bantle erected a spite fence on the line of his property from the end of his building almost to the rear of the lot. The fence is about seventy feet long and nine feet high. Just how this fence happened to be erected is a story in itself.

Mr. Meisaner conducts a laundry business and Mr. Bantle is a tailor. Mr. Meisener came to Plainfield three years ago and started in business. Later on E. D. Barrett desired to rent part of his shop on East Fifth street and wanted Mr. Meisner to take it. He did not care to rent there, but told Mr. Barrett that he knew a person in New York who would like to have it. He referred to Mr. Bantle, and it was arranged that he should take the store.

Everything went along smoothly until after Mr. Bantle began living with Mr. Meisaner. The two families had lived together a short time when Mr. Bantle purchased a lot on Watchung avenue and made known his intention of putting up a building. At that time he was paying $15 a month, so he says, and when Mr. Meisaner heard of his prosperity, he decided to charge him $40 a month, saying that he must have money to buy a lot and build. This did not suit Mr. Bantle and he made other arrangements.

In the meantime Mr. Meisaner had purchased a lot adjoining the one purchased by Mr. Bantle, but the latter built first and had his foundation placed two and a half feet inside of the line, at the same time putting a bow window on the same side. When Mr. Meisaner put up his building he did not adhere to the two and a half feet, but built directly on the line, much to the displeasure of his neighbor.

This did not seem to worry either party very much until recently, when Mr. Bantle claims that he has been annoyed by his neighbor to such an extent that he does not care to put up with it any longer.

Things reached a climax Friday when the people employed by Mr. Bantle seemed to be annoyed by something that was done by the next-door neighbors, and Mr. Bantle decided to have no more trouble. He then purchased some lumber but hired two carpenters and had the fence erected. It is so high that Mr. Meisaner nor his family can look over, and as a matter of fact they say they are glad the fence is there, because it will prevent the snow and wind from bothering them next winter.

They say that there are no hard feelings on their part and they do not want to bother their neighbors. On the other hand Mr. Bantle says that he does not want to be bothered with anyone, and he thinks that he has now safely guarded his interests. Both families seem to be contented now and no further trouble is anticipated.

TO BE DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

New Jersey Municipal Officials Going to the Mayors' Convention.

Mayor Silas Dewey Drake, of Lincoln, received a special invitation Friday a. m. from Mayor Jas. McGuire, of Syracuse, asking him and the Councilwomen of Lincoln to attend the annual convention of Mayors and Aldermen of the United States, which will be held in that city in September. Mayor Drake and his fair colleagues in the local legislature of Lincoln have accepted the invitation. Mayor Drake will also arrange a party of New Jersey municipal officials to attend the convention. The Lincoln delegation attended the conventions of the Mayors and Aldermen in Columbus, O., two years ago and in Detroit, Mich., last year, and cut a great figure in the proceedings.

Look Out!

A new swindle is being worked. A woman book agent appears in town and goes from house to house leaving books for examination. The next day a man calls to see if the the books are wanted. A few days later the woman again appears, and on being told that the man has taken the sample books she weeps copiously, says the villain has been collecting her books all over town, pleads poverty and so on, and accepts the proffered compensation.

RUSSIAN SOLDIER'S LOVE GREW COLD.

Discovery of His Wife's Infidelity Broke His Heart.

SAID TO BE A BIGAMIST.

SAILS FOR AMERICA AND LANDS IN PLAINFIELD.

Takes a Second Wife Whom He Marries in New York After a Short Courtship, Though the Divorce Was Granted by a Rabbi in Poland—Wife No. 1 Learns of His Second Marriage—Wants Satisfaction.

There's trouble in store for a citizen of Plainfield. The trouble is all about a woman, who is at present in New York city; at least she landed there a day or two ago from her native town in far off Poland.

The man in question is in business in the west end of the city. He has been a resident for some years and is living happily with a woman he calls his wife. They have two children.

Some years ago this much married man left Russia to seek his fortune in America, leaving behind a wife and three children. Previous to coming to this country he had served in the Russian army. He was absent from home about two years. When he returned the soldier was astonished to find that his family had increased by the addition of two children.

This knowledge of his wife's infidelity so preyed upon him that he sought consolation from the Jewish Rabbi, to whom he related his suspicions. In accordance with the ways of that country and his religion, he secured from the Rabbi a divorce from the woman he had once loved and cherished.

Many of the soldier's former associates often derided him for his domestic troubles and he became so thoroughly disgusted with affairs in his native country, that he decided to leave, which he did about five years ago.

He landed in New York and subsequently came to Plainfield where he located and established himself in business.

Previous to his taking up a residence in this city the heart broken man met and fell in love with a buxon lassie of the Jewish faith. His affections were reciprocated and the couple were married.

The Polander, not being familiar with the customs of the country of his adoption, had no idea that he was violating any law when he took to his bosom another partner to share his joys and sorrows. Nevertheless, he later learned to his consternation that he had committed bigamy.

News that he was married again finally traveled across the big pond and reached the ears of his divorced wife. Friends of the woman in New York, with meddlesome proclivities, made haste to acquaint the woman of what they maintained was her husband's perfidy.

She saw a chance to obtain satisfaction, and the green-eyed monster jealousy was only too glad to help along the trouble.

As soon as possible the divorced wife made arrangements to come to America. As stated above, she reached the coveted shores a few days ago and was met at the steamer by her friends.

In the meantime the unfortunate victim of the Russian army, all unconscious of the storm brewing, had been apprised of his first wife's visit to this country. What was he to do?

A friend advised him to seek legal advice, which he did and that quickly, only to learn that he was a bigamist and liable to arrest at any moment.

However, the soldier—brave as he was supposed to be—did not have the courage to tell his second wife of the troubles that now threaten his pathway. Where all was sunshine and love the unfortunate man could see only thorns and squalls.

To keep from wife No. 2 knowledge of his first marriage is what his friends are now trying to help him do. If he can do this, he feels satisfied that a settlement can be effected with wife No. 1, who is reported to have said that she would be satisfied to leave the man to his second love and agree not to molest him providing she received a certain sum of money—an amount sufficient to provide for her children.

As for her husband, her love long since grew cold and she is said to have centered her affections upon another, who was her companion en route to America.

Interesting developments are expected in a few days if wife No. 1 does not succeed in obtaining a sufficient amount in cash as a solace for her injured feelings.

To Ask for Improvements.

There is a desire on the part of several Councilmen that the North Avenue station should be made more comfortable for patrons of the road living in this city, and it is not unlikely that some steps will be taken in the near future asking the Central Railroad Company to make some improvements.

WHY CLERK HOWARD WANTS RENOMINATION

His Reasons For Thinking He Is Entitled To It.

THE COUNTY CLERKSHIP.

HOWARD'S POSITION IN COMING CAMPAIGN IS CLEARLY OUTLINED.

Says He Fears Most From Assemblyman George Squier, of Elizabeth—There Are Now Three Prominent Candidates in Line Representing Plainfield, Elizabeth and Rahway.

The withdrawal of City Clerk James T. MacMurray from the race for the Republican nomination for County Clerk reduces the number of active candidates for the nomination in Plainfield to one, Sheriff William T. Kirk. Rahway has the present incumbent, Clerk Howard, while the appreciative eye of Assemblyman George Squier, of Elizabeth, is known to be fixed on that $12,000 salary that lasts for five years sure.

The first one of these three principal candidates to come forward and state his ground definitely is Clerk Howard. In conversation at the county seat on Friday he made some statements that, while they were not a formal announcement of his position, served to clearly outline his reasons for believing that he is entitled to the nomination.

In the first place, said Mr. Howard, every county in the State except Hudson, has been renominating their County Clerks for a second term. He thinks Union ought to do the same. Then Mr. Howard was the first Republican to be elected for many years. Since the time of his election the Republicans have been uniformly successful. The people of the county have found that he can conduct the necessary business in a satisfactory manner. Rahway hasn't had any office since he was nominated for the first term and he argues that it is pretty near time that the town was recognized.

Mr. Howard believes that he will be renominated. He thought, however, that his strongest rival was Assemblyman George Squier, of Elizabeth. Sheriff Kirk he did not fear very much. He is in the fight to stay, he says, and will keep it up until he is either nominated or defeated in the race for the position.

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE.

Church Deacons Ate Watermelon After Meeting of the Consistory.

The Consistory of Trinity Reformed church met last Thursday in regular session at the home of Deacon E. E. Anthony, 414 West Front street. In the absence of the pastor, Mr. Anthony was elected president and presided at the meeting. Only routine business was transacted and after a short session adjournment was made and Mrs. Anthony invited all to the dining room to partake of one of Elder Fred E. Smith's ice cold watermellons. Jolly Elder Laire was given the seat of honor at the head of the table and filled the position with dignity and himself with melon, as did everybody present, excepting Deacon Gayle, who was off his oats, and did not dare indulge. All were loud in their praise of the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony and a very pleasant social hour was spent eating the delicious melon and listening to Deacon Adams stories of "What I Saw While I was a Drummer on the Road."

New Manufacturing Concern.

A new manufactory is about to commence operations in Bound Brook, and will be known as the Franco-American Chamois Mfg. Co. The old jelly factory, on East Second street, has been leased through the agency of E. VanSyckel and is now being fitted up with the necessary machinery. Peter Kuntz, of Piscataway, is the president of the new company, which expects to make a success of the business, as there is but a very few manufacturing concerns of the kind in this country.

Realty Changes.

The following real estate transfers have been recorded in the Somerset County Clerk's office during the past week: Selah Schoonmaker, Sheriff, to Jos. F. Randolph and Albert I. Drayton, North Plainfield, $2,175 98; Frank H. Mobus, et ux., to Wm. B. Emmons, North Plainfield, $350; John C. Abbott to Martha Lunger, North Plainfield, $1.

Action Withdrawn.

The action of Ida Phillips, claimant, against Vincent L. Frazee, plaintiff in execution, was before Justice Abbott and a jury yesterday. Before the trial proceeded Murphy & Blatz, counsel for the plaintiff, withdrew the action. H. C. Runyon represented he cla imant.

Good Weather Wanted.

The annual excursion of Trinity Reformed church and Sunday-school will take place Thursday, August 10th. It is predicted that the weather will be just right for a fine day at Asbury Park, the destination. The excursion will leave the beach at 7 o'clock p. m.

MUCH USE FOR 'PHONES.

N. Y. AND N. J. TELEPHONE COMPANY STRINGING NEW LINES.

Two More Trunk Lines to New York Made Necessary—Also Another to Somerville—Many Wires to Come Down.

Now that the local exchange of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company is fully established in its new headquarters on Park avenue, the attentions of Manager Charles W. Runyon are turned toward the enlargement of the present system. The number of local subscribers has now reached 460 and promises to pass the 500 mark before the beginning of winter. The return of many Plainfielders from their summer outings will see many who will equip their homes with telephones for the winter.

The business between Plainfield and New York has grown so rapidly within the last year that the company has been forced to make more facilities for the transmission of messages. A big gang of linemen is now at work stringing two trunk lines from Plainfield to New York to satisfy the great demand. Another trunk line to Bound Brook and Somerville will also be put up after this work is done.

Then the linemen will be put at work in this city removing the wires overhead that have been replaced by the cables in the underground circuits. A few linemen are busy removing them now but the balance of the work will be done in a few weeks.

DOG ATTACKED CYCLIST.

MISS ELIZABETH SMALLEY BITTEN BY A FOX TERRIER.

The Canine Chased Her on the Bicycle and Succeeded in Setting His Teeth in the Flesh—The Brute Was Killed.

While Miss Elizabeth Smalley, of Craig place, was riding her wheel on Craig place near Grove street, Thursday, she was attacked by a fox terrier owned by Mr. Hall, of Duer street, and severely bitten in the ankle by the animal. This dog has on more than one occasion been complained of as a nuisance and is constantly running after bicyclists and snapping at their feet.

When first the dog attacked Miss Smalley she made every effort to frighten him away and thus prevent him biting her, but her efforts were unsuccessful. The dog finally accomplished his purpose and Miss Smalley was throw from her wheel.

As soon as she learned the extent of the injury she hastened to the office of Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, on Duer street, and had the wound cauterized by him. A little later the matter was reported to one of the marshals, and after Miss Smalley identified the dog the officer reported the matter to the owner, and the canine was killed last evening by Marshal Campbell.

Dr. Buchanan does not belive that Miss Smalley will feel any ill effects from the bite.

EXCELSIOR! EXCELSIOR!

Fireman Muir Climbs to the Top of a Tall Flagstaff.

A crowd gathered near the West End fire house Thursday and for some time watched Alex. Muir, a member of Hose 3, scale the flagstaff on the engine house. It became necessary to adjust one of the ropes attached to the halyards.

The pole is fully 75 feet from the roof. Without the least hesitation Fireman Muir made ready to climb the tall staff. Hand over hand he went, drawing his body up a few inches at a time. The staff is quite slender and it swayed and wavered from the weight of Muir's body. As the courageous young man climbed, agile as a monkey, his course was closely watched by the crowd of spectators. In less than five minutes he had reached the top. Then those from the street below—more than 100 feet—who had noted with bated breath his perilous ascent, saw the man reach the top and adjust the rope, there broke forth from the awe-struck crowd ripples of applause that finally swelled to enthusiastic shouts. After fixing the rope, Fireman Muir waved his hat to his admiring auditors and gracefully descended. Not satisfied with his first efforts the plucky climber made a second ascent to the amusement of the small boy and the plaudits of his lady friends.

Enjoying Life in California.

Mr. and Mrs. Maze Edwards, who are spending the summer in California, were guests at a recent banquet of Golden Gate Commandery, Knights Templar, in San Francisco, when Mr. Edward's brother, Col. William Edwards, was presented with two handsome jewels. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are enjoying themselves immensely, and will return to Plainfield the latter part of this month.

Silk Mill is Busy

The Watchung Silk Company has just purchased a new warper to meet the increasing demands in the business. It is also the intention of the company to invest in additional machinery at an early date. About fifteen operators are now employed and the company expect to employ about forty operators inside of a few months.

WEDDED AT HOMESTEAD.

POPULAR YOUNG WOMAN OF DUNELLEN BECOMES A BRIDE.

Miss Jennette Douglas Clawson Becomes the Wife of George Wiegand, of Pluckamin—Many Friends Present.

The home of Randolph Clawson was the scene of a very pretty wedding ceremony July 12th, when his eldest daughter, Jennette Douglas, and Geo. Wiegand, of Pluckamin, were united in marriage. Rev. Martin Sindall, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, performed the ceremony.

The bridemaid was Miss Lillian Suydam, of Franklin Park, and the best man was Walter Clawson, brother of the bride. Alfred Wilson and Ralph Titsworth were the ushers. The bride entered the parlor on the arm of her father, to the strains of Lohengrin's pretty wedding march, rendered on the piano by Miss Lorretto Clawson, sister of the bride. The bridal party took places beneath a handsome, arch formed of evergreens and white flowers in the east corner of the spacious parlor, where the ceremony was performed.

The bride was becomingly attired in a gown of organdie over white silk, and she carried a bunch of bridal roses. The parlor was handsomely decorated, festoons of evergreens being draped from the four corners of the room and caught in the centre over a hanging lamp, while the mantle was banked with moss and cut flowers, palms and potted plants being also in profusion.

After the ceremony and congratulations had been offered the happy couple, a sumptuous collation was enjoyed by the guests. Later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Wiegand left town for a short wedding tour.

The newly wedded couple received many handsome presents, which is a good evidence of the esteem in which they are held.

The bride is an estimable young woman and numbers among her friends the best citizens of Dunellen. For some years she has been a teacher in one of the public schools at Bound Brook, where she is also highly esteemed.

Among the invited guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Barney, of New York; the Misses Tantum, Henry Hutchinson and family, Mrs. VanRensselaer, Miss Stafford, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Fulton and Robert Fulton, Ed Hutchinson and sister, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Harris and the Misses Harris, of Rahway; Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Tapsett and family, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis and Mr. and Mrs. Winn, of Plainfield; Gains Hoffman, of Bound Brook and Miss VanSyckel, Miss VanDoren, Miss Holmes and Miss Bartoletti, teachers in the Bound Brook school; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Suydam, of Franklin Park; C. B. Clawson, of Salem College, Salem, West Va., Mrs. C. R. Clawson and Mr. and Mrs. Howard Wilson, of Spottswood, N. J.

GOVERNOR VOORHEES AIDS CYCLING.

Through His Efforts Commissioners Visit All Parts of New Jersey.

One of the bills passed by the last Legislature of New Jersey, and which Gov. Voorhees readily signed, was that appropriating $150,000 to be distributed throughout the State for the improvement of public roads. The commissioners appointed by him were instructed to visit all parts of the State and go among wheelmen, who, he said were more fully acquainted with the good roads question than any other set of people and could furnish valuable information.

In some of the smaller boroughs of the State the residents are not yet aware of the new law. Even in Kearny the new law was unknown until a member of this commission visited them. The commission traversed the local roads and favored an allotment from the State to help improve them.

Since then the "good roads" fever has struck the town. A largely attended public meeting was held in the Town Hall and resolutions passed requesting the Common Council to appropriate a reasonable sum to be added to the State money for the improvement of the roads in general.

THROWN FROM HIS WHEEL.

An Eleven Year Old Boy Run Down on Park Avenue.

George Higgins, 11 years old, of East Third street, was knocked from his wheel near the corner of Park avenue and Second street about 11:20 o'clock last Saturday a. m., by a horse driven by Michael Powers, the coal merchant of South avenue. Through a misunderstanding as to which way the boy was going Mr. Powers accidentally collided with the boy's wheel. The lad was thrown to the street and slightly bruised about the head. He was assisted to Hepburn's drug store where his injuries, which were slight, were dressed by the druggist. The wheel ridden by the boy was but little injured.

METUCHEN WANTS ANOTHER TROLLEY.

Would Like a Connecting Line to Plainfield.

COMPANIES DON'T WANT IT.

BRUNSWICK AND PLAINFIELD COMPANIES WILL NOT BUILD.

Metuchen People are Quite Anxious to Have a Trolley Line to This City —Representative of a Syndicate Was There Last Fall Getting Consents —The Company Never Materialized.

Metuchen, July 18.—The advent of the lines of the Brunswick Traction Company has awakened the good folk of Metuchen to the very material advantages of rapid transit. Now they want more of it and would view with particular satisfaction a trolley line connecting this place with Plainfield. The people can see very plainly the advantages of such a connection, but to the trolley corporations, it does not seem to be so apparent.

The Pennsylvania Railroad and later the trolley, have made easy access to New Brunswick from here. It is well known, however, that the Plainfield stores are far superior to those of New Brunswick and the Metuchen purchasers avail themselves of every opportunity to visit the former. It was hoped when the Brunswick Traction Company reached Metuchen that its lines would be extended right through to Plainfield. It would open up a section now devoid of any means of transit aside from that supplied by horses and also bring Plainfield and this place much nearer, a state of affairs greatly to be wished for.

The officials of the Brunswick Company state, however, that the line would be of little value to them and not worth the cost and trouble that its building would necessitate. They don't want it, they say.

Last fall Metuchen experienced a revival of the interest in the wished-for line. A man, claiming to be the representative of a syndicate of capitalists, visited the scene and announced that this syndicate was preparing to build a line from Metuchen to Plainfield. He secured the necessary right of way from the end of the Brunswick Company's line out through Oak Tree by way of the old road. Everybody was interested in the project and a speedy completion of the line was hoped for. Up to the present time, however, nothing more has been heard from the syndicate.

The matter of an extension to Metuchen was broached to the officials of the Plainfield Street Railway but they did not look on the line with favor. They had no use for it, they explained.

Those who are intimate with the workings of the trolley systems say that an independent line between Plainfield and Metuchen would not pay under present circumstances. If such a line is to be built, it must be part of one of the great systems and run in connection with the other lines. So the people of Metuchen will have to wait until one of the big corporations will consent to extend its lines over the territory in question.

BUGGY WHEEL CAME OFF

CAUSED A RUNAWAY WITH RATHER SERIOUS RESULTS.

Christopher Herlick and His Daughter Thrown Out by the Frantic Actions of the Horse While Frightened.

Christopher Herlick and daughter Kate, of Springdale, four miles from here in Somerset county, are suffering severely as the result of a severe runaway in which they were concerned Sunday. They were driving to Dunellen to visit friends when one of the front wheels on the buggy came off on the road leading from Springdale to Washington Valley. The front of the buggy dropped on the horse's heels, and the animal commenced to kick and plunge in a terrific manner.

Miss Herlick was thrown into the road and her scalp cut in a severe manner. Her father was not as fortunate, however, for he became entangled in the lines and was dragged for a considerable distance over the rough road with the horse going at breakneck speed. The clothing was almost torn completely off his body. His leg was cut, one of his arms badly sprained and his body generally bruised. He was picked up unconscious.

Dr. West, of Bound Brook, called. He found it necessary to take twenty stitches in Herlick's injured leg, as well as several stitches in his daughter's scalp. The horse was caught further down the road by John C. Cooper.

The Kissing Bug.

The "kissing bug" has reached Plainfield. A peculiar specimen of an insect was captured a day or two ago and is now on exhibition in a glass show case at Weinberger's clothing store on West Front street. The bug is a ferocious looking thing and resembles not a little a large sized wasp.

MODERN FIELD ARTILLERY.

Guns Nowadays Capable of Firing Eighteen Shots a Minute and Twenty Shots an Hour.

Field artillery has passed through a complete evolution during the last few years. Increase in rapidity of firing has become an essential condition of the extreme value of modern field piece. All military authorities agree upon the necessity of being able to produce at a given moment terrible effects in the shortest possible time. The difficulty in the problem consisted in avoiding a waste of munitions.

Upon this subject Lieut. Poncet has published in the "Revue d'ab Infanterie" an interesting article which has been partially inspired by the works of Gen. Langlois upon field artillery. Up to the end of the eighteenth century little attention had been paid to rapid firing. The artillery, moreover, was heavy and clumsy. At the battle of Granson, in 1475, according to Merrid du Vernois' "Technology of Firearms," the pieces of Charles the Bold were charged and pointed against the Swiss at the beginning of the action. The firing began in volleys, but the aim was too high, and this caused the loss of the battle, because there was no time to recharge the pieces. At the end of the century artillery fire was about thirty shots a day for each piece. The heating of the pieces was the only obstacle.

Attempts at increasing the rapidity of artillery fire go back as far as the seventeenth century, when the Germans employed the first breech-loading cannon. More serious results were obtained in the time of Frederick II., when the field artillery was made very much lighter. At the end of the eighteenth century, with the return of the heavy pieces of artillery of Gribeauval, as well as in the wars of the revolution, the rapidity of the maximum rapidity of the fire in battle was from one to two shots a minute for each piece.

Moreover, in the time of smooth-bore guns, the cannonade which preceded the battle was never intended to crush the enemy. It covered the deploying of the troops and gave a chance to gain time without serious loss to the enemy. During the greater portion of the action the artillery fire was almost continuous, but always extremely slow. At the decisive moment, marked by the employment of shrapnel or grapeshot, the artillery discharges were carried on with extraordinary violence, and reached a rapidity of 2½ and even 5 shots a minute for each piece, as, for instance, at Wagram and Friedland, when the batteries opened the breach for the infantry by their grape and canister fire.

With rifled cannon the action was rarely decisive at long range. At an ordinary distance the effect produced was satisfactory, but it was never annihilating. For example, at Solera, two lines of artillery fought for five hours without either being knocked out. During the Franco-German war the rapidity of fire of the rifled guns reached one shot a minute with the 12-pound pieces and two shots a minute with the 3 and 4 pound pieces, and the rapidity of fire of the light rapidity of the German breech-loading guns was very little superior to that of the French.

Since 1871 the progress of field artillery has been considerably increased. In the first advance the range was increased. In the second the destructive power of the projectile was developed by a methodical fragmentation, and in the third and last step this same power has been increased still more by the general use of the tir fusant, which extends by 500 to 2,000 metres, and even more, the crushing effects of the old shrapnel fire.

It is undeniable that to crush an enemy it is only necessary to increase the offensive power of artillery fire, and to reach the maximum rapidity is required. "Artillery," says Gen. Langlois, "by its fire ought to be just like old-time charge of cavalry with its projectiles that is a charge that nothing can stop and which smashes down everything before it." The means employed to that end consist in diminishing the recoil, in accelerating the return of the piece in battery, and in facilitating the pointing. In charging the breech of the gun. Thanks to the combination of these different advantages, the guns recently made show an increase in rapidity of firing.

The fieldpiece of 1896 adopted by the German Government is made to fire regularly five shots a minute, but that is a limited speed to avoid waste. In reality, the piece is capable of firing double and even treble that number of shots in a minute.

Consequently, the average rapidity of rapid fire field artillery is ten or twelve shots a minute, supposing that the pointing of the piece can be done with the desired accuracy. If only an approximate aim is taken, a rapidity of from eighteen to twenty shots a minute can be easily reached. But it is a good thing to avoid this extreme rapidity, for, as Scharnhorst said at the beginning of the century, "One single shot well aimed is worth several badly aimed or not aimed at all, for if the gun is not pointed what is the use of firing?"

WITH SONGS OF WAR!

BY H. VILLIERS BARNETT.

With songs of War I'll woo thee!
I'll plant the standard high.
And sound the wild alarm;
I'll marshal mighty hosts to try
Conclusion with the enemy.
And Guard thy love from harm!
I'll post the wary sentinel,
And plot the Ambuscade;
I'll picket on a thousand hill.
I'll paint red battle, and I'll tell
How Victories are made.
With songs of War I'll woo thee!
With songs of War I'll woo thee!
I'll sing the march to storm and dust;
The clarion summons heard at dawn
The shock, the shout, the deadly thrust
The glorious, the glory, and the lust,
And the joy of his return!
With songs of War I'll woo thee.

A Spanish Custom.

The custom is universal in Madrid of closing one of the two outer doors of the house when a person dies. This door is closed for a twenty-four period of nine days.

POPULAR NAMES OF WARS.

The Conquered Nation Almost Invariably Comes First—Many Cases.

The conflict between the United States and Spain has passed into history as the "Spanish-American" war. At first glance there is nothing strange is this fact. Nobody has ever found out the real source of the names of the millions of objects and events. Ordinarily it might almost seem the names were given by accident or chance. The matter of naming wars, however, seems to follow a set rule. Examination reveals the fact that in almost every case the designation of a war by a certain popularly accepted name shows at once the victor and the vanquished, and that in such cases the first name, if two be given, or the one name, if there be only one, is the name of the conquered nation. The two that will at once occur to anyone's memory are the "Franco-Prussian" war, in which the French were defeated, and our own "Spanish-American" war.

But—there are others. In the Trojan war, so-called, the Trojans were defeated by the Greeks and Troy was pillaged and captured. The Macedonian wars were gained by the Romans. In the two Punic wars (Punicus: Phoenician; Carthaginian, Punic or Carthaginian) was a Phoenician colony) the Carthaginians were defeated and Carthage was seized by the Romans. In modern times the "Napoleonic" wars, called, in the Italian wars (1848-59-1859) ended with the defeat of Austria and the independence of Italy. In the "Schleswig-Holstein" war (1864) the Danes were defeated and forced to cede Holstein and Schleswig to the victorious Austro-Prussian coalition. It was of this war about a very complicated situation that Disraeli said, when asked to explain it, that only two men, of whom he was one, in the whole United Kingdom had ever understood what it was all about; the other man was dead, and he had forgotten. Next comes the "Austro-Prussian" war, in which Prussia, by winning the decisive battle of Sadowa, defeated Austria. Then we have the "Franco-Prussian" war, ending at Sedan (1870) with the annihilation of the French. The "China-Japan" war, in which the Japanese were conquerors; the "Graeco-Turkish" war, resulting in victory to the Turks, and our own "Spanish-American" war completes the series, and seems to sustain the contention that wars are named from the conquered and not from the conquerors.

Humor Lurks in Ignorance.

Some of the answers handed in on examination are extremely funny, especially for literary and clerical students. One young woman who aspired to hand out books at the public library opined that Chicago's literary lion, Hobart Chatfield-Chatfield-Taylor, wrote The Vicar of Wakefield, while Mr. Canterbury wrote Canterbury Tales. This refreshing young person also stated that Mark Twain was the pseudonym of Marc Antony. Her knowledge was not confined to literature alone, for she gave the interesting information that Richard Wagner was a "street car magnate." The three greatest epics she pronounced to be The Psalm of Life, Old Oaken Bucket and Owen Meredith's Lucile. Being asked to write a short account of herself, the young woman declared that "I am merely a drop in the great ocean of humanity." One of the examiners unfeelingly remarked that "if she stays in that hot library long she'll find herself merely a grease spot."

A man who wanted the position of examiner himself, gave it as his unbiased judgments that "prohibit" may be spelled either "prohibed" or "prohippet," according to "whether you prefer Webster or other authortes."

The World's Table.

When we sit down to the great feast with mankind we are enjoying many things that have delighted fair women and brave men in the past, things that have been on the tables of the cities that have passed into story. There are some things which have been added through the incentive of the rewards offered by those Eastern monarchs who were frequently desirous of new dishes, as that Roman one was for a new pleasure. Many of these things are owed to travelers who brought them from far places. Many have been lifted from the huts and wigwams of savages to the table of the world. Men have curiously watched animals to see that they might learn the probable effects of foods on themselves. Much, so far as Europe is concerned, is owed to the Arabs; something to the Crusaders, armies have brought back new foods, as that of Alexander the Great and those of the Romans. To the wealth of ancient agriculture modern research has added much. Nearly every country has added something, and nearly every sea. Every part of nature has made its contribution.

THE BLACK WOLF.

Its Mean Traits—Different Ways in Which Hunters Catch Them.

Some little readers have probably heard about the small boy who thought it rare fun to frighten his friends by crying "Wolf! Wolf!" as though he were being pursued. They lived in a wild part of the country where wolves were frequently seen, but in time they grew used to Johnnie's little joke, so that one day when he cried "Wolf! Wolf!" in frantic tones they paid no attention to him. Alas! that day a wolf really did sneak out of the woods —a hungry wolf—and poor little Johnnie furnished him a very satisfactory meal. There is a deep meaning attached to this fable, which you had best ask your mother to explain.

Well, the Black Wolf, is a fierce looking fellow indeed. We have heard so many stories about wolves attacking travelers and their horses that we have thought them full of ferocity and courage, when in fact they are the most cowardly of all our animals. Unless pressed by extreme hunger they never attack animals larger than themselves, and then only in packs. A cur dog, as a rule, can drive the largest wolf on the plains. Lean, gaunt, and hungry looking, they are the essence of meanness and treachery. Their long, bushy tails are carried straight out behind, but when the animal is frightened, he puts his tail between his legs just like the common dog.

There are men who make it a business to go wolf hunting in order to secure their "pelts," or hides. The bait they use is the carcass of some animal, elk, deer, or cow, which they impregnate with poison, and leave in a place which will do the most good. In the morning sometimes as many as fifty dead wolves will be found scattered about the carcass whose flesh they had so ravenously devoured. A wolf skin is worth about one dollar and a half, so that it pays a hunter very well to "catch" a number of these mean animals.

They are sometimes hunted on horseback with hounds, but they can run with such speed when frightened, that no ordinary dog can keep up with them. Among the pack are one or more greyhounds, who bring the wolf to bay and allow the other dogs to come up.

The "Capture of Havana."

Draw on board or cardboard a design like the following, only much larger. Cut out six small boats of cardboard, bore a hole over the bottom so they will sit upright. Place two boats on each spot marked "port" and take one dice and throw three times—each time moving a different boat. If you throw more than a three-spot you cannot move, but lose your turn. Two boats on spots marked "sandbar" you are aground and lose next turn. If stop on "Spanish Fleet" you go back to "port." If stopped on this spot twice, even if by different boats, one must be forfeited; if you stop on "mine" you forfeit a boat. The idea is to get boats safely into Havana harbor, and the one getting in first wins. A boat cannot move to a spot occupied by another boat. The thrower loses that turn. One, two or three people can play this game.

Tommy's Arbor-Day Speech.

Miss Smith had invited all the people in the neighborhood to attend the Arbor day exercises, writes M. E. in Youth's Companion. She had said to the children:

"We will plant good trees, and if we take good care of them, we can make this bare schoolyard so beautiful that in four or five years it will seem like a different place."

"And just think how pleasant it will be for the children who will go to school here ten years from now," she added, "or twenty years—or thirty!"

With this idea in mind the children had worked with a will, and when Arbor day came the holes were all dug, and each one was brought to fill in around the roots. At 2:30 each pupil was in his place, ready with the song or speech or recitation which he was to give before planting his tree.

Miss Smith led the visitors from place to place, and everything went on just as had been arranged till they came to Billy Gray's tree.

When Miss Smith saw his excited face and the trembling of the hand that held the pine tree, she was sure he had forgotten his verses, and she was just about to prompt him when he started out on his own hook:

"This is a pine tree," he gasped, clutching at it as if for support. "And—and I hope it will grow up into a forest and—and be a comfort to my ancestors!"

A Double Compliment.

There is a little 5-year-old girl in Chicago who evidently appreciates her mother partly because she is her mother and partly because of self-appreciation. "Mamma," she said the other morning, "guess what Mabel's mamma said about you at the party last night." "I don't know, I'm sure. What was it, dear?" asked her mother. "Why," was the reply, "she said you was the sweetest little girl's mother in Chicago."

THE BOARD OF TRADE.

This statement of Dr. Fritts led Thomas W. F. Scanlon, of West Dunellen, to jump to his feet and say that the citizens of Dunellen had nothing to do with the affairs of the Plainfield Street Railway Company. It was with the Brunswick Traction Company that they were going to deal and right severely, too, if the citizens did not receive fair treatment. However, Mr. Scanlon said, he felt the citizens of Plainfield had interests identical with the citizens of Dunellen in this fight, as the traffic of the Brunswick Traction Company was of vital interests to this city from a business standpoint. Mr. Scanlon intimated that at the mass meeting in Dunellen tomorrow night some things would be unearthed regarding how the franchise of the Brunswick Traction Company was secured.

President Lounsbury said the present state of affairs ought not to exist. Both trolley companies should be interested in giving the public good service. He said he had no doubt the Plainfield company felt happy in seeing the Dunellen people in the fix from which they are now trying to extricate themselves. But in justice to the interest of the public and all concerned this controversy about dividing fares should be settled at once. As it is, the trolley companies were making fools of the citizens of Plainfield and Dunellen. He urged the importance of the companies coming together and settling the existing difficulty.

Dr. Fritts said the Plainfield company was willing to assume the old arrangement and run cars as far as the railroad station in Dunellen.

This magnanimous (?) offer brought forth a storm of disapproval on the part of the representatives from Dunellen and their sympathizers in this city.

Much further discussion was had between various members of the Board and those from Dunellen, in which the Plainfield Street Railway was denounced in unmeasured terms for what one man considered as its small and grasping propensities.

Some warm talk was indulged in between Mr. Radell and Supt. Adleman relative to the earnings of their respective companies, since the Brunswick Traction Company was built. The discussion was finally brought to a close by Mr. Radell stating that the Brunswick Traction Company was anxious to get into Plainfield and if the city would give them a franchise his road would be only too happy to carry passengers for a five-cent-fare. As to the school tickets Mr. Radell said he did not think the Plainfield company was using the citizens right.

"Just let us in here and we'll use you square. Now I am willing to leave it to this Board of Trade to suggest something and will meet the Plainfield company half way. We're here to do business and not split hairs." (Applause.

Secretary H. C. Runyon said he was one of the attorneys for the Plainfield Street Railway Company when that company sought to secure a franchise from Dunellen and he did not think that the borough had treated the Plainfield company quite fairly at that time. However, the people of Plainfield were interested in Dunellen, the west end of town, to come here to trade and will do what she can to see that her citizens are carried home as cheaply as they were brought here. The Brunswick Traction Company, he said, was certainly a feeder to the Plainfield Company and a very important one at that and should therefore co-operate with it for the welfare of all concerned. As to fares the companies ought to be willing to each give transfers.

Dr. Fritts said he had no authority to act for his company in the matter, but that he would submit to the board of directors the proposition which had been suggested, viz: The Plainfield Street Railroad Company to pay to the Brunswick Traction Company four cents for every passenger carried beyond its lines and the Brunswick Traction Company to pay to the Plainfield Street Railroad Company a like amount for every passenger carried over its line on a transfer.

Mr. Radell said he was willing to make such an agreement then and there if Dr. Fritts would agree to do the same. But the doctor maintained that neither himself or Supt. Adleman had any authority to make any such agreement without the sanction of the directors.

Dr. Fritt's good natured statement that he would do what he could to adjust the existing difficulties and present the suggestions offered at the next meeting of the company, served to dispell the gathering clouds and caused a better feeling to exist among the Dunellenites.

After some little discussion regarding excursion rates the board adjourned.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department.

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

A new style package containing FOUR TABULES packed in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at most drug stores for 5 cents. A family carton (12 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York. Ripans Tabules may be had of some druggists, but the 5-cent carton will be found the most convenient for those who have occasion to buy proprietary medicines.

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial. I found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of dollars and cents. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would be without them now if it were my last cent. At the time of this interview there were present two daughters of the lady who had objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this did not fear, as others who may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. I am only about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been. So no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

4 US
AFTERBATH

It makes the dish white and rich, removes pimples and dandruff and all eruptions from the person.

For the Head and Hair and Body.

The body and limbs of every child should be rubbed with 4 US after every bath. Just enough dropped in the palm of the hand to rub over every part of the surface of a child, once a day will keep the skin soft and white, the pores free from getting clogged with impurity passing out from the system. A teaspoon full is sufficient to moisten the cuticle skin covering of a grown person. The effect is wonderful; pimples on the body and face are entirely removed by a few applications of the 4 Us. Druggists sell it.

VICK SEEDS

Bulbs and Plants have gone to thousands of homes in America for nearly half a century and to celebrate the 50th year in business Mr. Vick issued a Special Golden Wedding Edition of

AUNT SARAH GREEN'S KINDNESS RESENTED.

Her Attempt to Point Out Jane Vail's Error

LEADS TO A BIG ROW.

'TWAS ALL OVER HANDSOME OSCAR NELSON,

Who the Good Woman Said Was Violating His Marriage Vows—The Women Punched and Pulled Hair and Finally Landed in Justice Mosher's Court—Willie Sweeny, the Boy Lawyer, Defends Sarah.

As they say down in Texas, there was a "three minute rough-house" at the home of Jane Vail on West Fourth street last Wednesday night. It was all owing to the interference in family matters of one Sarah Green, familiarly known as Aunt Sarah. Now Aunt Sarah is hardly "fare, fat and forty." She is fully sixty years of age and will never capture a prize at a beauty show.

However, she is possessed of a kindly spirit which she attempts to exercise to good advantage by keeping a motherly watch over her neighbors. Jane Vail is a neighbor and lives nearly opposite Sarah. Jane is a prepossessing, young married woman and is said to have many admirers among the social set in which she moves. Both women are of African extraction. Now good natured Aunt Sarah, bless her dear soul, has long had suspicions that Jane was receiving the attentions of one Oscar Nelson, a sprightly young chap with a musical voice.

Oscar's surreptitious visits to Jane so nettled Aunt Sarah's sense of propriety that she resolved to offer Jane a little friendly advice. And this was the object of her visit to Jane last Wednesday evening.

From what developed it is apparent that Jane rather resented Aunt Sarah's kind offices, and in good and plain English handed her some talk about minding her own affairs and ending with a forcible invitation for her to "clar out."

Aunt Sarah did not propose to "clar out" until she had "tole Miss Jane dat she mus' be 'shamed of herself to have anyt'ing to do wid dat ar' Oscar, who wan't no good no how!"

A quarrel followed this sally, which resulted in Aunt Sarah being ordered from the house. The peremptory order was not obeyed as quickly as Mrs. Vail desired, and she attempted to force matters by pushing Aunt Sarah from the room. The latter picked up a clothes stick and backing into a corner defied her erring friend to come on.

Jane needed no second invitation. In a jiffy the good Aunt Sarah and the wicked Jane were clasped in mortal combat. For a moment there was a wild cat time. The women clawed, scratched and pounded each other. My, how the wool did fly. Jane being the younger, soon had Aunt Sarah winded and succeeded in forcibly ejecting her one time friend from the house.

Aunt Sarah nursed her injured feelings for several days. Finally, upon advice of friends, she decided to invoke the aid of the law. Securing counsel from Willie Sweeney, the boy lawyer, she made up her mind to have Jane arrested. A summons was secured of Justice Mosher. The hearing was had last Monday evening.

Jane had been advised to secure the services of Lawyer Kirch, but she told her friends that "it was all damn foolishness. I don't want no lawyer. If a lady can't have a friend come to see her without being insulted in her own house den I just want's to know why."

Constable Gjettleson was given the summons to serve. When all parties reached the office of Justice Mosher, Lawyer Willie Sweeney was on hand clad in a clean shirt and wearing one of his characteristic smiles. The boy lawyer also had a table filled with law books. When Jane was served with the summons she very adroitly enlisted the sympathies of two of her lady friends, who by the way had seen nothing of the row, to swear Aunt Sarah out of court, as she afterwards expressed it. She would certainly have put her threat into execution but for the astuteness of Lawyer Willie, who succeeded in drawing from her the fact that she had grabbed her antagonist by the hair and given her a couple of punches. Thereupon Justice Mosher decided that Jane had been guilty of an assault. However in view of the motherly interest she had displayed toward the erring Jane he decided not to punish her but would bind her over to keep the peace. Aunt Sarah Green and Jane Vail do not speak as they pass by now. The good old auntie, though, has been extolling the noble efforts made by her counsel in her behalf. Lawyer Sweeney has indeed paved the way for numerous clients on West Fourth street.

BOY IN TEENS A SUICIDE.

DRANK TWO OUNCES OF CARBOLIC ACID YESTERDAY.

Thomas Cattano, Tired of Life, Took the Poison in His Brother's Woodshed at Cranford—Died in Short Order.

Cranford, July 26.—Thomas Cattano, aged 19 years, committed suicide at his brother's residence on North avenue yesterday afternoon by drinking two ounces of carbolic acid.

Cattano went into a wood shed at the rear of Joseph Cattano's store and locking himself in drank the contents of the bottle. His sister-in-law heard his cries of pain and went to the shed, broke open the door and found Cattanto laying on the floor frothing at the mouth. Dr. J. A. Vail was called but too late to save the young man's life.

Thomas Cattanto was a single man and the son of Andrew Cattano a well-to-do Italian of Brooklyn who set many of his sons up in business. Young Cattano was the proprietor of a shoe store at Roselle.

TWO ROUTES SUBMITTED.

APPLICATION FOR TROLLEY FRANCHISES IN WESTFIELD.

Connecting Link of the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company and the Plainfield Trolley System.

Westfield, July 26—At a meeting of the Township Committee held last evening Col. E. W. Hine, secretary of the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company, appeared and made application for a trolley franchise through Prospect street and Brightwood avenue to the Fanwood township line. He also at the same time made application for a franchise on Elm street to Dudley avenue, through Dudley avenue to prospect street, and thence to Brightwood avenue and to the township line.

Col. Hine stated that the company was compelled to ask for one of these routes as it had been found that the Board of Freeholders controlled North avenue, over which the company now has a franchise, so that they were unable to build that avenue. The company would rather have the line on Prospect street, as it would be a more direct line, and he said that a majority of consents on that street had been granted. He further stated that the company could not build on Dudley avenue as the property owners objected.

After considering the application for sometime the committee sojourned until Friday evening, Aug. 11th, when the application will be given a public hearing in the township rooms on North avenue.

POINTS OF BEAUTY.

Characteristics for Which Women Should Always Strive.

Well-shaped hands and feet have always been regarded as distinctive marks of beauty. While one is not responsible for the size of their feet, they should be neatly dressed. A woman who is well-gloved and well-shod always makes a good appearance, even if the rest of her dress be somewhat shabby. Neat and shapely-dressed feet gives tone to the toilet, but feet with corns and bunions and bow-windows in the shoes, where the bunions protrude will ruin any costume and detract from the impression of beauty which a woman should make upon the eye of the beholder.

To get rid of corns and bunions and have the enlarged great toe joints made small, consult Specialist Brown, 145 West Second street. He has permanently cured the feet of others. Why not you? Geo. F. Brown, tax collector, office Somerset street, home 87 Grove street, says: "For several years corns and bunions gave me a great deal of trouble. Nothing or nobody gave me any relief until my feet were perfectly cured by Specialist Brown." Mrs. B. A. Wagner, of West Front street, says: "About six years ago Mr. Brown permanently cured my bunions and made my enlarged great toe joints small. My feet have not troubled me since. He also completely cured my mother's ingrowing toe nails and corns."

Promoting a Company in California.

George L. Colgate, well-known in this city as one of the prominent officers of the Bard Cycle Company, now defunct, is at present located in San Francisco, where he is promoting a large electrical goods manufacturing company. Mr. Colgate formerly resided at Plainfield. Soon after the destruction of the building occupied by the Bard Cycle Company on North avenue, he left the city and nothing has been heard of him until the present.

THROUGH TROLLEY REACHES WESTFIELD.

Plenty of Rails Have Just Been Received.

RAPID PROGRESS NOTED

NOTHING DONE YET AT THE END OF SCOTCH PLAINS LINE.

Owing to Delay in Settling on Route Between Scotch Plains and Westfield, No Move Has Been Made There Yet—One Track Completed From Roselle to Westfield at Present.

The trolley line between Plainfield and Elizabeth, which was fathered by the Riker syndicate, is progressing. In another month it is expected that cars will be running from Plainfield to the Roselle borough line and perhaps even farther. The scarcity of rails, which made trouble and delayed the construction of the road, is now over. A shipment of fifteen cars of rails has just been received here and others have been received at Westfield.

The double track has been laid from the Roselle borough line to Garwood. From that point one track has been laid to the schoolhouse at Westfield. The other track will now be laid. The work at the Scotch Plains end of the line has not yet been resumed. There will be no activity there until the route that the line is to take to reach Westfield is fully decided on. When the route of the line is chosen and the necessary franchises secured, then the work of construction will be started at both ends of the gap, and it will not take long to close it.

It is the intention of the company to buy power at Plainfield and Elizabeth to run the cars. No announcement has yet been made of the plans of the company regarding the beginning of travel on the road. No cars will probably be run until the line through to Plainfield has been opened up. That, unless some serious obstacle is encountered, will take place inside of two months. The greatest delay will be in the time necessary to secure the franchise.

HELD VALENTINE'S NOTES.

Queer Financiering in the Wrecked Institution.

New Brunswick, July 26.—The discovery was made yesterday that the wrecked Middlesex County Bank, at Perth Amboy, had among its assets notes of Cashier George M. Valentine amounting to $11,357.50, with absolutely no security whatever. In addition to this the bank holds notes of Hugh Ramsay for $43,000. A note for $15,000 of Valentine's indorsed by Robert M. Valentine, is another asset, and also notes of Robert Lyall for $13,850, with Bay State Gas stock and other stocks of like value as collateral. In all the bank has a total of $145,381 in notes.

The fact that these notes were a part of the assets of the bank was not discovered by the Deputy Banking Commissioner in the superficial examination which he made into the affairs of the bank, and has decided its doors must be closed. When temporary receiver James McGuire made a more extensive examination the existence of these notes were discovered.

Paterson Railways Secured.

Paterson, July 26.—The transfers of the Paterson Railway Company's lines to the Shanley syndicate, which controls almost all the street railways in northern New Jersey, was accomplished yesterday, when the syndicate secured a controlling interest in the stock. The former stockholders are well pleased with the price paid for their stock, which was par. The syndicate has long been desirous of securing those lines, and to this end negotiations have been pending for several months. The hitch in the negotiations was over the price offered for the stock.

Mr. Runkle All Right.

H. G. Runkle, of West Eighth street, was in New York Tuesday where he learned of the reported injury of his son, Daniel, by being thrown from a horse at Plattsburg, N. Y., where he is spending the summer. He telegraphed at once to Mrs. Runkle and received an answer saying that she had heard nothing of any such accident and their son Daniel was in perfectly good health.

BOLD BOY STRIKERS.

MAKE LIFE MISERABLE FOR NEWS-DEALERS AND "SCABS."

"Yellow Kid" Vardon, the Leader, Gets "Scary" and Falls Into the Hands of Acting Chief Kiely—Released by Mayor.

The boycott against the New York World and Journal continues to occupy the attention of the newsboys. They still manifest an interest in the "scabs" who have the temerity to attempt to thwart their efforts to suppress the sale of the obnoxious sheets. The evening editions of the World and Journal were smuggled into town Tuesday on early afternoon trains. Any attempt, however, to sell those papers by "scab" newsboys met with disapproval on the part of the strikers that will not soon be forgotten by the boys who came in contact with them.

Towards evening the strikers, realizing that the police were not as severe with them as they might have been, grew bold. Their bravado finally increased to downright impudence. Not content with confining their efforts towards the suppression of the sale of the papers in question, the boys began to insult business men who had purchased those papers and attempted to take papers away from them.

In some instances they succeeded, principally because the men did not care to make any resistance. In one case, however, the boys ran against a snag. One gentleman, believing that he had been imposed upon, made complaint to Mayor Rockfellow. The latter notified Acting Chief Kieley and that officer went after the gang.

At the corner of Park and North avenues the officer ran across "Yellow-kid" Vardon, the leader of the strikers, and gathered him in. He was taken before the Mayor, who gave him a severe reprimand. Upon obtaining a promise from the obstreperous newsboy that he would confine his maledictions to newsboys and not interfere with the rights of citizens he was allowed to go. This movement of the Mayor seemed to check the spirit of the gang somewhat and they were comparatively quiet the balance of the evening.

Between the showers of last Tuesday the newsboys held a council of war which resulted in the formal organization of the Amalgamated Order of News Boys. An election of officers was held which resulted in the selection of John Vardon, alias "The Yellow Kid," alias "Chicken Breast Harry," as Grand Master Workboy of the order. Clarence Angleman, alias "Shoe leather Mike," and William Hall, alias "Pale-face," were chosen as his assistants.

The newsboys held a meeting in rooms on the third story of the First National Bank building at 4:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Justice Mosher granted permission for the boys to use a vacant room near his office. There was also present at this meeting C. J. Sheridan, a representative of the Herald and Telegram, who told the boys that arrangements had been made with Tom Carty to become an agent of the Telegram and that the price for the papers to the boys would be one-half cent a copy. This statement was received with shouts of approval by the strikers.

"Gimpy" Ayers, "Chicken-breast" Weber and "Gee Wah," the scrapper of the newsboys, attempted to make speeches, but their efforts were shouted down by the enthusiasm of the others. Before the meeting adjourned Willie Sweeney, the boy lawyer, who had used his influence with the janitor of the building to allow the boys to occupy the room, took up a collection.

Sweeney got 27 cents, five of which he spent to buy Justice Mosher a cigar to pacify him for the noise made by the gang.

The strikers received 400 Telegrams on the 7:26 train and sold nearly all of them.

Blanchard Fostgate last Tuesday prefered charges against Roundsman Fredericks on to the Mayor. He alleged that the Roundsman had neglected to arrest a boy who had snatched a World from him while he was reading it on the North Avenue station. As the Roundsman did not see the boy commit any overt act he refused to make the arrest.

Young Willie Sweeney got mixed up with the strikers at the North Avenue station. When ordered away from that part of the platform used by the United States Express Company he got into trouble with William H. Hartpence, an employe of the express company, and was jostled out of the way.

Rowland Cox, of West Seventh street, has gone to Mt. Kineo, Me.

E. C. Mulford, of East Fifth street, who has been confined to his home for a long time seems to be slightly improved.

TWO EGG-PLANTS GET LEWIS IN JAIL.

There Was Much Ado Over a Very Small Matter.

VEGETABLES WORTH 40 CTS.

"JUMBO" LEWIS MUST ANSWER TO THE GRAND JURY.

He Took the Vegetables From the Garden of Charles McCutchen, of Rockview Avenue—Senator Reed Acted for the Prosecution and Councilman S. S. Swackhamer for the Defendant.

Middlesex county justice is not in it for a minute with Somerset county. In the former county if a man misappropriates several hundred thousand dollars he gets six years, with two off for good behavior, while in Somerset county if a man steals two egg-plants he is held for the Grand Jury in default of bail, and the prosecution says that he should be sentenced twice a year and given six months each time.

It was a great trial that took place Tuesday afternoon in the borough court room when "Jumbo" Lewis, colored, a man of much reputation and small means, was on trial charged with stealing two egg-plants at 5:35 o'clock the morning of July 20th. The value of the plants was 20 cents each, and they were taken from the garden of Charles W. McCutchen, of Rockview avenue.

Residents of Washington Park have been troubled greatly by having their gardens devastated and it was thought about time a stop was put to the stealing. An opportunity offered itself and on the morning of July 20th, a colored man was seen coming from Mr. McCutchen's premises by Charles L. Smith, an employe of Mr. McCutchen. He overtook the man, who carried a pail, and demanded that he give him what he had in the pail. The man immediately gave up two egg-plants and Mr. Smith at once had a warrant issued for the arrest of Lewis. He was arrested and appeared yesterday for trial before Recorder Long. He was represented by Councilman Swackhamer, while Senator Reed represented the State.

Before the trial was fully under way counsel for the defendant had the original complaint quashed on the grounds that it did not fully set forth the crime, that it was not a case for the Mayor and Council to try, but a State case, that no value was placed on the stolen goods, thereby not determining whether it was petty or grand larceny.

In view of this a new warrant was issued at once and a new complaint made clearly setting forth the objectionable features of the original. The case was then tried.

The complaint set forth that Lewis did feloniously steal two egg plants valued at 20 cents each from the premises of C. W. McCutchen the morning of July 20th at 5:35 o'clock, according to the evidence of the plaintiff who claims he took out his watch and noted the time.

Counsel for the defendant argued that the prosecution had not proven the identity of the defendant. The plaintiff testified that he had never seen Lewis but once and then did not know his name. Mr. Swackhamer also argued that it was not Lewis that took the plants, that he was not within a quarter of mile of the place from which they were taken. He produced the pail in court that was supposed to have held the plants, but the plaintiff failed to identify the pail as the one he saw on the morning in question.

The defendant was put on the stand and stated that he arose that morning exactly at 5:30 o'clock according to a clock that strikes every half hour, and which was produced in court as evidence, and that it was a physical impossibility for him to reach Mr. McCutchen's place in five minutes. He stated that he went to Eighth street after swill and did not steal any plants.

Recorder Long finally held Lewis for the Grand Jury, and he was taken to Somerville yesterday. It is quite likely that the case will be appealed to the Court of Quarter Sessions on an allegation instead of an indictment, which can be brought up any Wednesday.

THE SANCTUM DESERTED.

EDITOR OF THE BERNARDSVILLE STAR HAS DISAPPEARED.

Left Many Creditors and a Wife Who Has Returned to Her Parents—Was An Athlete as Well as Pen Pusher.

A man who called himself Daniel C. Johnson started the Bernardsville Star, at Bernardsville, Somerset county, six weeks ago. Prior to going to Bernardsville he had resided in Morristown for sixteen months, and when he started his newspaper he secured a liberal line of advertising from Morristown merchants. He collected for his advertising and subscriptions in advance. Last week he left Bernardsville for parts unknown and The Star has ceased to twinkle.

Just after his appearance in Morristown Johnson announced that he was from Ashtabula, O., and a crack bicycle rider. A local dealer engaged him to ride on a home trainer in the window of his establishment. Johnson's muscular development, attired in beautiful flesh-colored tights, was the admiration of the passersby. Among the admirers was Miss Lillian May Bidner. They were married shortly afterward and she accompanied him to Bernardsville.

She has returned to the home of her perents at Ledgewood, N. J., and resumed her maiden name.

TO CONTROL MILK SUPPLY

IMPORTANT ORDINANCE TO BE INTRODUCED IN COUNCIL

No Local Law Now That Allows Health Board to Inspect Product of Milkmen When it is Thought Advisable

At an early date a new ordinance will be introduced in the Common Council for the benefit of the Board of Health and which will protect every person in the city that uses milk. At present the local Board of Health has no jurisdiction over the local milkmen and it has no right to deputize the health inspector to investigate their dairies unless a complaint is made.

This new ordinance will give that power and will insure to everyone purity of this necessity in life. It is claimed that the milk inspector makes his rounds in a perfunctory manner, and the office being appointive, the best results are not always obtained. It is also reported by some people that politics figure in the department and what the people are really entitled to they fail to receive. If the new ordinance is adopted, and there is good prospect that it will, there will be less likelihood of an outbreak of a contagious disease in this city from that source. Milkmen are often apt to be careless in handling milk, and some fail to realize that there is nothing that will carry germs of disease so easily or quickly as milk, hence the necessity for the greatest care in the handling of it.

If the local dealers know that the Board of Health has the power to inspect their dairies and their milk they are sure to be more particular in their business. Such an ordinance that is proposed will be of great benefit to this city.

NEW CLUB TO BE FORMED.

Defunct Cranford Athletic Club to Be Succeeded By Swell Affair.

Cranford, July 26—The goods and chattels of the once prosperous Cranford Athletic Club were sold by Constable Oliver Conlon, of Elizabeth, at the clubhouse yesterday afternoon to satisfy Mrs. Margaret R. Thompson's rent bill of $230. The sale realized about $210. No effort was made on the part of the club members or directors to redeem the goods. The good will of the club was sold for 50 cents. The baseball suits and paraphernalia were released and made a present to the Cranford Baseball Club. It is said that a new club will soon be started and take possession of the clubhouse. The club will also have a golf grounds of 50 acres, and the club will be metropolitan in every respect.

Boating Carnival Planned.

Cranford, July 26.—The carnival committee of the Cranford Boating Association met Monday evening at the Electric Club's rooms and made further arrangements for the carnival to be held on the Rahway River on August 19. Prizes will be awarded for the best decorated boats and lawns. Two hundred dollars has been subscribed for the carnival. Commodore G. Harvey Miller was authorized to employ two bands to furnished music for that eventful night.

SHERIFF REFUSES TO HONOR REQUISITION.

Trouble About Getting Custody of Darling

SHERIFF DEMANDS $275.

NO WORD TODAY AS TO WHAT THE RESULT IS.

Chief Grant and Detective Ferguson Balked in Their Efforts to Bring the Prisoner to New Jersey—Backwoods Official Holds the Murderer on His Demand for a Sum of Money.

An unlooked for complication has developed in the proceedings to extradite William Darling, wanted in Middlesex county for the murder of Harry Dunham, in New Market, in 1895. The Sheriff of the backwoods Pennsylvania county where Darling was arrested and where he is now in jail has refused to surrender the prisoner unless paid $275 in cash.

That is all that is known of the Sheriff's demand, and Prosecutor Voorhees is at a loss to know upon what the Sheriff bases his demand.

Chief of Police Grant, of Plainfield, and Detective Ferguson, attached to the Prosecutor's office, left for McConnellsburg, the county seat of Fulton county, Pa., Monday to get the prisoner. Governor Voorhees had signed the requisition for the prisoner, and Governor Stone, of Pennsylvania signed the papers Monday, the New Jersey officials stopping at the capital on their way to McConnelsburg.

It was expected that the prisoner would be surrendered at once, and that the detectives and their prisoner would reach New Brunswick this afternoon or evening.

Tuesday morning Prosecutor Voorhees received a telegram from Detective Ferguson, stating that Sheriff Sheets, of Fulton county, refused to surrender the prisoner, although confronted with the requisition. He refused to honor the requisition or give up the prisoner unless paid $275 cash.

The detective asked for instructions.

Prosecutor Voorhees at once notified Governor Voorhees, of this State, and Governor Stone, of Pennsylvania, of the remarkable course taken by the Pennsylvania Sheriff, and asked Governor Voorhees to take steps to compel the honoring or the requisition.

The only tenable theory to account for the Sheriff's demand is that it is for expenses incurred in making the arrest. Even so, it is hard to imagine how so large an expense bill was incurred. Of course, the county of Middlesex will have to pay all expenses connected with the arrest of Darling, but the Sheriff of Fulton county has no right to collect the bill in the way he seems to have taken. He had no course but to honor the requisition. In refusing to honor it he has made himself liable to impeachment, and this course may be taken.

When the Fulton county authorities were first notified that Darling was wanted they moved with the most provoking slowness. They believed that there was a reward for his arrest, and were afraid they would not get it. When finally convinced that there was no reward they took their time about arresting the man.

Governor Stone issued a requisition at Harrisburg for Wm. Darling, who is wanted here for the murder of Harry Dunham.

Word from New Brunswick yesterday stated that Prosecutor Voorhees has received no information as to what success his officers are having in getting custody of Darling. It was expected that a telegram would be received yesterday announcing the situation yesterday, but none has been received.

There are two persons who saw William Darling shoot Harry Dunham at Dents's Hotel, New Market, August 21st, 1895. One is Edward Mitchell, colored, who is now a waiter in a New York hotel, and the other is Isadore Person, also colored, who now lives at New Market and works the Vail farm. They were both in the pool-room where the shooting occurred, and will prove valuable witness for the prosecution.

Edward Randolph, of New Market, was also present at the hotel but he died in the summer of 1897, while Peter Campbell, colored, another one present at the time, was killed on the Central Railroad at White House during the winter of 1897-8.

Robert Leo Perrine, colored, now dead, and Theo. Rosenzweet, walked into the hotel for a drink after Darling fired the first shot. The report startled Mrs. Dantz and her bartender, Wm. Kohn, both of whom were in the din-

YOUNG WOMAN BLACKSMITH

Works at the Forge to Complete Her Course in Marine Architecture.

By Elizabeth Lyon.

Women blacksmiths are not unknown in the world, but it is extremely uncommon to find a young lady of education and refinement toiling industriously day after day at the anvil and forge.

This is what Miss Lydia Gould Weld does, and the shop where she works is connected with the Masachusetts Institute of Technology, where she is studying to be a naval architect, a field of activity in which the new woman has not hitherto entered. The course in marine architecture requires a practical knowledge of blacksmithing as well as other branches of mechanics, and Miss Weld was not in the slightest degree dismayed when assigned to duty in the smithy.

The working hours in the shop are from 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., and the work is quite as exacting and arduous as in any blacksmith shop. On the first day of her apprenticeship Miss Weld appeared promptly on time and began her work at the forge with spirit and vigor. The superintendent handed her a long leather apron, and, rolling up her sleeve above the elbow, she displayed a shapely and muscular arm. She says she acquired the muscle playing golf and declares that blacksmithing is harder than golf playing.

Miss Weld took to the work with surprising aptness and declares that she thoroughly enjoys it, and should necessity ever require she would willingly earn her living at the anvil. As with all apprentices, Miss Weld was first instructed in the art of building the fire of the forge. In this she showed more adeptness than the young men, possibly because it is somewhat of a domestic operation. Then with equal tact she learned the mysteries of cherry red, bright red and welding heats and how to keep the fire compact so that the heat will be distributed evenly to the iron. As this is half the battle in the science of welding, the young woman got along famously, her fires being regarded as the best in the shop.

Then came the art of fashioning from the redhot iron the bolts, staples, hooks, hinges and all sorts of devices that come from Vulcan's workshop. In this work she has proved fully as expert as the young men and wields the hammer with quite as much force and skill as any of them.

She apparently does not mind the blisters and bruises from handling the hammers and rough iron nor the burns that come from the flying sparks, but without cries or gloves she goes on bravely hammering away.

Miss Weld is a Bostonian and a graduate of a fashionable female seminary at Bryn Mawr. She is an attractive girl of medium height, with bright blue eyes, brown hair and a merry laugh, which does not match at all with the popular idea of the erudite woman. Her favorite study is mathematics, in which she is remarkably proficient.

She began her studies at the Institute of Technology last year, having taken a course in drafting, her work in this line receiving especial praise.

Miss Weld made her choice of the profession of marine architecture a few years ago, when a yachting party, of which she was one, put into Bristol, R. I., to repair a broken shaft. In looking over the shops and yards of the Herreshoffs, while the work was being done, the desire to be master of that craft took possession of her and grew to a serious purpose, in which she was encouraged by her family and friends. To this end she is studiously devoting her energies, thoroughly acquainting herself not only with the theory of shipbuilding, but seeking to master the mechanical part.

Realizing that to become a successful marine architect she must know all about machinery and the principle of its construction and operation, she has begun in a practical way in the blacksmith shop, from which she will soon pass to the machine shop and acquire the practical knowledge of hydraulic and electrical mechanics which are essential to success in her chosen profession.

THINGS FOR SUMMER.

New Drapery Stuffs and Dainty Hot Weather Gowns.

Nearly all the big stores are now showing immense numbers of hammocks, lounging chairs and draperies suitable for the decoration of country homes, where the great desideratum seems to be to have everything airy, transparent, or at least to suggest something in the way of coolness and comfort.

There are cretonnes with great tulips in all colors in honor of Holland's dainty little queen. For couches there are many rough Madagascar and Mozambique cloths in soft, cool green, with slight figurings, which take the form of stripes. They are fringed out at the edges.

There is Java cloth in Kutch designs for all sorts of cozy corners and draperies, and Kioto crape of cotton in very many quaint Japanese designs for window, bed and other draperies. This is 27 inches wide and very pretty indeed. It is light and also cheap.

Rooms are completely furnished in this way. The curtains, bed, bureau and dressing table draperies are all of this crape. The round bolster cover and the counterpane are also made of it, and two or three comfortable sofa pillows are of the same. Ribbons to match tie up the draperies and add a touch of elegance. In this way each room may be made distinctive by having each in a different color of the hangings.

There is what is called "fiber grenadine" for portieres in Bagdad stripes. They are effective, cool and cheap. Sometimes the Roman striped Italian silk blankets are hung for portieres, and still oftener burlaps. This last can be had printed with different figures, but really the most artistic is the plain rough burlaps in its natural color.

This may be fringed and knotted and hung on a rod with rings so that the knotted part falls down, or it may be made with a wide hem only at top and bottom, and some few have a row of Bulgarian embroidery in coarse stitches and wool.

I saw in the swellest Broadway store this week a handsome summer arrangement for a porch or parlor. The wicker chairs had stiff, rather flat cushions of burlap in natural color. Their backs were square and had a diamond of Turkey red in the center, so that the points touched the sides of the cushion, leaving burlap triangles at the corners. A sort of valance was made of folded burlap on the lower part of the chair with a red band in the center to drape it.

There was a small sofa fixed in the same way with five easy wicker chairs and a couch. A sort of Japanesy looking table was draped with the red and the burlaps. There was a screen which looked like the mats that come around tea boxes. This had diamond shaped centers with a gold embroidered crane in each one. Burlap portieres were arranged behind the furniture, and they had red borders. A Japanese matting in cream and green was on the floor. The whole looked very inviting.

The numbers of cushions for chairs and sofas, hammocks and cozy corners are astounding. Most of them are in India, Turkish, Persian and Bagdad stripes, wherein all the colors are gathered in such small compass that they do not look glaring or gaudy. These cushions are about 20 inches square and made perfectly plain. Only the cotton ones are ruffled.

The pretty Sheila portieres are there too. These are made of little seeds of a sort of plant. We call it Job's tears. They are strung on long threads, and between them are bits of bamboo colored so bring out some pretty design. They sound so pleasantly as the breeze makes them hit together.

Other pretty portieres and mantel drapery are made of the tiny yellow shells gathered at the seashore and strung together. Any one can make these, if she only has the shells. But to buy them one must be rich.

To enjoy the furniture mentioned above one must have a big, cool porch and loose, easy gowns that shall still be pretty enough and dressy enough to wear all day if one wishes to and that the pretty owners will not be ashamed of if visitors come.

One dainty gown of this description was shown me the other day. There was a sheer underdress of pale green taffeta and an outer one of dotted swiss. It had the appearance of having dropped down from the Empress Josephine's time, with a modern touch or two. The ruching, of crepe lisse around the ruffles and sleeves, was very dainty and light. A wide ribbon sash was tied high under the arms in empire style.

A pink nun's veiling is made with a full princess back, fitted sides and a full front. Around the bottom are three bias ruffles, each edged with a ruching of white silk mull. The yoke, collar and undersleeves are "all over" white lace. The ruffles to the yoke collar and sleeves are all edged with the ruching.

Materials, Designs and Styles Most In Favor.

Heavy laces are used to trim batistes having large checks or plaids, while valenciennes is the favorite for thinner goods. Some of the new muslins show glace and changeable effects and are extremely pretty.

Very narrow stripes and dots are less seen this year than designs of flowers, plaids and ribbons. On some of the finest materials the ribbon is the decorative motive, arranged in waves of knots. Pompadour floral designs appear also upon expensive goods, and there is a liking for silks having a pattern of large flowers on a ground of the same color, but a different shade.

The Louis Quinze period is actively revived by most of the new models. Not only do the woven and printed designs of the goods recall that time, but the general cut and style are of the same clear-acter, although modernized to suit the present taste. Flounces, corsages trimmed with ruches and jabots of lace, fichus and ribbons all belong to that epoch and are features of this season's wardrobe.

The cut depicts a costume of periwinkle blue cloth. The plain skirt is adorned with bias stitched bands of cloth, which rise in a point in front. The short coat is tight fitting at the back and has loose double fronts, with revers and collar faced with white moire. The coat and the close sleeves are trimmed with stitched cloth bands, and there are cut steel buttons on the fronts. The chemisette is of pink mousseline de soie. The cravat, which is drawn through jeweled rings, is of white embroidered tulle. The white straw hat has a drapery of white tulle and is trimmed with pink roses and their foliage.

THE WARDROBE.

Attractive Accessories and Trimmings For Summer Use.

Embroidery, lace and gauze—these still predominate as trimmings on hats, gowns, wraps and parasols. All is light, delicate and brilliant in effect and summery in the extreme.

Bows of plumage, gauze or lace have been frequently mentioned, but they are still in the front rank and cannot be ignored. Those of excessive length are not worn, but medium and short ones are seen in great profusion. Boas of heavy net with large chenille dots are among the prettiest, and there are others of full plaitings of gauze, the gauze being edged with fibers of ostrich plumage or loops of fine chenille.

Black or white mousseline de soie enjoys even greater favor than colored mousseline, being immensely employed for boas, ruches, trimmings and accessories, but there are novelties shown in the shape of boas of two colors of mousseline de soie. For example, black mousseline will be used over rose, or pink over white. There are also ruches or boa net, the edges of the frills being finished with tinted, iridescent spangles.

The hat shown in the illustration is of leghorn straw, and the brim is much twisted and lifted at the left side, where a large, red rose with foliage is placed beneath it. Strands of black velvet ribbon encircle the crown and form clusters of loops. In front are bunches of ripe ears of rye and a group of pink roses, buds and leaves.

Remarkable Village.

In New Guinea the village of Tupuseli is most remarkable. The houses are all supported on piles and stand out in the ocean a considerable distance from shore. This is to protect the villagers from the attacks of the dreaded head hunters, always looking out for victims. Other villages in this queer land are perched up in trees for the same reason.

REVIVAL OF THE POKE.

The Old Style Bonnet Is Now the Newest Thing In Millinery.

I think we shall all like the new bonnets and hats. Much ink has been wasted ridiculing them, but then that is how space writers make their living, and women pay very little attention to such things. If anything, it seems to fix them still firmer in their likings. That is woman's nature, and in some instances it is a good thing that it is.

The poke bonnet is here to stay—that is, if it is fastened so firmly to the head that all the breezes of Newport cannot pull it off. The original shape of a poke is a very large round flat, with a high crown, sometimes tipped forward and sometimes in a sugar loaf form. The brim is then bent far down at the sides, cut away in a half moon at the back or with that portion bent back upon the rest. This brings the front up as high above the face as the brim will allow.

The rest is a matter of taste and the milliner's art. Some of them have wreaths of roses all around the wider side of the brim, and others have a crape facing drawn smoothly over the surface, and some are shirred, while others have rows of black velvet milliner folds. It is optional whether the brim shall be set in the natural curve or bent and indented.

The prettiest and richest trimming is plumes in bunches. Flowers are used. So are ribbons and in fact all sorts of things. With all of the poke shapes strings are worn, tied under the chin. These may be narrow velvet or wide taffeta ribbon, whichever proves more becoming.

For "runabouts" there is a very chic little hat called the Newport. It is particularly well adapted to the requirements of that spirited place. The brim is flat and as round as a dollar. The crown is about three inches high and is in bell shape. That gives an opportunity for a very novel trimming—viz, a narrow band of black velvet, with a quill in front curling around the brim, standing upward or outward in sharp defiance of wind, fog or sun. And they have all these in abundance at Newport. A little ribbon bow in front or a great flaring rosette is often added.

A toque for that favored spot, for carriage or for any other very dressy function, aside from a lawn party, is rice straw, turned up all around like a close turban with a low round crown. This has one immense flower colored quill trained round the crown to the left side, while on the right one there is a large moss green velvet windmill rosette with a fancy jeweled clasp in the center. There is one row of velvet around the crown, partially hidden under the brim.

I may say that while plumes are always elegant, summer and winter, there are places where they are a delusion and a snare and an abject misery, and Newport is one. The damp sea air takes all the fluffiness and curl out of them, and they look draggled, like a wet rooster. I think I heard that some new method has been discovered by which they can resist dampness.

That reminds me to say a word about muslins and all light washable attire. A strong solution of alum water added to the rinsing water will make all cotton and linen goods fireproof. It can be added without injury, and the colors look brighter. The cloth irons even better than without it. I use a pound of alum to four gallons of water, and boil it until it is dissolved. It costs but 10 cents and it is a great satisfaction to know one is fireproof. If curtains were treated in the same way there would be many less fires.

So far there is not much bathing at Newport. Society has not all reached there, but will still be some days before they settle down for the gay days for which it is so famous. But there are some pretty suits waiting for the proper time to come. They are so scant, however, that they are hardly worth speaking of.

One suit for a young lady whose name is known the wide world over was made in France. It is of deep red and white striped taffeta and is all in one piece. The trousers are quite inches just to the knees, and there is a band of white silk over buckram, which draws them in a little, somewhat like Turkish trousers. Over this is a design of embroidered dots in the black silk soutache. The upper part is in form of a blouse, with a belt and front plait of the white braided to match. There is a white sailor collar wrought in the same way. It opens down, V shaped in front. This is held in place by a lock at without the wearer inside of it, but when she with her red slippers and black silk stockings gets into it the whole thing becomes a dream.

Another pretty suit was of white mohair, with a blouse and short skirt over the trousers, which were not gathered. There was very dark blue narrow ribbon on all the edges and on the sailor collar.

ACCESSORIES.

Guimpes, Belts and Hats to Accompany Costumes.

Decollete bodices, worn over different guimpes, are very pretty for summer and useful as well, for the guimpe may be changed according to the weather, a lined silk one being used when the air is cool, while one of mousseline de soie or embroidered nainsook may be worn for warm days. The guimpe is usually lighter than the rest of the gown.

Velvet belts, with medallions and other designs embroidered in spangles, are new and effective, and, unlike the elastic belts of jet and steel beads, do not make the waist look larger. Velvet collars to match the belts are often worn. Black velvet is the prettiest, but colored velvet is also seen. The lower edge of the collar is finished with a bead fringe.

Round hats and toques are worn with elaborate toilets, but nevertheless picturesque large hats are newer, and, although they do not monopolize favor, they enjoy a large share of it. Long strings of illusion are a becoming addition to many of these hats. The strings are attached at the back and brought around to the front, tying under the chin or else below the ear in what carping masculine critics describe as a hangman's knot. A novel idea is to pass the strings through a costly ring in tying them, but a brooch pinned in afterward will have the same effect.

A picture is given of a hat of cream brown straw. In front is a large bow of tulle to match, continuing around the crown in two torsades. A bunch of pink pompon roses is placed in the middle of the bow, and another bunch is raised above it. Beneath the brim, at each side of the front, are coques of tulle, and two black velvet strings come from the back and tie in front.

FASHION NOTES.

Costumes For Afternoon Dances and Garden Parties.

In Paris afternoon dancing parties are becoming more and more fashionable. They are for very young people, as a rule, and, although the rooms are lighted artificially, daylight being excluded as far as possible, the entertainment is not like a ball. The mammas or other relatives who accompany the young girls, to play propriety, wear street costume, including the hat or bonnet, and until lately the dancers appeared in high necked gowns, evening dress being very properly deemed appropriate for evening only. Now, however, an innovation is creeping in, and thin, low cut gowns are being adopted by the majority of the young girl guests, although this is not in the best taste.

For garden parties thin costumes are always chosen, and the occasion offers opportunity for gayety of color and the legitimate exercise of fanciful taste, picturesqueness of effect being the special aim.

The cut shows a gown of violet and white glace taffeta with white spots. The skirt closes at the side, where it folds over, the flaring finished with a band of violet silk, above which is a continuous application of guipure. The full bodice is shirred under two bands of guipure and has a guipure yoke, framed in a bertha of white silk incrusted with guipure and headed by a violet silk ruche. The collar is also bordered with a violet ruche, and the belt is of violet silk. The sleeves are corded between the shoulder and elbow.

VARIOUS NOTES.

Suggestions For the Household—A Pretty Costume.

Papered walls may be cleaned with stale French bread—that is, bread which contains no grease, care being taken that it is not dry enough to scratch the paper. The bread must be cut in thick slices and rubbed downward from top to bottom of the wall, the crust being held in the hand.

In giving an elaborate dinner, a new idea is to have two menus, one for the dinner proper, the other for the dessert.

GIRL'S COSTUME.

The latter menu is presented just before the appearance of the dessert. There are all sorts of devices and designs for the decoration of menus, hand painted ones being the most elegant.

Lace, so lavishly employed throughout the wardrobe, now composes entire hats. The lace thus used is heavy and is stretched over a frame of fine, invisible wire, the trimming chosen being of the lightest and airiest descriptions.

The illustration given today shows a very pretty costume for a girl 12 years old. It is of lavender veiling, the skirt being gathered a little at the waist and trimmed with three narrow bias bands of dark blue surah, forming a point in front. The bodice, also gathered at the waist, has a bertha of white batiste embroidered in open designs and edged with lace, which frames a yoke of dark blue surah. The yoke is cut square at the neck. The cravat of blue surah has lace ends, and the half length sleeves are finished with a frill of lace. The sash ends are blue surah. The lavender straw hat is trimmed with a knot of blue surah and a white plume.

SUMMER FABRICS.

Light and Clinging Goods In the Front of Favor.

This season is a season of triumph for soft, clinging fabrics. Flexible silks, crepes de chine, gauzes and mousselines de soie are seen in immense varieties of weave and color and compose exquisite gowns as light as a cobweb and exceedingly cool. Then there are albatross cloths, veiling and crepons to add to the list, while among wash fabrics the range of choice is bewilderingly large. Among the prettiest designs are fine nainsooks in mixed plaids of the most delicate tones —rose, turquoise, lemon, pale green and lavender—which could not be surpassed in dainty coloring. If ribbons are used in these plaid costumes, plain ribbons are preferable to plaid ones, plaid ribbons, on the contrary, appearing to better advantage with plain goods.

VEILING GOWN.

Printed cotton muslins and batistes show attractive floral designs, usually of a rambling character, covering the ground rather than dotting it.

An illustration is given which shows a gown of violet veiling. It is cut in the princess style, with a slight train, and crosses over to the left side, where it closes. Around the foot of the skirt is a band of white cloth with violet applications, the band meeting half way up the left side. There is a large plastron of guipure de venise which is surrounded by a fichu drapery of violet mousseline de sole trimmed with a double plaiting. The plaited collar is of violet veiling. A gold buckle fastens the fichu at the waist, and the sleeves are plain. The hat, of white straw, is trimmed with violet ribbon, a jeweled buckle and yellow flowers.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHAT TO WEAR AND HOW TO MAKE IT

May Manton's Hints Regarding Seasonable Toilettes.

The model shown in the illustration is of pale blue pique in a heavy rib. The yoke, which is single pointed, is seamed at the centre-back and extends over the shoulders onto the fronts. The latter are full and a pouch slightly, the gathers at both neck and waist being collected in a narrow space at each side of centre-front. The edge of the right side is finished with a box-plait, and the closing is effected by means of button-holes worked through the centre and buttons sewed to the left side. The body portion of the back is slightly full and is arranged in gathers at the yoke edge and again at the waist-line. Between it and the fronts are small under-arm gores. The sleeves are one-seamed in regulation shirt style and are finished at the wrists with straight cuffs. At the neck is a high collar. With it is worn a string tie of black satin, and at the waist is a belt of black silk.

To make this waist for a lady in the medium size will require three and one-fourth yards of thirty-six-inch material or three and one-fourth yards of thirty-inch goods.

Dress For School Girls.

A sensible dress for school girls whose course includes daily gymnastics, but whose time between hours is too short to allow of extensive change of dress, is this, advocated by a prominent physical culture teacher of New York. The waist should be a blouse or shirt waist, made in the prevailing style, but loose enough to allow freedom for exercise. Underneath the dress skirt, which can be readily slipped off, the divided skirt for gymnastics, and still underneath the warm but loose flannel underwear. This dressed, all the girl has to do is be ready for her exercise is to slip off the dress skirt and change her boots for the gymnasium shoes. Exercise finished, the dress skirt may be resumed and a bolero jacket slipped on over the waist to avoid the danger of taking cold. The ordinary corseting supporter is considered objectionable, as it impedes the circulation and produces round shoulders.

Girl's Reefer Jacket.

This stylish reefer of fancy mixed cotting in ecru, tan and brown, shows a new feature in the broad yoke collar of cerise faced cloth that is handsomely decorated with rows of open meshed brown mohair braid. The reefer has always been a popular top garment for young girls, but this season it easily leads all others, and as here presented is quite up-to-date. No more convenient, comfortable or simply constructed style can be attempted by the home dressmaker, and an exact reproduction of this picture can be made from this pattern with hardly any trouble at all. The loose-fitting fronts lap widely in double-breasted style, the closing being effected to the left shoulder by buttons and buttonholes. The standing collar closes with the jacket at the left shoulder, and the broad yoke collar can either be included in the seam or finished separately. Reefer back and under arm portions join the fronts in shoulder and under arm seams, the three centre seams ending a few inches from the lower edge, which is stylishly finished in two wide tabs. The two-seamed sleeves are shaped according to the latest mode and gathered at the top. Reefer jackets like this in bright colors trimmed with black braid are exceedingly becoming to young girls, and will prove an occasion demands all through the summer. To cut this jacket for a girl of eight years and one-half yards of material fifty-four inches wide will be required.

A Famous Cook.

In south Australia all adults enjoy the rights of franchise, and Mr. Kingston, the prime minister, says that the women appreciate the power and always use it intelligently.

DIAMOND PAVEMENT.

THE KIMBERLEY ROAD CONTAINS FORTUNES IN PRECIOUS STONES.

The Public There Travel on a High Road Literally Growing With Diamonds—One Small Piece of Road the Size of a Bedroom Yielded $100,000 Worth.

It is not often that it is given to man, outside of the favored gentleman who figured in the stirring story of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp and kindred productions of rich Oriental imagination, to travel daily on a highroad literally growing with diamonds. When such an unusual privilege is vouchsafed, it would appear to be the proper thing to admit that one might love the very ground he walked on. Until a few years ago there was such a road, and it was neither a vision of the pipe nor the press agent it was located in the Kimberley district in South Africa, and when a man walked over it he walked over millions of dollars worth of the precious stones.

Five thousand dollars a yard was the record of some parts of the road. The diamonds are not there now, as it will do the gentleman good to take a ticket for Kimberley and seek to find a fortune in the street. It seems that when the diamond mining industry was in the very zenith of youth, as it is to-day, there was a vexing scarcity of water in the Kimberley country. So, when a miner couldn't get a supply of water to help him in his search he had to do the best he could and hustle around with his tools in the dry earth. He would spade here and there, until he struck a lump of earth which held the eagerly-sought prize. Then he would abandon the little mound of earth his spade had overturned and seek for diamonds in another place. After a while, several years in fact, these mounds amounted to a considerable obstruction to travel and further digging, and the earth was in the way, but no one would volunteer to cart it away. Finally the Kimberley municipal council offered to use the dirt in macadamizing the roads around the city, which was branching out and reaching quite respectable proportions. The offer was gladly accepted by the mine owners, and the mounds were cleared away.

Nearly a score of years after there was a drop in the diamond market. The price of the stones fell, and, in order to bring about a return of high figures, the mine owners decided to restrict their output. This necessitated a big cut in the pay roll, and, as a result, the Kimberley district was soon over-run with unemployed miners. Then some of the wise men in the land came to the conclusion that they might pick up a few overlooked gems from the highroad if they could get municipal permission and a plentiful supply of water. They got both, for each year a portion of the road which had been strengthened by the mound dirt was turned over to the men, and they worked in it with astonishing results. Diamonds to the value of $200,000 were recovered yearly for several years. From one little piece of road no bigger than a bed room there was taken $100,000 worth of diamonds.

The Original Rock of Ages.

Sir William H. Willis, member of Parliament for Bristol, writes of the origin of Augustus Montague Toplady's grand hymn, "The Rock of ages," as follows:

"Toplady was one day overtaken by a heavy thunderstorm in Burrington Coombe, on the edge of my property, a lovely glen running up into the heart of the Mendip range, and there, taking shelter between two massive piers of our native limestone rock, he penned the hymn."

"ROCK OF AGES."

An illustration of the rock is here given. This it the hymn as Toplady wrote it:

Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hid myself in thee.
Let the water and the blood
From thy side, a healing flood,
Be of sin the double cure,
Save from wrath and keep me pure.

Should my tears forever flow,
Should my zeal no longer know,
When I rise to worlds unknown
And behold thee on thy throne,
Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee.

The Queen Bee.

A queen bee sometimes lays at the rate of two eggs a minute, and the total weight of the eggs is one and a half times that of her own body on a summer day. As she lives four or five years, she may lay about 1,500,000 eggs in the course of her life. Her eyes are smaller than those of the other bees, owing to long residence in the hive. Her sting is 200 times smaller in diameter than a pin, and as she can seldom draw it out after stinging a person, she leaves it in and dies afterward.

AN ODD LANDMARK.

A SIGHT THAT NEVER FAILS TO EXCITE THE INTEREST OF PASSERSBY.

The Upturned Bow Section of the Yacht Caprice Is Now Used as a Paintshop—The Novel and Ingenious Operation by Which It Was Procured.

One of the most curious landmarks along Long Island Sound, and one that never fails to excite the puzzled attention of the yachtsman who sees it for the first time, stands on the shore of Northport Bay. From the distance it looks like a large Indian tepee. On a nearer view it is seen to be the bow of a finely modelled yacht, apparently sticking right up out of the earth. Approaching closer, the puzzled yachtsman discovers it is really a house.

This freak structure stands in Hawkins's shipyard, overlooking the bay.

AN ODD LANDMARK.

Its history involves the story of a novel and ingenious operation on the old steam yacht Caprice, by which she was transformed into another boat and a building. The Caprice was sixty-six feet long, and was purchased in 1895 by Benjamin M. Whitlock, who admired the graceful lines of the boat. He decided to have a larger boat, however, and wanted her to be a duplicate in model of the Caprice. To insure this, he determined to have the Caprice extended fore and aft, keeping as much of the original midship section of the hull as possible. He accordingly engaged H. J. Gielow, the designer of fast-going steam yachts ,to make the plans, and the work was done in Hawkins's yard at Port Jefferson.

The Caprice, which had formerly been the Henry Douglas, built in 1885 for Charles Schoen of Philadelphia, was carefully taken apart. When this was completed the old yacht stood in three sections. From the midship section, only twelve feet long, a new sixty-eight-foot one over all was built and named the Telka. About this time Hawkins discovered that he needed a new paintshop, so he bought the complete bow section and stood it on end in his yard, with the sharp cutwater pointing to the sky. In the starboard side of the deck he cut a door, and the forward hatch served nicely as a window.

Hawkins then laid a building twenty feet high that afforded him a large, roomy paintshop, and he concluded with an absolutely water tight roof. The short bowsprit he makes use of as a flagstaff, and that is what most people think it is when they see it first from the distance he copies the clean, bright bow of a big boat sticking up from among the trees with the union jack flying from her stern.

How to Tell an Oyster's Age.

He who wishes may find out the exact age of an oyster, provided he has not the telltale evidence in teeth. The lines in the groove of the hinge of the shell tell the whole story, each line representing a year. An oyster is of age at four years—that is, he is old enough to vote, take care of a family and go to market. Going to market is a dangerous time for oysters. A four-year-old oyster is particularly palatable. By this it must not be supposed that after an oyster has passed the juvenile period, which is five, six or even ten wrinkles on his shell, he is a back number. Indeed, there are records of oysters being eaten just after celebrating their thirtieth birthday, and in most cases they formed a delicious meal. Thirty is an unusual age for an oyster to attain, because few get that far

Won By Public Sentiment.

Public sentiment has again won a victory, this time in the decision of the Plainfield Street Railway Company to agree to inaugurate a complete transfer system between Plainfield and Dunellen. Though the Street Railway Company had persistently declined to act on the ground that it meant a financial loss to them, or at least not sufficient gain to warrant their entering into such an arrangement, the fact that the matter was taken up by citizens at large has resulted in their consenting to do the very thing which they had declared they could not do. We are glad to give credit to the company for their bowing to public sentiment, but, notwithstanding, the fact still remains that they have been double-dealing with the people.

By their agreement to issue transfers for passengers to ride on the cars of the Brunswick Traction Company, the local Company acknowledges that the public convenience and accommodation is served by the arrangement. And if this is so now, it was so months ago. Certainly, under the pressure that was being brought to bear on them from various sources, together with the fact that they knew the situation thoroughly by experience from day to day, the Plainfield Street Railway Company was in a position to realize this quite as forcibly from a business standpoint then as at the present day.

In the face of this condition of affairs, however, they have been compelling the Brunswick Traction Company to exact these additional fares from passengers whose accommodation necessitated their using both roads in going to Dunellen from this city, or else forcing the passengers to walk a considerable distance. Whichever way it happened to be it was an outrage upon the public which gives to the railway company the only valuable asset that it possesses.

Now that the company has agreed to act fair, let us hope that they will continue to do so. And above all do not lose sight of the fact that public sentiment is the most powerful influence in existence.

Assess at True Value.

If Plainfield has her way there is going to be trouble in Union county over the way property is assessed in various portions of the bailiwick. The arbitrary and unreasonable action of the County Board of Assessors in raising the total valuation of Plainfield almost $200,000 over the amount submitted by the local Board of Assessors, was taken up by the Common Council last night with the intention of securing for this city a more equitable rating.

As pointed out by Councilman Hetfield there is no uniform rate of assessment in the county—one section assessing as low as 25 per cent. and another as high as 50 and 60 per cent. Of course, such a system is as unfair as it is unbusinesslike. Every section of the county should be assessed at the same rate of valuation.

This immediately brings up the question of what should be a fair and equitable rate. There is no two ways of looking at this matter in an honest light. True value, or as near to it as the assessors are able to judge, is what should be placed upon all property for purpose of raising taxes. The law says that this shall be done, but for years assessors have habitually, and with the approval of the public, violated their oaths in this respect.

At the meeting of the County Assessors in Elizabeth Monday when some one suggested that all property should be assessed at true value, the point was raised as to how an assessor was able to determine true value, as many properties are not for sale and consequently have no market price. But yet they say it is easy to assess at 30, 40 or 50 per cent. Thirty, 40 or 50 per cent. of what? There must be a basis for them to work on, and if it is easy to determine what a percentage of the value of property is, it is obvious that it is as easy to determine the true value.

Several New Jersey counties—notably Passaic county—have been dealing with the problem which has now arisen in Union county due to Plainfield's unfair treatment—with odious results. It has been the consensus of opinion that the only satisfactory and fair way of assessing property is at the true value.

May the day not be long when this rule prevails.

City Jail is a Disgrace.

It is a disgrace upon the city that the present police station is maintained. To spend one night among the vermin that infest every nook and cranny of the dilapidated structure that years ago outlived its usefulness as a jail, if, indeed, it ever possessed any, is severer punishment that ninety-nine out of one hundred prisoners confined there deserve. It is the profound and evident duty of the Common Council to take steps at once for the vacation of this rookery.

The unfortunates whom fate has involved in the meshes of the law, often times without justice or in accordance with fair principles, are outraged beyond amends by being thrust into a cell where it is necessary, if they are to maintain a cleanly condition, to stand up erect until released in order to escape the bugs and other odious crawling and creeping things with which the so-called jail is populated.

This disgraceful police station has been in its present condition for years and it is a duty which the Common Council owes to the respect and decency of the city to stop regarding it with a passing indifference, and to at once take steps to have the police and their prisoners located where there will at least be an avoidance of vermin.

An Enterprising Mayor.

Mayor Smalley, of North Plainfield, is a busy man at all times, but notwithstanding he is devoting considerable time to the interests of the city and borough that do not devolve upon him in the capacity of Mayor. This work is being done as president of the Plainfield Advancement Association, which has been organized to boom anything and everything that will better Plainfield's business, industrial or residential interests.

The latest scheme of the Mayor's is to hold a clam-bake next month as an attraction to get together a representative class of men who may be interested in the work of the Association by having their palates tickled. He has appointed a committee of hustlers to make the arrangements, and it is expected that the function will be a success along the line it is intended for.

Municipal Ownership.

The Plainfield correspondent of the New York World has this to say of the agitation in Plainfield for municipal ownership of the water supply:

The question of municipal ownership of water works is one of the matters that is now agitating the minds of taxpayers in Plainfield. Though the subject has been discussed spasmodically during the last few years, and former Mayor Fisk and Mayor Rockfellow have urged in their messages to the Common Council that negotiations for the purchase of the city water supply be undertaken, nothing material has come from it. Now, however, it is felt that results will be observed in a short time, from the resolution introduced by Councilman Hetfield into the Council, calling upon the fire and water committee to take up the subject and investigate the question of municipal ownership of water works in a thorough manner. The Councilmanic committee has been unable to do anything that can be reported as yet, but the various phases of the subject are being looked into carefully. It is the conservative sentiment of business men that with even a much more moderate charges to private consumers than new prevails, the city would be able to purchase the plant and secure the use of water for city purposes without cost and pay off the bonds that it would be necessary to issue to raise the funds to buy, in less than forty years.

Something Wrong Somewhere.

The New Brunswick Home News says, pertinently and justly, in regard to the wrecked Middlesex bank: "It is time for somebody to rise up and inquire what has the State Commissioner of Banking been doing that his eyes were closed to one of the most stupendous and remarkable defalcations in the history of our State banks."

This suggests the Newark Advertiser to say: "There are twenty-one State banks in New Jersey with a total capital of $4,104,419 of deposits reported January 1st this year, the total liabilities footing up to $11,832,960 29. The defalcations of Cashier Valentine, of the Middlesex Bank, made possible by the carelessness of the bank directory and the apparent neglect by the State Banking department, reflect upon all the other twenty State institutions.

Jersey to Do Her Part.

Governor Voorhees says that he is disposed to send the whole National Guard of the State to represent the State of New Jersey in honoring Dewey on the occasion of his reception by the people in New York city next October, but the Legislature had not appropriated money and there was no available funds in the State treasury to defray the expenses of transportation. "But I have the matter under advisement," said the Governor, "and some way may present itself that the world will know that New Jersey recognizes the great service done for the American people by the hero of Manila."

Celebrated His Birthday.

Harry Rottberg, of West Third street, was eleven years old Monday, and last evening he gave a party to a number of his friends. There were about fifteen in all present and the evening was passed in playing games and in having a jolly good time, after which refreshments were served. The young celebrant received a number of very useful presents from his friends, today.

The total immigration to the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30th, 1899, was 311,707; and of this number of arrivals 195,277 were males. The Philadelphia Record says that this great proportion of males is accounted for by the fact that many of the married immigrants expect to return after a more or less prolonged stay to their old homes. But the total immigration is now far below the figures of former years, when sometimes the total annual arrivals were above 800,000. Hence, in view of the smaller proportion of foreign-born inhabitants to the total population of the United States there is no occasion for the alarm which the Nativists are now manifesting in regard to immigration.

WALKERS WERE THERE.

BIG FAMILY GATHERING HELD AT NEW MARKET.

Descendants of Runyon Walker, Nearly Fifty in Number, Met at the Home of S. R. Dayton—Those Present.

New Market, July 25—Children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and other relatives to the number of fifty, gathered around Runyon Walker Saturday afternoon and evening at the home of his son-in-law, S. R. Dayton, of this place. This family reunion was made an occasion of general rejoicing. Runyon Walker is one of the oldest citizens of Piscataway township and he is well-known through all this section. He is now ninety-two years of age and still quite hale and hearty. He has been making his home of late with his son-in-law, Former Freeholder Calvin Drake, of Skelton.

The afternoon was spent on the lawn, where the young people entertained with games of various kinds. A sumptuous dinner was served and then the festivities were continued in the evening.

The seven children of Mr. Walker were all present with their families. They were Mrs. John Ross, of Plainfield; Louis Walker, of Piscataway; Mrs. Calvin Drake, of Skelton; Mrs. S. R. Dayton, of New Market; Mrs. Isaac R. Giles, of Plainfield; Firman Walker, of Piscataway, and Mrs. W. J. Nelson, of New Market. There were nineteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren present. There were a few who could not attend.

Among the other guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Runyon and Miss Laura Runyon, of Plainfield; Miss Ada Williams, of Berlin, N. Y.; Miss Minnie Wallace and William Hughes, of Tuckahoe, N. J., and Miss Threea Runyon, of New Market.

LAID AT REST.

Funeral of James Z. Petrie, a Well-Known Musician.

The funeral of the late James Z. Petrie were held Sunday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Harris on Fourth street. A large number of the friends of the deceased, who had admired his musical abilities ask personal traits were present to pay their respects. Rev. Dr. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue church officiated and made a feeling address. Charles Lewis rendered splendidly the hymns, "One Sweet Hour of Prayer" and "Forever With the Lord." The body was encased in a handsome casket upon which had been placed Mr. Petrie's violin, the instrument which had won for him so many friends and had been his constant companion in his last hours. It was almost concealed from view by entwining smilax which covered the casket. After the services the body was shipped to Truxton, N. Y., his native village, for burial.

SIXTY CARS SMASHED.

Freight Wreck on Central Railroad Caused by Train Parting.

A bad freight wreck occurred on the Central Railroad of New Jersey near White Haven early Saturday morning. While a train of eighty loaded coal and freight cars was coming east at a high rate of speed the train parted and shortly afterwards came together with great force.

The freight cars were loaded with heavy materials and nearly all of it was thrown upon the ground. Of the eighty cars in the train there were only about fifteen which escaped damage, and many of them were demolished entirely. There was nobody hurt. The loss to the company's rolling stock will reach $45,000.

Dr Connelly, Medical Examiner

The Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association of the United States concluded Monday the week's session of its fifth biennial convention in Asbury Park and adjourned sine die. The supreme trustees in executive session re-elected Dr. F. J. Connelly, of Newark, supreme medical examiner. The trustees settled upon Detroit as the place of meeting for the next convention, two years hence.

BOYNE BLAMES HIMSELF

SAID HE WASN'T ROBBED IN GALBRAITH'S SALOON.

Contradicted the Statements He Made to the Mayor Sunday and Said He Caused All the Trouble Himself.

Fred Boyne walked into the station house last Tuesday with Daniel Galbraith, proprietor of the saloon on West Third street, from which he was summarily ejected Saturday night. Half a score of Galbraith's friends accompanied them. Boyne's ideas of the trouble Saturday night had changed materially since Sunday when he made several statements to the Mayor.

When the hearing of Boyne, on the charge of being drunk and disorderly, was called, Patrolman Weinzenreid was put on the stand. His testimony was that he had arrested Boyne at the request of Bartender Keefe who had put Boyne out of the saloon. Keefe then said that Boyne had tried to raise a disturbance there, and that he had been compelled to put Boyne out twice and finally asked the officer to arrest him.

Boyne completely exonerated Galbraith from any implication in the trouble. He declared that he did not know when he had been robbed and that he had been to blame for the trouble in the saloon and that the barkeeper did right in putting him out. Then he returned to his position along side of Galbraith.

Under such circumstances, City Judge Runyon said that he felt justified in suspending sentence on Boyne with a warning to keep out of trouble in the future.

THROWN FROM HIS HORSE

DANIEL RUNKLE BADLY SHAKEN UP AT PLATTSBURG, N. Y.

Young Runkle is an Enthusiastic Horseman and Spends Much of His Time on Horseback While on His Vacation

A despatch from Plattsburg, N. Y., tells of the injury of Daniel Runkle, son of H. G. Runkle, of West Eighth street, by being thrown from his horse Monday on the Lake Shore Drive, near the Hotel Champlain. He sustained several painful bruises and was badly shaken up but was not seriously injured.

Young Runkle is an enthusiastic horseman and spends much of his time on horseback while on his vacation. He is now spending his summer with the rest of the family at the Hotel Chaplain. H. G. Runkle was in New York Monday but returned to Plattsburg that night. The latter is president of the Plattsburg Light, Heat and Power Company.

Withdraws His Bid.

As Patsy Christmas, a bidder for the work of madamizing East Second street and Richmond street, did not receive his quotation on stone, until after he submitted his bid, and in view of the fact that the price of stone has raised, he has withdrawn his bid, thus leaving C. M. Meeker the lowest bidder. Mr. Meeker bid $1.44 for Richmond street and $1.39 for Second street. The bids have been referred to the Plainfield Street Railway Company, who are to do the work, but as yet no reply has been received by Commissioner Gavett.

Church to be Closed.

After Sunday the Congregational church on West Seventh street will be closed until the second Sunday in September. During that time the necessary repairs will be made. Tomorrow evening the last of the Wednesday evening prayer meetings until September will be held. The topic will be "Nebuchadnezzar's Pride and Its Punishment." The last church service will be held Sunday morning. The Christian Endeavor Society will also give up its meetings during that time.

WELCOME FOR SEWELL.

JERSEY REPUBLICANS TO GREET HOME-COMING SENATOR.

To Meet the G. O. P. Leader With a Special Steamer and Brass Band—Many Will Do Honor to the Senator.

Arrangements on an elaborate scale are being made to give United States Senator Wm J. Sewell an enthusiastic reception on his return from Europe. The Senator is expected to arrive home August 11th, and a large party of the leading Republicans of New Jersey will go down New York Bay to meet the incoming steamer. It is expected that at quarantine, in the lower part of the harbor, General Sewell will be transferred from the ocean steamer upon which he will return to the commodious vessel that will carry his ardent supporters out of New York. A brass band will furnish music, and dinner will be served on the boat.

The committee in charge of the affair comprises Congressman Henry C. Loudenslager, of the First district; State Comptroller Wm. S. Hancock and Frank F. Patterson, Jr., of Camden. Nearly all the State officials will be included in the welcoming party, and invitations have been sent out to the leading Republicans all over the State.

Word has been received from Gen Sewell to the effect that his health has been very greatly improved by the trip abroad. The gathering of prominent Republicans to do honor to Gen. Sewell on his home-coming will mark the opening of the fall campaign.

HORSE WANTS AN OWNER

GEORGE BECKER FOUND IT NEAR AVON PARK.

Animal is a Sorry Specimen But Carriage and Harness are in Good Condition—It Was Tied to a Tree.

In this case it was the owner rather than the horse that had been stolen. George Becker, who lives on the road that leads from Park avenue at Avon Park to the grounds of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, found the animal, with a buggy attached, Tuesday morning at 4 o'clock. The horse was a sad specimen with extremely prominent bones and looked as if a good meal would do it a world of good.

When Becker went out to the barn yesterday morning his dog drew his attention down the road toward Park avenue. The strange horse was hitched to a tree by the rein thirty feet from the roadway. The horse was a black with both hind feet unshod and rather small. His breathing apparatus was evidently out of order.

The harness was in good condition and was marked on the bridle by an initial, "B." The buggy was a black one, in good condition, with a lap-robe and the stump of a whip in it.

Becker took the horse and buggy home, and fed the animal which was very hungry. He waited for the owner to appear, but none came. A stranger came to the house yesterday afternoon and inquired the name of the owner of the place. He wore a straw hat and was cheaply dressed. In response to Becker's inquiries he said that he did not lose a horse, but did not explain his errand.

This morning Becker drove the horse to town and notified Sergeant Kiely of the circumstances of the finding of the rig. At the advice of the Sergeant he drove the animal home instead of putting it up in a local livery stable to await its owner. There is no clue to the owner.

Compton Held for the Grand Jury

Halstead C. Compton, who is charged with shooting little Victor L. Houston, the grandson of Isaac E. Houston, last Thursday, appeared before Justice Nash Monday afternoon with his attorney, S. S. Swackhamer. He waived examination and gave bail in the sum of $200 for his appearance before the Grand Jury, L. L. Manning, the well-known marble dealer, went on his bond.

B. FRANK CORIELL MAY BE SHERIFF

He Will be a Candidate Under Certain Conditions.

DEPENDS HOW THINGS GO.

IF SHRIEVALTY COMES TO PLAINFIELD HE WILL TRY TO GET IT.

Mr. Coriell's Candidacy Puts a New Phase on the Political Situation in Union County—He Will Have Strong Backing for the Office if He Goes in to Win It—Some Other Interesting Facts.

The Union county Republican political situation, with respect to the selection of candidates for the county offices this fall, took on a new phase today in the announcement that under certain conditions Deputy County Clerk B. Frank Coriell, of this city, would become a candidate for Sheriff.

There has been some talk that Mr. Coriell might aspire to become County Clerk, but this is mere talk and has no substance on the part of Mr. Coriell's real intentions. Mr. Coriell realizes that as County Clerk Howard, his superior, is a candidate for renomination it would be a small courtesy for him to enter the field and try to deprive his friend of what he considers but his just political dues.

In the event of County Clerk Howard being renominated and Senator Cross being chosen to serve in the Legislature again this next session, Plainfield would more than likely be offered the shrievalty nomination for one of the faithful Republicans of this city. This proceeding would cause discontinuance among the Houston forces in Elizabethport, but Plainfielders who are watching the political situation cannot see how all the Elizabeth candidates are going to win, and Houston is as likely to be defeated as any of them.

It is in this view of the probable situation that Mr. Coriell's candidacy for Sheriff is brought about. If the nomination comes to Plainfield he will make a strong effort to secure the plum, and it is said that he will have solid and influential backing in his canvass. Mr. Coriell has always been a loyal Republican, but never a very active factor in county affairs. He is a conservative, thorough-going business man, and is regarded by his friends as a strong card for the county Republican ticket if his name is put on it.

FISH AND GAME LAWS.

Compilation Issued by State Commissioner With Synopsis of Prohibitions.

The State Board of Fish and Game Commissioners has issued for distribution copies of the fish and game laws compiled to date. These are accompanied by a table showing the open and close season for all kinds of game and fish, together with some hints for the guidance of sportsmen.

As compared with the mass of game legislation of former years the work of the latest Legislature in this direction seems unimportant. There was Senator Stokes' bill which afforded amusement for the upper House on many a dull night. The bill makes it unlawful to kill or have in possession any ring-necked pheasant or deer for the next three years.

There was also a bill empowering the Fish and Game Commissioners to issue permits to collectors of birds, their eggs and nests for scientific purposes only. The holder of such a permit must pay a dollar to cover the expenses of the permit and must furnish a bond of $200 to the State. The certificates are made out for one year, and may be renewed at the discretion of the Board.

Under the caption, "What is always unlawful," the Board says:

To take or to attempt to take any game except by the use of guns held at arm's length. Fine, $50.

To take or to attempt to take any fish in any manner, excepting with hook and line, excepting spearing of eels, suckers and carp, taking minnows for bait with a seine not more than twenty-five feet long, and taking eels with pots or baskets or weirs between the fifteenth of September and the first of November, and excepting also, but only as to the tributaries of the Delaware above Trenton falls and the streams flowing into such tributaries, the taking of catfish and eels with eel weirs and baskets and setlines between the fifteenth of August and the first of November. Fine, $50.

To have trapped game in possession. Fine, $20.

To hunt Sunday or carry firearms in the fields or woods Sunday. Fine, $20.

To pollute streams or use medicated bait or explosives of any kind for the taking of fish. Fine, $100 to $500.

To draw off waters to take fish. Fine from $25 to $250.

To use set lines in water inhabited by pickerel, bass, perch or trout. Fine, $25.

G. O. P. NEEDS SOOTHING.

TROUBLE APPREHENDED AMONG THE YOUNG LEADERS.

General Sewell Hurrying Home From Europe in Order to Wave the Wand of Peace Among the Disturbing Element.

Trenton, July 24—Some of the Republican leaders of New Jersey express a fear that, owing to the aspirations of certain members of their party to become dictators with regard to nominations and appointments to office, there is danger of the party losing votes and running the risk of a defeat at the next election. It is well-known that some of the younger politicians would like to take the management of affairs in their own hands and conduct campaigns according to their own ideas and without consultation with the experienced leaders who have done so well during the last five or six years. Should these young men be given their way it is the prediction of a prominent leader that the party will go to pieces and the Democrats will be restored to power sooner than even they themselves expect.

There is a loud call on Gen. Sewell to come home from Europe, that he may take a hand in disciplining the unruly elements so that the welfare of the party may be promoted. It is reported that the General has heard something about what has been going on in his absence, and that consequently he has concluded to abridge his trip abroad. He will return home, it is said, about the middle of August. Certainly, if there is any trouble in his party, especially in South Jersey, he is the only man who can straighten things out. And from all accounts there is trouble, and the sooner his master hand gets to work the better it will be for all who are concerned in keeping the party in the ascendant.

ROOSEVELT WILL SPEAK

At the Ocean Grove Summer School, on Thursday, Aug. 3.

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, Governor of the State of New York, who rendered the nation invaluable service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and who, with marvelous energy, in 60 days organized, equipped and drilled the Rough Riders and led them victoriously to the heights of San Juan before Santiago, has positively engaged to speak at the Ocean Grove Summer School, Thursday evening, Aug. 3d. Dr. Price, dean of the school, visited Oyster Bay this week and received positive assurance from His Excellency that he will speak in the great Auditorium on the date named, his subject being "Practical Politics and Decent Politics." The Central Railroad of New Jersey has placed at the disposal of the school a private car for the distinguished guest and those who will accompany him. Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, if able to do so, will welcome Gov. Roosevelt at Jersey City, and extending to him the hospitality of the State, will accompany him to Ocean Grove, and when the hour arrives for his address will present him to the vast audience sure to be assembled in this, the largest real auditorium on the continent.

Fell Dead at His Brother's House.

Somerville, July 25.—John Ryan, a section boss on the Central Railroad, dropped dead at the residence of his brother, Michael Ryan, on Third street, Sunday night. There seems to be a strange fatality hanging about the Ryan family. There were four brothers. Thomas was drowned in Peters' brook some time ago, and Philip had both legs cut off by a freight train while on duty in the Central Railroad yard at Communipaw. The father, Philip Ryan, was a well-known railroad man.

DEMOCRATS PLAN FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Chairman Gourley Tells of Work at the Committee Meeting.

TO STRENGTHEN THE PARTY.

COUNTY REPRESENTATIVES WILL TALK OVER THE OUTLOOK.

The Great Object to be Sought for Among the Leaders Will be Harmony—Senator Gorman May be at the Meeting and National Affairs May Then be Incidentally Discussed.

Paterson, July 25.—William B. Gourley, chairman of the Democratic State committee, returned to Paterson yesterday after an absence of three days, during which, it is said, he was in conference at Long Branch with State leaders in relation to the plans to be brought forward at a meeting of the committee to be held at Asbury Park, August 7th. The call for the meeting at the Coleman House was issued yesterday.

The preliminary arrangements for a vigorous fall campaign will be made. One of Mr. Gourley's chief aims, it is understood, will be to more closely unite the State committee and the various county committees. He has asked that each county committee be represented at the meeting August 7th. The representatives will be asked to give their views as to how the party can be strengthened in their respective districts so that the State Board can be in a position to assist in bringing about any reforms that may be desired.

Mr. Gourley said yesterday: "There are a variety of subjects to be discussed, and the steps to be taken toward reorganization will depend largely on these discussions. We expect to be in good fighting trim for the fall campaign, and you will find a united and enthusiastic Democracy with its shoulder to the political wheel."

How about the story that ex Senator Arthur P. Gorman, of Maryland, will attend the meeting at Asbury Park, and launch his boom for the Presidential nomination?" Mr. Gourley was asked.

The State chairman replied: "Mr. Gorman may be there and other Democrats well-known throughout the country may be on hand, but I doubt very much if National affairs are discussed. They may come up incidentally or in a very informal way, but the real purpose of the meeting is to take steps to reorganize the party in the State.

ing room eating their supper. They came to the door leading to the pool room and inquired as to what was going on. She saw Harry Dunham lying on the floor and she asked him if he was hurt, and he replied in the negative. She then went back to her supper after which the second shot was fired.

Edward Mitchell and Libson Pierson were in the pool room when the shooting occurred and they will probably be the most valuable witnesses. It is also reported that Prosecutor Voorhees has been to Trenton to interview Roantree and get his evidence.

It has been reported that Herman Dentz was present at the time of the shooting, this is incorrect, for at that time Mr. Dentz was dead, and Mrs. Dentz was running the place. It is not known where William Kohn, the bartender, is. People who ought to know say that Lisbon Pierson will make one of the very best witnesses for the prosecution.

Officials from New Brunswick have been visiting New Market for the purpose of collecting material for the prosecution, and it is reported that much has been secured.

COULDN'T TAKE COFFIN IN HOUSE.

Difficulties Attending the Funeral of William M. Ibrie.

New Brunswick, July 26—The funeral of William Muirhead Ibrie took place yesterday. Owing to the great size of the body, a special coffin had to be constructed for him. It was two feet six inches wide, twenty-four inches high, and six feet eight inches long. It was lined with zinc and weighed nearly 500 pounds. It was too large to be taken into the house. It was put in the front door as far as possible, about half its length, and the corpse was then brought down and placed in it.

Accepted a Good Position.

Many Plainfielders will join in congratulating Erwin Stratton Cooley, son of Dr. J. H. Cooley, of the borough, upon his recent success. In June last he was graduated from Cornell University as a mechanical engineer, and has just accepted a lucrative position with the Newport News Shipbuilding Company, of Newport News, Va. He has entered upon his duties and is now in the engine department. Mr. Cooley has always evidenced strong talent for things mechanical, and his success is due to his own efforts in making a place for himself.

GOLD IN MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

Mr. Gerke Thinks the Well Borings Indicate a Paying Vein

Herman Gerke, the Carteret blacksmith, has been having a well bored. Among the borings was a bright metal which attracted the attention of one of the idlers. The metal was gathered up and tested by a local chemist. He pronounced it gold.

It is long be known that gold in small veins is marked on maps by the State mineralogists, but Mr Gerke thinks he has found the precious metal in paying quantities.

Several options are reported taken on the land adjoining the Gerke place, and there is talk of a stock company to work this Jersey Klondike.

SPENT THE NIGHT STANDING IN CELL.

Other Inhabitants Were Too Numerous to Suit Him.

PHILADELPHIAN IN JAIL.

WAS BOUND FOR NEW YORK TO WORK ON TROLLEY LINES.

Hard Times Compelled Him to Beat His Way Over the P. & R. Railroad—Arrested by Patrolman Myers—Creeping Ones so Thick He Dared Not Sit Down—Spent the Night Upright.

John Nelson bid his wife and children a hopeful farewell last Friday, and announced his decision of going to New York to try for a place on the street cars. Nelson had been out of work a month and it had made a sad hole in the family fund. In fact, he hadn't money to buy a ticket, so he climbed on the platform of one of the express cars on the New York train at the Philadelphia and Reading terminal and hid.

At Bound Brook some one saw him and telegraphed ahead to this city for a policeman. Patrolman Myers met the train as it rumbled into town at 2:14 o'clock Saturday a m. Nelson was arrested on the charge of trespassing on the railroad property and locked up for the rest of the night in the city jail.

Nelson sank down on the bench in his cell as Myers passed out of the corridor. But he didn't stay there long. Out of every crack and cranny "they" came, the creeping and the crawling ones that have made Plainfield's city jail notorious. They had heard Nelson communing with himself about a place on the Brooklyn trolley cars.

"Scab," they hissed and whispered as they advanced. Now Nelson is a respectable man. The dire extremity of the situation had forced him to steal a ride, and he was not use to such acquaintances. He rose up at the sight. From that time until Roundsman Frederickson opened the cell door to lead Nelson before the City Judge at 9 o'clock, the prisoner stood.

He was tired, he told the officer, but he couldn't sit down with so many other occupants in the cell. He was a nice appearing man, modestly but neatly dressed and with an intellectual face. City Judge Runyon was impressed with his appearance and expressed regret to see him in such a position. He then suspended sentence and Nelson departed after thanking the Judge and Roundsman for their kindness. He said that he should not forget Plainfield in a hurry.

THROWN FROM A TRAIN.

Phillipsburg Boy Badly Hurt on the Central at Bound Brook.

A Phillipsburg, N. J., boy was a passenger on the excursion train from Easton, Pa., that passed through Plainfield Saturday a. m, going east. At Bound Brook the young man was standing on the rear platform of the last car, and as the train made a sharp turn over a short curve the momentum of the train threw him off with considerable force. He was picked up by a man near the railroad station which was near to the place of the accident, and the injured boy was taken in the station. A physician was called and treated the boy properly. He sustained several cuts about the face and his right leg was cut very badly. The last was conscious all of the time and did not seem to suffer any excrutiating pain, although he bled profusely and was very week.

NIBLO PALMER AGAIN IN JAIL.

Roselle Contractor Charged With Atrocious Assault on an Italian.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Elizabeth, July 24—Niblo Palmer, a well-known Italian contractor, residing at Roselle, was lodged in the county jail Saturday on a charge of atrocious assault on another Italian with a club. The injured man had to have twenty stitches put in his wounds by a physician. Palmer was committed in default of $500 bail and was still in jail this afternoon.

Some months ago Palmer was arrested for an atrocious assault on Councilman James Hope, of Roselle, and was found guilty. He got off that time with a fine of $100.

ANDERSON WINS AT GOLF FROM SCRATCH.

Equalled Low Score on Park Golf Club Links.

FOR M'CUTCHEN TROPHY.

GOOD SCORES RECORDED AT PARK CLUB SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

G. W. Faber Has Scored Most Points for the McCutchen Cup so far This Season—Anderson and Taylor are Tied for Second Place—Miss Saidee Mae Howell's Low Score for Buttfield Cup.

It took a really enthusiastic golfer to brave the decidedly warm weather of Saturday and spend the afternoon in the enjoyment of the ancient sport. Consequently the attendance at the links of the Park Golf Club Saturday was not as large as when favored by better weather conditions. The competition for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen Cup grew quite keen, however, and brought out some good scores. W. de la R. Anderson, the crack player of the club, equalling the lowest score ever made over the course in a tournament.

The morning saw two competitors out for the Buttfield Cup, a ladies' handicap, competition, nine holes. This time Miss Saidee Mae Howell was victorious with a gross score of 68. Miss Daisy Elsberg, winner in the competition the week before, was second with a gross score for the nine holes of 89.

W. de la R. Anderson and Clifford W. Cooley made their rounds in the competition together. Anderson was playing in fine form, his driving was far and with good direction while he did equally good work on the putting greens. His first round was made in 46, and the second round showed the same score, making a total gross score of 92. Fred P. Taylor made the same gross score in the Fourth of July handicap. It is now the low tournament score for the course. Anderson played from scratch so his gross and net scores were the same. Nobody else had large enough handicap to overcome the fine playing of Anderson, so he was low man for the day.

The members of the famous Park Club whist team were out together and each found golf nearly as fascinating as whist. They were Samuel Townsend, George T. Rogers and J. H. Howell. Mr. Townsend was the only one of the three to hand in his scores for the cup. He showed considerable improvement, particularly in the second round and with his fat handicap of 30, had a net score of only 93, just one stroke behind Anderson, giving him second in the McCutchen competition.

G. W. Faber is one of the steadiest players in the club. Saturday afternoon he went around in 101, which his handicap reduced to 98 net. He was third.

Charles E. Faber did not quite come up to his playing of the week before. He made his two rounds with Morgan Townsend, who is playing a good game these days. William A. Townsend, his brother, made the eighteen holes alone so his score was unable to count in the competition. His score was a low one, however. Golf playing seems to run in the Townsend blood, for the father and two sons are all doing remarkably well.

The scores for the McCutchen Cup, handed in Saturday, were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
W. de la R. Anderson	98		92
Samuel Townsend	123	30	93
C. E. Faber	101	3	98
Chas. E. Faber	124	20	104
W. J. R. Thiers	126	12	114
Morgan Townsend	123	7	116
Clarance S. Boome	133	10	123

The scores for the Buttfield Cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Miss Saidee Mae How.	68	4	64
Miss Daisy Elsberg	89	18	71

There has been considerable interest in the standing of the various competitors for the McCutchen Cup. It will be remembered that the lowest three in every Saturday's competition receive three, two and one points respectively, to be scored for the cup during the season. The one scoring the most points at the end of the season will get the cup.

G. W. Faber is now in the lead with W. de la R. Anderson and Fred P. Taylor tied for second place. Faber shows up almost every Saturday and plays a careful painstaking game that wins for him in the end. Meredith Dryden, the secretary of the club, has followed the same plan and stands third. For the last two weeks, however, he has not entered the competition. Nobody is so far ahead, however, that the final result of the competition is not an open question. Anderson has only played for the last two weeks, and has during that time managed to roll up his five points.

The players and the points scored by them for the trophy are as follows:

G. W. Faber, 6; W. de la R. Anderson, 5; Fred P. Taylor, 5; Meredith Dryden, 4½; Gifford W. Cooley, 4; Charles E. Faber, 4; E. T. Douglass, 3½; H. D. Hubbard, 3; Aubrey C. Browne, 3; Arthur Peck, 3; William A. Townsend, 2½; Clarence S. Boome, 2½; Samuel Townsend, 2; C. W. McCutchen, 1½; J. T. Scott, 1.

COW'S HORN WENT THROUGH ABDOMEN

Serious Injury Sustained by Sixteen Year Old Orphan.

ANIMAL BROKE THE HALTER.

KATIE LALLY COULD NOT GET OUT OF WAY QUICK ENOUGH.

The Accident Occurred Friday Night, But No Serious Consequences Were Felt Until the Next Morning When Dr. Simpson Was Called — Blood Poisoning or Peritonitis is Feared.

Miss Kate Lally, an orphan, aged sixteen years, who makes her home with the family of Councilman Walter Hetfield on East Front street, was seriously gored by a cow in Mr. Hetfield's barn Friday night, and is now confined to the bed suffering with a painful and perhaps dangerous wound.

The young woman, together with several other members of the family, was in the barn Friday evening. The cow had given birth to a calf two days before and was in a fretful temper. This fact, together with the pestering of the animal by the flies, caused her to suddenly pull at the halter and break the fastening. The hired man employed about the place yelled for the women to get out of the barn, but the Lally girl was too near the cow to escape.

The animal, as it reached the girl, threw its head downward and the horns caught under the bottom of the dress, and as the cow swung its head upward it struck one of its horns against the girl's abdomen. The girl felt some pain at the point of contact at the time, but thought that the injury did not amount to anything.

Soon after, however, she felt the blood trickling down her body and an inspection of the wound was made. It was found that a gash about four inches long had been made by the horn of the cow, but even then neither the girl nor Mrs. Hetfield considered the injury as a serious one. No doctor was summoned to attend to it, but early the next morning the wound became very painful and Dr. Simpson was called. He found that the horn of the cow had penetrated through the walls of the abdomen and that the injury was a very serious one. He treated it, and ordered the girl to remain in bed several days.

Dr. Simpson says that the young lady will probably recover from the injuries all right if blood poisoning or peritonitis does not set in. He feels confident, however, of being able to avoid such serious consequences.

HE HAD TOO MUCH PULL.

BUT IT DIDN'T GO WITH CITY JUDGE RUNYON.

Michael Gleason Fell Into the Toils of the Police For the Third Time and Was Fined — Was Drunk.

Michael Gleason had too much pull. After being interviewed by the Czar of Paradise Alley and sundry other prominent citizens of that and other sections of the city, City Judge Runyon decided that there must really be something the matter with Gleason. Gleason lives in Paradise Alley.

Saturday night Gleason [illegible] n town and took too freely of the good things of life. His equilibrium became unbalanced and his navigation uncertain. He wandered up Park avenue in the direction of the station house. After several futile attempts, his legs refused to carry him up on the railroad embankment, and seeing a light in Judge Nash's office, he went in to make a call.

Justice Nash was not anxious to see him and told him so, but Gleason wanted to stay. He had found navigation such ticklish work that he wanted to anchor himself somewhere until the gyrations of the earth became less frequent.

Roundsman Frederickson came along and tried to persuade Gleason to go home. Gleason was not for it and so the officer took him to jail.

This morning Gleason was arraigned. He was very penitent, as this was the third offence of the same kind. As the Judge started for court attempts were made to pull sundry "wires" to secure a suspension of sentence for the prisoner. The Judge said there was entirely too much of it. He couldn't overlook the fact that it was the third arrest, and although the offence this time was not a serious one he felt it his duty to fine Gleason $3. The fine was paid.

Knights Templar Field Day.

Grand Commander McGill of New Jersey has issued his general order, announcing to the subordinate commanderies of his jurisdiction that Monday, Sept. 4, has been decided upon for Field day, and directing these Knights Templar bodies to assemble in full uniform at Asbury Park on that day for dress parade, inspection and review. After the dress parade the line will be formed and the line of march will be taken up over some of the principal streets of the city.

MANAND WATCH MISSING

FRED CLARK LEFT ICE WAGON SUDDENLY.

John H. Tier, Jr.'s Vest and Gold Watch, Also $3 in Money Collected for McDonough Brothers, was Taken.

McDonough Bros., the ice dealers, have lost an employe and J. H. Tier, Jr., the manager, has lost a vest and the gold watch his father gave him on his twenty-first birthday. The watch and chain was in the vest. The disappearance of man and vest happened at the same time, so there isn't any doubt as to what became of the watch.

Friday night McDonough's ice delivery wagon drew up in front of Tommy Timbo's on North avenue and Tier carried in a cake of ice. Fred Clark, a heavily-built man with a sandy moustache, was left on the wagon. When Tier returned, Clark was gone and so was the vest and watch. There was no trace of the man and he hasn't been seen since in this neighborhood.

Clark entered the employ of McDonough Brothers July 8th. He was secured through an employment agency at 8 Battery, New York. He was a good worker and appeared honest enough until his disappearance. He had collected about $3 from different customers during the day and took the money with him. There was a little change in the vest.

The watch was a valuable one but was particularly prized by Mr. Tier for the reason that it was a gift to him on his twenty-first birthday from his father. He says Clark may have the rest of the suit like the vest if he will only bring back the watch. The case has been reported to the police but there is very little hope of finding the thief.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF.

HAPPENINGS IN A FEW LINES FROM ALL OVER JERSEY.

More or Less Important Happenings and Events in Various Sections Served For a Quick Glance at.

Newark fire insurance men are involved in an open war over rates.

Crows are proving very destructive to the melon fields in the vicinity of Swedesboro, eating into the half-grown melons in search of the seed.

During the winter meadow larks were nearly exterminated and the former haunts in Salem County are devoid of their welcome chirp this season.

Rev. A. M. Sherman, of Morristown, has in preparation a book which will relate the experiences of Morristown soldiers and sailors during the Spanish-American War.

George Dare, a Salem confectioner, has received a letter from a party in Madrid claiming to be a relative and asking for a loan to help him out of some embarrassing circumstances with promise of reward. Mr. Dare will not bite.

The Bridgeton Chronicle, established in 1815, and the oldest paper in Cumberland County, was on Tuesday sold to S. Albert Laning at mortgagee's sale for $10,000. The paper has been conducted for two years by William Gwinne.

Frank Headley, the Morristown letter-carrier, who had a dispute last Saturday with Assistant Postmaster Rowell, and who was suspended pending the decision of the postal authorities at Washington, has resumed his duties, a decision having been rendered in his favor.

The Newark and Hackensack Traction Company, whose cars were sold at auction by officials of North Arlington Borough last week for unpaid taxes, have decided to square up accounts. Their cars were not seized because of the injunction papers issued. The new company bought out the Union Company's property at Sheriff's sale a short time ago. Two years' taxes were then standing against the trolley company in three different boroughs.

TROUBLE AT THE PUMP.

Parents Took a Hand in Their Children's Quarrel.

A lively scrap occurred at Hand's brickyard on Mountain avenue Sunday afternoon that will probably result in the arrest of one or more of the participants. The trouble originally started over the pump which stands close to the house of the employes. The little girl of John Pollock, an employe at the yard, and the young son of William H. Hall, another employe, both went to the pump. There was a quarrel. Mrs. Hall went to get her son and Mrs. Pollock joined her daughter. The trouble was continued between the mothers.

Then it is alleged that John Pollock came out with a club and beat Mrs. Hall over the head and back with it, inflicting a number of bad cuts and bruises. Arrests are to follow.

Horse Ran on the Sidewalk.

A horse belonging to Gus Baidwin broke his tie strap in front of Clark's Hotel on Liberty street Monday and made a wild dash down Fourth street on the sidewalk. The animal was caught at Plainfield avenue without doing serious damage.

BARBER CHAMPION USED HIS RAZOR

Slashed the Maligner of His Wife's Name.

HE DEFENDED HER HONOR.

INJURED MAN FORMERLY ATTORNEY-GENERAL GRIGGS' COACHMAN.

John Mingo Tauntingly Told the Former Plainfield Colored Man That He Could Take Away Champion's Wife Anytime He Wanted To—Champion is Now Under Arrest in Paterson.

From Paterson comes a thrilling story regarding a former Plainfield dusky brave. Arthur Champion by name, who kept a barber shop on Madison avenue. Champion was always of a "crappy" nature, and on more than one occasion was arrested for fooling with this tricky game, and spent sometime altogether in Elizabeth. After repeatedly offending the law he was finally committed to the County Jail for six months, but for good behavior he only served about five months. After the completion of his term he drifted to Paterson where he has been residing with his wife.

There also lives in Paterson another dusky brave named John Mingo, who is 18 years old and who formerly worked as a groom for Attorney-General Griggs. Friday afternoon in the saloon of George Griffiths, 224 River street, he made the boast that he could take away the wife of Champion at any time.

This assertion so enraged Champion that he went to his barber shop, which is above the saloon, and secured a razor. A moment later he reappeared with a razor in his hand and cried, "Now, I'll cut your head off."

There was a desperate struggle, in the course of which Mingo was cut terribly about the head, neck and body. He finally fell exhausted and was taken to the General Hospital. Little hope is entertained of his recovery. The worst wound is a great gash in the side, where the razor reached the lung. Champion was arrested.

BUG KISSED BARTENDER.

MALANOLESTES PICIPES APPEARED AT THE HOTEL HUNTERSTON.

Made Things Exciting There Until Captured by Richard Waring—Bug Was Identified by Dr. Gallant, of New York.

The "kissing bug" appeared at the Hotel Hunterston, Thursday evening, and caused no end of excitement. The only one to suffer severely besides the bug was Burns, the bartender. The first that was known of the advent of the bug was a sudden yell from Burns, who went skipping about the lower corridor grabbing at the back of his head. A huge swelling, as large as an egg, appeared at the back of his head and did not go down for several days.

The bug, which was nearly two inches long, went flying about the rooms with some of the young men in close pursuit. Finally Richard Waring, of Park avenue, made a well-directed stroke and brought down the bug.

Dr. A. E. Gallant, of New York, examined the insect and declared that it was a specimen of the melanolestes picipes, commonly known as the "kissing bug." He also looked after the "kissing bug's" solitary victim.

Fell With Lamp in Her Hand.

Mrs. John Hobbs, of Pearl street, met with a peculiar accident late Saturday evening. She was walking down the cellar stairs carrying a lamp. In some way she stumbled and fell to the cellar floor.

The lamp was wrecked and a piece of glass severed a small artery in the wrist, causing a considerable loss of blood. Dr. Carman, the family physician, was called and treated the wound properly. Aside from the loss of blood there were no serious results.

Crushed by Falling Stone.

Louis Capasino, an Italian, was severely injured at Bartelli's stone quarry at Washington ville last Thursday by a quantity of rock and earth falling upon him. One toe on the right foot was crushed and he was bruised about the lower part of the body. Dr. J. Buchanan, of the borough, was called and dressed the injuries. The injured man is now on the way to recovery.

Visited "Snake Mary."

A number of the guests at the Mountain Park Inn enjoyed a moonlight ride and visit to the gypsy encampment Saturday evening. A wagonette and several carriages carried the party. The fortunes of the young people were told by "Snake Mary" and her able assistants, furnishing much amusement for the party.

A Change of Thirty Degrees.

Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock the thermometer indicated 96, and Sunday afternoon at the same hour it recorded 66. Truly a great change.

A NEW QUEEN WILL RULE THE GYPSIES

The Passing of "Snake Mary" is a Great Event.

TWO YOUTHFUL ASPIRANTS.

ELECTION TO BE HELD AS SOON AS TRIBES MEET.

Congress of Nomads to be Held in the Grove Near Thatcher's Road House Between This City and Fanwood —"Snake Mary" Has Ruled for Many Years, but is Now Getting Old.

The strange and wonderful career of "Snake Mary," queen of the gypsies, is nearing its end. She is now ninety-four years old, well preserved for such an elderly woman and of remarkably clear mind. But she realizes that her days are numbered and that it is best that her successor should be chosen and duly instructed in the ways of the queen of the wandering bands before death comes to claim the present occupant of the gypsy throne. So "Snake Mary" sent out word to her kith and kin all over the country to assemble and select the young woman to succeed her as their queen. The place of meeting for this strange gypsy congress is the little grove, close by George Thatcher's road house, "The Maples," on the county road from Plainfield to Fanwood. The day set for the gathering was Sunday, but owing to illness in one of the important families which was to be in attendance, the momentous affair was postponed and will probably be held next Sunday afternoon.

The band, of which "Snake Mary" is the queen, is one of the wealthiest and most powerful in all gypsydom. They are all Harrisons and Coopers, allied families. There are already seven families of the band encamped near the maple grove. As many more are now enroute toward the camp, some coming from as far as Binghamton and the Chenango Valley, New York State. One party is now in camp near Bordentown, where one of the children is seriously ill. It was this delay that caused the postponement of the gypsy congress yesterday. They hope that the child will be well enough to travel and allow them to reach here this week.

"Snake Mary" is considered one of the greatest of all the gypsy fortune tellers who are endowed with second sight. She originally married a Harrison but after his death she was wedded to an Irishman named Reilly, who joined the gypsy band and became one of the leading men in the gypsy councils. The Harrison band has always been famous as horse dealers. The Harrisons have raised and sold many famous trotters and pacers, including the great "Gypsy Queen" that brought $1,200. They have now nearly two score horses with them and expect a hundred more when the remainder of the band arrives.

There are two principal rivals for the place of Gypsy queen. One is Posy Dean Harrison, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Harry Harrison, with whose family "Snake Mary" is now stopping. The young woman has already shown unusual ability in second sight, and when possessed of all the wisdom of the aged queen will be well worthy of the place. She is a handsome girl, dark-complexioned with great black eyes that seem possessed of wonderful power. The other candidate for queenly honors is Laurel Harrison, another granddaughter of "Snake Mary." She is seventeen years old. The family to which she belongs is on its way to Plainfield, and stands high in power in the Harrison band. She is said to be tall and queenly, with raven black hair and magnificent black eyes.

The choice will be left to the gypsies. When the congress is held the question will be put to vote, and the decision reached will be final. Then "Snake Mary" will impart her wisdom to the newly-chosen queen who will ascend the throne when the aged fortune-teller passes away.

COLLIDED WITH CARRIAGE.

Wheelwoman Spilled in the Mud on Front Street This Morning.

A wheelwoman and a horse and carriage, driven by Michael Powers, of South avenue, collided on West Front street, near Somerset street, this morning. The wheelwoman was on the left side of the street, going west. Powers evidently did not notice her or else supposed that she would turn out. There was a collision and the wheelwoman was thrown headlong into the mud. She escaped without injury to herself or wheel. Her gown was very muddy, however.

Hale and Hearty at Seventy-five.

P. M. Demarest, the Park avenue grocer, ages very slowly. Sunday he celebrated his seventy fifth birthday, and the day before waited on 130 customers at his store. He says he feels better than he did fifteen years ago, and that he could dance a jig if opportunity offered and he received the right inspiration.

LETTER READ FROM BISHOP M'FAUL.

Special Services Preliminary to Observance of "Holy Year."

WHAT MENACES PEOPLE.

HE CALLS ATTENTION TO ABUSES THAT THREATEN SOCIETY.

He Says That We See Everywhere Repugnance to Christian Life, and an Insatiable Greed for Worldly Things, Which Causes False Living and False Thinking That is Almost Inconceivable.

The morning service in St. Joseph's R. C. church in the borough was marked Sunday by the reading of a letter by Father Miller from Bishop McFaul, of the Trenton diocese, which fixes next Friday, Saturday and Sunday for a Te Deum in all the principal churches as a preliminary to the Holy Year to be observed during 1900. In his letter the Bishop said:

"Who that is at all acquainted with the condition of society in our own beloved country will be disposed to deny the widespread depravity of morals which confronts us? A brilliant writer has thus summed up the present condition of the world: 'It is conceded that life is a dark and wretched failure for the great mass of mankind. The many are plundered to enrich the few. Vast combinations depress the price of labor and increase the cost of the necessaries of existence. The rich, as a rule, despise the poor, and the poor are coming to hate the rich. The face of labor grows sullen; the old tender Christian love is gone; standing armies are forming on one side and great communistic organizations on the other; society divides itself into two hostile camps; no white flags pass from one to another. They wait only for the drum beat and the trumpet to summon them to conflict."

"Even if we are not disposed to admit the entire truth of this picture, and contend that its lines are too heavy and sombre, yet it is impossible to deny that there is much truth in this presentation of the subject, and we must therefore admire the zeal and courage of the aged Vicar of Christ, who, weighed down with the burden of almost ninety years, raises his apostolic voice in the midst of the storm to warn the winds and bid the waves be still. This he has done throughout his whole remarkable pontificate; but as the days of his mortal existence draw near to a close his fortitude is redoubled, and he emphasizes more strongly the supreme importance of admonishing individuals and nations to return to the doctrines and practices inculcated by Christ and promulgated by Christianity, as these great principles alone supply the remedy for the evils which pressed down so heavily upon society.

"Therefore, he tells us that the aim of the holy year is to admonish men of the duties of their state, to arouse souls steeped in forgetfulness, to recall to the thought of their own salvation those who run imminent risk of perishing, and of losing through their negligence and pride those celestial rewards for the possession of which we are born."

SUCCESSFUL HOP.

Charming Social Affair Held at Hotel Hunterston Saturday Night.

The most successful of the Saturday evening hops at the Hotel Hunterston this season was held Saturday evening. The guests numbered fully three hundred and filled the ball room and the wide verandas. Besides the guests at the hotel, there was a large attendance of Plainfield society people.

Dancing was, of course, the order of the evening and was continued until nearly midnight. The floor was crowded nearly all the time while many promenaded up and down the verandas. Although the evening was a warm one, the hotel was a delightfully cool place, the breeze from the north west keeping the temperature comfortably low.

Jerseymen for the Front.

The Twenty-eighth regiment, the volunteer regiment that Jerseymen are expected to enter if they want to go to the Philippines and fight, has the honor of having more recruits than any of the ten new regiments except one. It had about 550 recruits on Friday. Newark has sent in all forty-four men to swell the number since the recruiting for the Twenty-eighth began nearly two weeks ago. During the first week, ending a week ago yesterday, twenty-nine recruits were received. Last week the number of applications fell of a trifle, and the recruiting officer was, if anything, more exacting, so that the week's total was fifteen.

Jersey City Hotel Sold.

Taylor's Hotel, in Exchange place, Jersey City, has been sold by the Fisk estate of Jersey City to the National Trust Company of New York. There will be no immediate change. The National Trust Company was represented by George W. Young in the purchase.

CITIZENS WINNERS IN TROLLEY FIGHT.

Plainfield Street Railway and Brunswick Traction Company.

WILL GIVE TRANSFERS.

CONGRESSMAN DALY ATTENDS THE MASS MEETING AT DUNELLEN.

His Speech Well Received and Warmly Applauded—Call Attention to the Trusts and Corporations Will Bear Watching—Credit Due the Plainfield Board of Trade for Bringing the Reduction in Fares.

The citizens of Dunellen have at last accomplished what they set out to secure—a reduction of fares on the street railway running through the borough. In other words they have finally secured transfers from the Plainfield Street Railway. At least that company has, through its representatives, notified the public that in the future it will carry passengers from Plainfield to the boundary line of Dunellen for one fare. Transfers, however, must be secured at the Plainfield boundary line, where the cars of the Brunswick Traction Company are now taken by passengers wishing to go further than Dunellen.

This arrangement was made public at the mass meeting held July 19 at Dunellen. The meeting was a most representative one. It was graced by the presence of Hon. William D. Daly, Congressman from the this district. Besides Congressman Daly, there were also present from this city Dr. Fritts, vice-president of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, J. C. Pope and Secretary Harry C. Runyon, of the Board of Trade.

The meeting was held in the Borough Hall, which was filled to its limit, standing room being at a premium. The meeting was called to order by Chairman Winges, and after the minutes of the previous meeting had been read, Secretary Izing read the report of the committee—Messrs. W. J. Winges, Louis Snyder and Wilson Frederick—appointed at the last meeting with reference to taking action regards an effort to have an adjustment of fares on the line of the Brunswick Traction Company. This report in substance was what has already been published in The Press. It was accompanied by a resolution asking the co-operation of the Plainfield Board of Trade and the citizens of Plainfield to assist them in the matter.

Thomas W. F. Scanlon, of West Dunellen, on behalf of the committee, then stated that he was pleased to say that the efforts of the Board of Trade had been successful in bringing about an agreement between the Plainfield Street Railway Company and the Brunswick Traction Company, in which the companies had made an arrangement whereby the Plainfield Street Railway Company would in the future issue transfers on all 5-cent fares to Dunellen and that the Brunswick Traction Company would do likewise on return trips. In other words, transfers would be issued by both companies on a 5-cent fare both ways.

The announcement was received with applause. Chairman Winges then introduced Congressman Daly.

The Congressman was in good voice and in a fifteen minutes' speech he kept the crowd good-natured. He said in part:

"Gentlemen—I think it was a wise move on the part of the citizens to make this fight against the street railroad company. I do not wish to appear demagogical. I am not opposed to corporations. I don't attack them because they are corporations; but I believe that the citizens have rights that even corporations are bound to respect. I remember distinctly what Mr. Radell said at that dinner which my friend, Mr. Winges, gave. He made certain promises then, but which I do not think have been lived up to. But I am not at all surprised. I have little faith in corporations. My advice to the gentlemen at the time was for them to have those promises put in writing; to bind them. My experience with corporations has not been of the best. They will take advantage of the public every time they get the chance. They are not in business for fun, but for money.

"*The position the citizens of Dun*ellen have taken in this trolley fight is a just one. It is a high-handed outrage and an imposition on the public to force you to pay an extra fare. When you took the step you did to force this railway company to take some action to give you your just dues you did perfectly right. The citizens deserve credit for the stand they have taken, and I think that your committee is deserving of much credit in being able to bring about an adjustment of this matter in so short a time."

Congressman Daly then referred to the railroad strikes in Brooklyn. He said that the strikers had his sympathy and he trusted that they would win in the great fight they were making against the powerful corporation they were opposing. "Why, I would willingly walk from the Battery to Central Park if by doing so I could help these poor men win their strike. There never was a time when labor was not right in its fight against corporations." As to the trolley troubles Congressman Daly said that these people were always trying to get something for nothing. There should be a reciprocity between the railroad company and the people. He pointed out the disgraceful state of affairs in regard to trusts that have been formed in this State in the last five years and said that capital was being held up in contempt by the outside world. "The time would come when her sister states would retaliate and the revenue that is being accumulated by these corporations, which are nothing more than trusts, will be used to drive every trust in New Jersey out of business. It will be only a few weeks when these two railroads will combine; they will be shaking hands with each other. They will span the State from one end to the other and will continue to fleece the public. At this dinner," he continued, "I said the town ought to be paid something for the valuable franchise the citizens of Dunellen were giving away. If it is valuable today, what will it be ten years hence? You can't be too watchful. It is a period of anxiety. I don't think the country is going to ruin just yet, but the air is pregnant with complaints and rumors and every eye turns towards capital and labor. It stands you in hand to be ever watchful and see that public servants come up to the right measure—when you can say of them he's honest; he's faithful." Those are the men we can trust, men who will not jeopardize the public interests for their own."

Congressman Daly's speech was warmly applauded.

After the applause had subsided, Dr. Fritts stated that the speaker had made some inaccurate statements regarding the street railroads in as far as the pertained to the company he was interested in. He said that the Plainfield Street Railway Company now paid into the city treasury about $5,000; the first year alone it had paid into the city treasury $1,500. The amount paid annually, he said was about $32,000, which was for employes, interest, taxes, etc.

Congressman Daly—Doctor, there are exceptions to all rules, you know.

Dr. Fritts—Well, there certainly is as far as our road is concerned. How about the strike at Hazleton, Congressman; was labor right in that?

Congressman Daly did not reply.

At this point Mr. Scanlon asked Dr. Fritts when the agreements between the railroads had been signed. The doctor said that no agreement had been signed as yet, but that the com*panies had an understanding* about the proposed five cent fare each way with transfers and that they would live up to it. He said that what the committee had asked for was a reduction of fares and it had been granted. He said that personally he would much rather have had some arrangement whereby the cars would have run up to the centre of the borough, but at the meeting of the Board of Trade Monday night the committee had expressly said that all it wanted was a reduction of fares.

At this Mr. Scanlon jumped to his feet and attempted to make it appear as though the committee had been imposed upon by the railroad officials.

Dr. Fritts explained further that it was the intention of the company to give the citizens a twelve minute run to the depot as soon as it was practicable to do so but at present it would not do so. He said that if the committee had taken up with the suggestion made to it on last Monday evening at the Board of Trade, when he had offered to run as far as the depot, he might have effected such a change, but the company had now made arrangements to give them transfers and he considered that the company was doing what was fair. The doctor's statement appeared to please the crowd, which liberally applauded what he said and expressions of "we're satisfied! You're all right" were heard on all sides.

Young Mr. Scanlon, with an assurance that was astonishing, again attempted to criticize and even to impugn Dr. Fritts' motives, but his efforts to speak further were drowned by the applause given the doctor. The people had got what they had been fighting for and were satisfied.

Mr. Frederick offered a motion that it was the sense of the meeting that the railroads make the transfers at a point opposite the railroad station, which Mr. Swackhamer, in seconding the motion, said he believed that to be the proper place for a transfer station.

Howard Bird also was of the same opinion, and he said to Dr. Fritts that he thought the railroad company would find and increase of traffic by doing so.

Dr. Fritts said that the point of transfer would for the present be at the Plainfield Boundary line, as at present; that the company could not afford to run their cars up there, for the reason that it did not have the time to do so while running on a 12-minute schedule, and that it could not afford to put on any extra cars.

The meeting then adjourned, everyone in the best of spirits, unless it was Mr. Scanlon, whose eloquence had failed to carry the crowd.

While the citizens have secured an adjustment of their grievances with the street railroad companies, it was brought about largely through the efforts of the newspapers of Plainfield and the Board of Trade.

It was not stated when the new arrangement of transfers will go into effect, but probably in a few days.

MUST APPLY AGAIN FOR A FRANCHISE.

Location of Poles Not Cited in the Application.

IT WAS A FATAL DEFECT.

OBJECTIONS RAISED BY LAWYERS FOR THE REMONSTRANTS.

A Large Number of Interested People Present to Hear the Argumentsr—Councilman Barrows Recognized the Error at Once and Stated That a New Application Would Have to be Made.

Prior to the regular meeting of the Common Council last Thursday the extension of the trolley through Arlington avenue was introduced and a public hearing granted. There was a large crowd in the lobby composed of people for and against the extension. The trolley company was represented by Col. Hine, while Lawyers Moffett and Harry C. Runyon, who have secured consents for the extension were *also present. Lawayers W. S. Angle*man and Lawyer Eugene Hatch, representing the opposition, were in attendance.

After the object of the meeting was made known Lawyer Hatch, of Ninth street, representing owners of 1,400 feet of property along the avenue, addressed the Council. He spoke first of his belief that the Council wants to do what is fair and right, and he did not think that they would be inconsistent enough to grant a franchise through Arlington avenue. Mr. Hatch then took up the legal objections. In the first place the application of the company does not conform to the law. There is no map showing the location of poles on the avenue and no written petition made by the company. These are statutory proceedings which do not conform to the statute, and the people have a right to know where the poles will be located.

Mr. Hatch then spoke regarding the consents secured, and contended that the necessary number had not been secured. The trolley company claim that they have more than half of the consents in lineal feet. According to the figures of the Street Commissioner there are 5,067 feet in Arlington avenue, deducting crosswalks, which Mr. Hatch thought should not be deducted. He then spoke of the consent secured from the Bonnell estate and another consent secured from the guardian of a property. In the former case the estate is not settled and no one has a right to give a consent for it, and in the latter a guardian has no right to give a consent. He had been unable to secure the original consents, and, inasmuch as the Council desired fair play, he thought that these consents should be filed so anyone could see them. He was sure the Council does not want to be a party to any railroading scheme.

Mr. Hatch stated further that there are two Arlington avenues and a majority of the lineal feet of both must be secured. The first avenue runs from Third street to Ninth street and the other from Union street and Arlington avenue to Randolph road. Under these conditions the trolley company lacks 1,000 feet of what is necessary.

In conclusion the speaker remarked about the noise of cars, the narrowness of the avenue, the annoyance to confirmed invalids along the avenue, who would of necessity have to move, and there would be no escape from the constant annoyance of a car every twelve minutes.

Mr. Barrows at this time stated that *Mr. Hatch's point regarding the loca*tion of poles was well taken, and he said that the trolley company would withdraw their application and make a new one later, and the necessary fourteen days would be given prior to a public hearing.

At the suggestion of Mr. Hatch Mr. Coriell moved that the trolley company file their original consents when the application is made, thus giving any one an opportunity to see them. The trolley hearing then came to an end.

Arranging a Road Race.

G. H. Kenyon, of West Front street, is now arranging a road race to be held probably on the third Thursday in August over the Park Avenue course. The race will be fifteen miles and valuable prizes will be offered. Mr. Kenyon will probably issue 150 entry blanks and send them to various Jersey towns for the purpose of making the entry list as varied as possible.

CITY TO LOOK INTO THE TAX VALUATION.

County Assessors Action Considered by Common Council.

NO GROUND FOR INCREASE.

ASSESSOR HUBBARD EXPLAINS ABOUT THIRD WARD.

He Says That the Valuations He Put on Property Were All That Was Due and He Will Not Increase Them—Committee to Investigate—Bids for Macadamizing Streets—Other Business.

An adjourned meeting of the Common Council was held last Thursday with all the members present except President Andrews, and his place was filled by Councilman Frank H. Smith. The most important matter discussed and decided upon was the question relating to the recent action of the County Board of Assessors in placing the city's valuation at the same figure that it was last year, $8,000,000.

Mr. Hetfield introduced the subject and said he thought Plainfield ought to know whether her valuations were assessed with any degree of equality with other places in the county. He had been informed that in some places assessments had been made on a basis of 25 and 30 per cent., and if this is true it is a great wrong, for Plainfield's property has been assessed as high as 50 per cent. He moved that the finance committee and the committee on assessment and collection of taxes investigate the matter and report back to the Council.

Mr. Hetfield's remarks were supplimented with remarks by Mr. VanHerwerden, who presented a letter from J. A. Hubbard, Assessor for the Third ward. Mr. Hubbard stated that he felt too ill to remain at Elizabeth all day Monday, so he sent his book of the Third ward down. He later learned that the Assessors of Elizabeth disputed the values being below what they were one year ago, and after some discussion they placed the value upon Plainfield the same as last year. The Plainfield Assessors returned the real estate as follows:

First Ward, $27,110.00 below values of '98; Second Ward, $101,450 below values of '98; Fourth Ward, $84,575 below values of '98. The Third Ward had an increase over '98 values of $20,735. In making up the deficiency *they placed upon the wards the fol*lowing additions in real estate: First Ward, $39,930; Second Ward, $64,175; Third Ward, $49,995; Fourth Ward, $44,975.

Mr. Hubbard states that if the Third Ward had returned as much less in proportion as the others he would not object, but when the Third Ward returned $20,735 more than last year he thinks it unjust to put $50,000 more upon it, and says that he will most enphatically dispute the right of other assessors that lower their values far below what they placed them a year ago, and then rely on the Third Ward to help pay their taxes.

Mr. Hubbard then asked the Council to appoint a committee to examine all of the books and compare the values of 1898 with the present year and to judge for themselves who is to bear the loss. He says that he would not know where to place the $50,000 that has been set off to the Third Ward after keeping the values in the Third Ward substantially the same as last year. He says that he is not willing to add any such amount to the taxpayers in his ward as it would be unjust in every sense. If changes are made in the values of property in that ward Mr. Hubbard says that they will have to be made by someone beside imself, unless it can be shown where he has made a mistake.

In connection with the above Mr. VanHerwerden offered a resolution that the finance committee and the committee on assessment and collection of taxes meet this evening and go over the books and make such corrections as are proper.

At the proper time bids for macadamizing East Second street to the city line and Richmond street to Putnam avenue, were received. There were four bids and each street was bid separately. J. Y. Wilson offered to do the work on Second street for $1.39 per lineal foot, and Richmond street for $1.49 per lineal foot; Patsy Christmas bid was $1.74 for Richmond street and $1.95 for Second street; C. M. Meeker bid $1.44 for Richmond street and $1.33 for Second street; A. I. & N. B. Smalley's bid was $1.52 for Richmond street and $1.36 for Second street. They were all received and referred to the proper committee.

Mr. Coriell moved that when the Plainfield Street Railway Company makes application for a franchise on Arlington avenue that they file the original consents secured along the route proposed. Mr. Coriell stated that he did not propose that anyone should get an idea that there is any catch about the deal.

The application of the Eastern Bottling Association for a wholesale liquor license, where Frank Linke is now in business, was received and granted.

Mr. Barrows offered a resolution giving J. B. Mills the privilege to build a sewer on South, Woodland and Belvidere avenues.

Mr. Hetfield introduced a letter received from Dr. Simpson in which it was stated that a commission had been appointed and the Governor had been importuned to disband a portion of the Naval Reserves, and as inasmuch as several cities in the upper part of the State had sent remonstrances to the Governor against the intended action, it was the desire of the Reserves that the Plainfield Council take action asking the Governor to rescind the action.

Mr. Hetfield moved that such action be taken by the Council, but Mr. Buckle, not fully understanding the matter, desired that it lie on the table until next meeting. Mr. Coriell and Mr. Smith expressed themselves similarly.

Mr. Hetfield argued for the question and said that it was only a question of appropriating $500 a year for the Reserves and he felt sure that there was some other motive behind the scheme to disband a part of the Reserves.

After a little further discussion it was finally decided to let the matter rest until the next meeting, after which the meeting adjourned.

ACCURATE STORY OF DARLING'S CAPTURE.

Bold Work of the Officials of Fulton County.

REVOLVERS HELD BY ALL.

THE MURDERER CAUGHT WHILE ON A FISHING TRIP.

When Face to Face With the Officers Darling Whipped Out a Gun and Held Them at Bay—But Superior Numbers Overcame Him — Hard Journey of Roundsman Flynn to McConnellsburgh Wednesday.

Roundsman J. J. Flynn who left Plainfield Wednesday morning on the 1:17 train for McConnellsburg, Pa., to identify William Darling, returned home last Thursday at 6:48 o'clock, having accomplished his purpose. Owing to poor connections the Roundsman did not reach his destination until 11 o'clock Wednesday night. There is not a railroad in Fulton county, and after going as far as he could by rail he was obliged to ride fifteen miles in a stage to the place where Darling is confined.

Upon his arrival he sought the Sheriff and went at once to the jail Darling was lying on his cot in a cell by the stove. The Roundsman approached and addressed the prisoner by his first name, at the same time shaking hands with him. Darling for some minutes could not remember the officer's face, but later said he knew him. The latter had not the slightest trouble in identifying Darling.

The two had a talk for a short time after which the Boundsman left him and remained at a hotel during the night until 5 o'clock yesterday morning when he started for home.

Shortly after the arrival of the officer Darling was told that someone was coming to identify him, and he in*quired if it was the detective that had* been following him for three years.

Darling looks the same as ever, and does not show any signs of dissipation. It is believed by all in the town that if he had not talked too much and had left liquor alone he could have lived there the rest of his life and never been discovered for his crime.

Captain Grant and Roundsman Flynn went to New Brunswick this morning for the purpose of making a return of the indictment taken by the latter to McConnelsburg, Pa., giving him authority to identify William Darling. Below is the only accurate report of the capture of Darling which is republished from The Fulton Republican, of McConnellsburg, which was published yesterday.

By all odds the greatest sensation our town has experienced for some*time was last Monday night when Sheriff Sheets and District Attorney* Daniels drove in town and placed in jail as their prisoner William Darling, alias Ralph E. J. Walton, who is charged with shooting and killing Harry Dunham, in Plainfield, New Jersey, in 1885.

After killing Dunham, Darling left the sandy plains of Jersey for the wooded hills of "Little Fulton," which he reached in safety after being followed through Virginia and West Virginia by a detective. Finding the people of our county generous to a fault he availed himself of their hospitality and remained with a family of Gordons in Thompson township, where he courted and on the seventh day of last June married Sarah E., the seventeen-year-old daughter of David Gordon, with whom he lived until arrested by the officers of this county.

We are unable to give the particulars about the shooting of Dunham or the information leading up to his whereabouts and arrest, but Sheriff Sheets and District Attorney Daniels, armed with the proper authority, located their man and last Monday took a fishing trip down Licking Creek for the purpose of catching the culprit. On their way down they arranged with Jacob Hess to accompany them and assist in making the arrest. After borrowing some fishing tackle the trio went to the creek on pretense of fishing, but for the real purpose of making definite arrangements to carry out their true purpose. While thus engaged they noticed a man approaching them, who Hess recognized as the man they were after. Darling caught sight of the men, and mistrusting something crossed a fence into an orchard where he began eating apples. The officers became apple hungry and crossed for the same purpose, but Darling passed on to another one, and seeing that he was being followed and ordered his steps until commanded to halt, when, with drawn revolver he faced the officers, but seeing that the Sheriff and Hess were too quick and had the drop on him, he turned his own revolver toward his breast and walked backward for some distance, while the others followed up. Not wishing to harm him or see him deliberately take his own life they appealed to him to forbear his resistance and submit to legal authority.

To these appeals he turned a deaf ear until at an opportune moment the officers grabbed and overpowered him. During the scuffle the Sheriff's revolver was discharged, but the bullet did not strike either of the men. Darling was handcuffed and brought to the county jail that evening. When the officers drove into town with their prisoner it was but a few minutes until there were different reports in circulation on the streets about the man and his crimes. One man thought he must be a terrible desperado from the manner in which he was brought to town, and in describing the same said his hands were chained to the back of the seat; a log chain was fastened around his ankles and to the front axle; a bull rope was wrapped around his neck and tied to the buggy top; the District Attorney was sitting on his lap and the Sheriff beside him with both arms locked around his body, holding him in a tender embrace.

These reports were all found to be untrue and upon inquiry we found that after his arrest he had been treated kindly but firmly by the officers on the road to jail he became resigned to his fate and was quite jocular and conversant. When we called at the jail to see him he refused to talk about the trouble he was in, saying that later we would learn the situation of the affair. We found him to be a young man of more than ordinary intelligence and one who does not display the least sign of criminality on his countenance. If he shot Harry Dunham, we cannot think he did it in cold blood. It is whispered that the crime was committed during a drunken brawl. Darling is a telegraph operator and it is said comes from a good family. Officers are on their way to take him back to New Jersey, where he will be tried and receive just punishment for the crime he has committed.

LAWN FESTIVAL.

Epworth League of Dunellen Entertained the Borough Society.

The lawn festival held at Dunellen last Friday, under the auspices of the Epworth League of the Methodist church, at the home of O. A. Douglass, local editor of The Call, was a pleasant affair. The handsome and spacious grounds were made the more inviting by the addition of flags and Japanese lanterns. The tables were spread beneath the foliage and around them gathered the young folks, while the older people occupied the parlors. During the evening piano music enlivened the occasion. About 150 plates of ice cream were sold and the receipt were nearly $15. The evening was most delightful, the soft rays of the moon shedding its lustre over the happy gathering. In the near future the Presbyterian church society will hold a similar festival at the same place, Mr. Douglass kindly donating his grounds.

Entertained by the Clifton House.

The Clifton House, that large and popular resort, of which Charles Clifton, of this city, is one of the proprietors, and which is so finely situated on Great South Bay at Patchogue, L. I., gave a dinner to Messrs. G. Berry Egan, George E. Fuller, Henry L. Maxson, Max Moraller and Clarence M. Rogers, of this city, who are cruising on the bay. A cake-walk, in which a large number of the guests participated, followed, much to the amusement of the spectators. Mr. Rogers has returned, but the other young men expect to spend the remainder of the month on their yacht.

Word From Rector Murphy

Lawyer Clarence Murphy received three letters this morning from his parents and sister, who recently sailed for Queenstown. The letters were written on board ship and stated that they had a most delightful trip over. The water was just like a mill pond and unusually smooth. Rev. Mr. Murphy and family are in perfect health and enjoying themselves.

POLITICAL PLUMS FOR PLAINFIELD.

G. O. P. Workers Want to Know What They Are.

ELIZABETH'S VIEW OF IT.

THE PORT EXPECTS SUPPORT FROM PLAINFIELD.

Elizabeth Seems Willing to Give Plainfield the Shrievalty Nomination—But Bob Rockton Wants It—Plainfield Must Break Faith With Port or Defy the Elizabeth Leaders—Peculiar Situation.

Here it is, the summer not anywhere near over yet and the Republican politicians talking politics with wonderful vigor. Plainfield G. O. P. men are talking, too, and wondering still more what Plainfield is going to get out of the heap this year. There s a choice array of plums to be distributed, but, according to the reports emanating from the camps of the leaders, Plainfield is counted upon getting but very little.

Circumstances have been so that during the past few years there has been a bond of friendship between the Plainfield and Elizabethport workers. They have stood side by side in recent conventions and opposed the mighty power of the Elizabeth city crowd. When Wm. T. Kirk was nominated for sheriff three years ago, it was understood that Robert Houston, the Port's favorite, should be his successor. On that understanding the Port has since given Plainfield loyal support, with the expectation that Plainfield would back Houston this year for the shrievalty candidacy.

Now the leaders in Elizabeth are perfectly aware of these facts. They are also aware that, unless they break faith with Rahway, County Clerk Howard should have their support for a renomination as a reward for Rahway's support of Cross for the Senate seat last fall which resulted in the defeat of E. R. Ackerman. If they do break faith with Rahway, then it will be to please George Sculer and give him the County Clerkship nomination, on which his masterly eye has for a long time been gazing. Under these circumstances, they cannot think of allowing Plainfield to name the men for County Clerk.

The little townships and boroughs have been raising such a howl of late that Elizabeth is beginning to feel the necessity of remembering them with an Assemblyman or two. One member of the Assembly, at last, they consider, it is the rightful share of Elizabeth. Then Senator Cross must be re*nominated, of course.*

There still remains the nomination for sheriff to be disposed of according to the Elizabethian idea of the situation. Yes, the leaders say, Plainfield can have that crumb of comfort if she wants it and the Port can howl in vain. It would break up the little friendship between Plainfield and the Port as well.

If Plainfield is the dutiful little child of the G. O. P. leaders, who direct affairs from the county seat, she will take the Shrievalty and look pleasant. Otherwise there will be a fight, and it remains to be seen what will be the result of it all.

The county executive committee will hold a meeting at Elizabeth tonight. At that time the Plainfield men may have the situation explained to them. Monday evening, August 7th, there will be a meeting of the city executive committee. Beside the general discussion of the campaign, the vacancy in the Fourth ward delegation, caused by the death of Alonzo Ayres, will be filled, and the members of the election board nominated and submitted to the county committee.

PRESIDENT THE FIFTH TIME.

Mrs. McGowan Chosen by Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association.

The fifth biennial convention of the Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association of the United States practically closed its labors in Asbury Park Friday with the election of officers for the ensuing term. The convention reconvenes this *morning to elect Su*preme Trustees and Supreme auditor. The election resulted in the choice of Mrs. Elizabeth B. McGowan, of Buffalo, for president for the fifth term by a majority of 113 over her opponent, Supreme Auditor Mrs. Teresa M. Popp, of Pittsburg, Pa. The other candidates were unanimously elected and are as follows:

Supreme first vice-president, Mrs. Mary A. Flanagan, of Syracuse; Supreme second vice-president, Mrs. Maria Quinn, of Newark; supreme recorder, Mrs. J. A. Boyer, of Erie, Pa.; supreme treasurer, Mrs. Mary E. Costello, of Brooklyn; supreme grand marshal, Mrs. Teresa Lutz, of Chicago; supreme guard, Mrs. E. C. Gardner, of Pittsburg, Pa.

Enjoyed a Trolley Ride.

The employes of Lederer's store were last Friday given a trolley ride to Bound Brook, where refreshments were served. Albert Lederer accompanied the party.

FEARED DEATH FROM A FLAIL OF STEEL

Engine's Broken Driving Rod Imperils a Man's Life.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

SMASHES THE CAB IN WHICH THE CONDUCTOR IS A PRISONER.

Accident Occurred Near Netherwood Sunday Night—Most of the Cab Was Pounded Off and It Was Feared That a Hole Might be Pounded in the Locomotive's Side and an Explosion Occur.

Crouched close to the boiler, with a mighty rod of steel aiming blows at him, Harry Shuck, a conductor on the New Jersey Central Railroad, was in danger of death for many minutes. Shuck was in the cab of the big camel-back freight engine No. 347, which was hauling a west-bound train of twenty-five empty coal cars near Netherwood last Sunday night.

The cab in the locomotive is built over the boiler and in front of the firebox. Beneath are the driving rods of the wheels. On each side of the cab is a narrow seat. Shuck sat on the left side. Charles Robinson, the engineer, was on the right. The firemen was behind the firebox. Nearing the Terrill road bridge there came the sharp snap of cracking steel, followed by a trembling of the engine.

Robinson knew in a flash that the steel belt holding the main driving rod of the forward left wheel had snapped, and the rod was free. Like a gigantic flail the bar of steel, two by four inches at its thinnest part, flew through the air. At its first down stroke three ties were snipped off close to the rail, as if they had been paper. It sunk three feet into the ground and it seemed the engine would topple over, but though it careened like a puff-struck yacht, it righted and went tearing along the track, though Robinson had turned off steam and put on the brakes.

There was no depending on the brakes after the third revolution of the rod, for it cut off the air brake cylinder. Then the flying bar began to play a terrible tattoo on the engine's side as if it wished to get at the demon that was thrashing it up and down. It shaved the steel sheathing from the side of the boiler as if it had been cut and tore away the end of the cab, passing within a few inches of Shuck, who lay down and shouted to Robinson for help. The engineer could do nothing but whistle for brakes. With each swing of the bar more of the engine was destroyed. Fragments flew over Shuck and the asbestos lining of the twin boiler sheathing fell over him.

Most of the cab had been pounded off, and at every swish Robinson expected a hole would be punched into the boiler and an explosion would occur. Shuck could only lie in wait. His face was white from fear. The wind from the flying steel ruffled his hair. The train was on a down grade and dashed through Netherwood, the rod hammering away at the engine.

At the first signal T. F. Snyder, a brakeman, began putting on brakes, and just beyond the station brought the train to a standstill. Shuck was almost helpless from fright, and had to be lifted out of the debris of the cab.

NOAH SHOEMAKER IS SANE.

County Physician so Decides—The Man is Still in Jail.

New Brunswick, July 25—A few weeks ago Noah Shoemaker, of Oak Tree, was lodged in jail on a charge of being insane and assaulting a relative with whom he lived. It was openly asserted that the man was crazy and that he was a dangerous fellow to have at large. He has been in jail since.

County Physician Carroll has made an examination of the man and declares that he is not insane. Jailer Messler says that the prisoner acts as rationally as any other prisoner that he has in the jail. The man is quiet and orderly, attends to his own business and shows no evidence of lunacy. He is now held awaiting disposition of the charge of assault and battery. He hopes to get bail.

Jailer Messler thinks that one of the best arguments in favor of the man's sanity is the fact that he is anxious to get out of jail. A sister of Shoemaker is now in the Insane Asylum. His son, Albert, is in State Prison, serving a term for the murder of Lizzie Shoemaker.

Historic House Destroyed by Fire.

Westfield, July 25—The old building on the Clark homestead at Roselle was destroyed by fire at an early hour yesterday morning. The Clark homestead was the home of Abner Clark, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. It was occupied by the families of Edward Johnson and Joseph Dunbar. William Sutherland had a narrow escape. His house and contents were consumed. The total loss was $2,500.

A LONG COAST LINE.

That of the United States Extends Sixteen Thousand Miles.

Next to the British empire the United States has the longest coast line of any nation in the world. With the new possessions of Alaska and the Philippines, the coast line of the United States will be at least 16,000 miles long, and with Cuba, which must have its coast line taken in charge by the coast survey of this country, there will be nearly 20,000 of coast to be cared for. The coast line of the United States without Alaska amounts to nearly 6,000 miles, divided as follows: Two thousand three hundred and forty-nine miles on the Atlantic coast; 1,550 miles on the Gulf of Mexico and nearly 2,000 miles on the Pacific coast. Alaska, because of the numerous indentations and islands—those Aleutian islands, which stretch westward until they meet the possessions of the "Great White Czar"—has an enormous coast line, amounting up to at least 3,000 miles.

To compute the coast line of the Philippines is at present impossible. Spain has no hydrographic office and no coast survey in working order. Even the number of islands in the Philippine group is not known. Spain has never taken the trouble to count them.

Since the purchase of Alaska in 1867 the sun has never set on the possessions of the United States. When the morning sun is whitening the bay of Manila the lights on the charts, which formed the basis of our survey of the Alaskan coast, were imperfect, and it will be years before the survey of that coast is completed.

In the meantime there is the coast of Porto Rico to be taken care of, and also the coasts of Cuba and the Philippines. The charts which are now depended on for Cuba are incomplete and unsatisfactory. England and the United States have done much work on the coast in the way of surveying the principal harbors, but in many cases the old and faulty Spanish charts are depended on. To make a complete survey of the Philippine archipelago is an enormous task, which will require years and the expenditure of lots of money. As the coasts of the United States are all looked after by the coast survey, so the surveys of the coasts of foreign countries are taken care of by the hydrographic office of the navy. This is a purely naval bureau, and the ships employed in making surveys outside of the country are all regularly commissioned men-of-war.

How Fishes Breathe.

Ulrich Dahlgren has been devoting much time to the study of the method by which fishes breathe has discovered two membranous valves just inside the gill openings. He explains the following conception of the breathing of teleost fishes, which is given by Mr. Dahlgren in the last issue of the Princeton University Bulletin: "The construction and operation of the fish's apparatus is that of a perfect two-valve pump. In such a pump there must be a chamber which possesses two openings, each guarded by a valve. The forces necessary to operate such a structure are three for six in number: 1. A force as applied to alternately contract and expand the chamber. 2. A force to alternately shut and open the posterior (exit) valve; 3. A force to alternately shut and open the anterior valve. These valves must be operated in proper sequence to the expansion and contraction of the chamber, else the valves would be operated either by separate mechanism or by the automatic action of a current passing through the chamber. It is to this latter principle that attention is called in the close of the fish. Here we find a chamber the oral cavity) and two openings, the mouth (anterior opening) and the double gill opening (posterior opening). Muscular force is applied to expand and contract the oral cavity. But to such direct application of muscular force is needed to open and close the the anterior and posterior openings. This is done automatically by the branchiostegal valves in the gill opening (or posterior opening) and by the maxmillary and mandibular breathing valves in the mouth opening for anterior opening.) The fish is thus not required to use separate muscles to close and open the passages, but the loss of energy due to friction and retarded momentum on the valves must be added to that required to expand and contract the oral cavity. It is simply a mechanical economy such as is found in the heart."

Porto Rico's Unknown Flora.

Flora of Porto Rico are next to unknown. The Spanish never had energy enough to undertake a study of Porto Rico flora, and they distrusted foreign scientists, who, they thought, might be harboring revolutionary designs under the guise of the sciences. Two German botanists, however, by a liberal bribery of the Spanish officials, did succeed in having a limited survey and collection of the flora. One of them was Herr Schwanecke, who visited Porto Rico in 1820; the other, Herr Sintenis, in the seventies. Partially over the islands about twenty years ago. The studies of these two men comprise about all that is known of Porto Rico flora. It is believed that some of the rarest orchids in the world are growing unknown in the interior of Porto Rico. There are luxuriant tree palms one hundred feet in height, rich ferns, gorgeous flowers of all descriptions, banana, orange, lemon and other plants.

In the State Prussia.

The use of matches has been forbidden in the schools of Zurich, Switzerland, and pen, ink and paper have been substituted, even in the lowest forms. The reason given is that the light gray marks of the pencil on the slate cannot be followed without straining the eyes; that the pressure which it is necessary to exert upon the pencil lessens the facility of the hand and renders an easy, flowing handwriting more difficult to attain, and that the use of the slate is not conducive to cleanly work.

WAR IS EXPENSIVE.

WHAT IT COSTS TO FIRE THE BIG GUNS OF WAR VESSELS.

Thirteen Inch Guns on the Oregon Require Over a Ton of Powder for a Single Charge—Some Astonishing Figures and Comparisons.

It is only by going into details of what the sinews of war actually cost that one can realize how the big government has been spending $1,000,000 a day, or thereabouts, during all the weeks of fighting and preparation for fighting. Thousands of tons of gun powder, for instance, have been bought at prices ranging from $1 a pound downward. A ton of gunpowder seems a goodly quantity until one learns that it would not even suffice for a single discharge of the four thirteen-inch guns on the Oregon. These four guns eat up powder at the rate of twenty-two tons an hour, $44,000 an hour, if the powder cost $1 a pound—and some of the bombardments have lasted many hours. It is estimated that these four guns keep up a steady firing at their maximum rate of one shot in three minutes, and, that being the case, the heaviest item in the expenses is going to be counted, for each one of these 1,100-pound projectiles costs $800 which gives $3,600 every time the four guns go off, or $72,000 for an hour's firing.

But there are other guns on the Oregon, many other guns, and to find out what an hour's firing of a big battleship costs we must take all these into consideration. A single shot from one of the eight-inch guns costs $200, and there are eight of these, so that a single round from them costs $1,600. But their fire is much more rapid that that of the thirteen-inch guns; each one can be discharged once in a minute, or sixty times in an hour, which would give $96,000 for an hour's firing by them all, assuming it be kept up continuously.

Then there are five five-inch guns, and a round from the five costs about $200. But again the fire increases very much in rapidity, so that we may count 240 rounds an hour, or a cost of $48,000.

Thus, for these three classes of guns alone, we have an expense per hour during continuous firing of $216,000, or more than the President's salary for his whole four years. It may be that such continuous firing of all the guns would never take place in actual practice, but the figures may stand for purposes of illustration. And, of course, nothing has yet been said of the many guns of smaller caliber which are on the Oregon; there are the six-pounders, which throw out a shot each five seconds; there are the three-pounders, the one-pounders, the fifty-seven millimeter rifles, the thirty-seven millimeter revolving cannon, and the wonderful machine guns, which discharge eighty one-inch projectiles a minute, or 4,800 projectiles an hour.

Just how many thousands of dollars per hour must be added to our estimate for the consumption of these guns is a matter of expert calculation, but it is evidently well within the truth to assume that the Oregon could fire away $1,000,000 worth of powder and projectiles in a single day's fighting, using only the hours of daylight, and each one of the other big battleships could do the same. And still we have not taken into account all the cruisers and other fighting craft, each one of which would be blazing away, we may be sure, and using up money according to her best capacity.

Let us now consider the cost of ammunition used by a regiment of infantry in an hour's fighting. This is a matter of easy calculation, since it is known that the Krag-Jorgensen cartridges cost $18 a thousand. It is merely necessary to estimate how many cartridges would be used. Assuming a regiment, of 1,000 men, and allowing each man to fire twelve in five seconds, which is slower than they often shoot, we will have twelve thousand shots fired every minute, or 720,000 shots in an hour, with a number of cartridges, at the rate just mentioned, will cost $12,960. And that is an estimate for a single regiment during a single hour. What it would cost for a whole army to fire for a whole day and then go on firing for many days, is again a matter for expert calculation. But it is easy to see how this would eat into the millions of dollars.

The Leopard and the Pan.

One day a worthy Kuhi housewife came out from her cooking, and, standing on the ledge of rock at her door, emptied a pan of boiling water into the rank herbage growing below. It fell, splash, on the back of a sleeping leopard, who jumped perpendicularly into the air as high as the roof of the hut. What might have happened next? Who can say? But the astonished woman dropped the pan with a clang upon the rock, and the leopard took one leap down the cliff and was followed, and the leopard's downward leaps became longer and swifter as the pan bounded after it from rock to rock.

When last seen the leopard had just achieved a leap of about 350 feet to the very bottom of the ravine, thousands of feet below, and the pan had whirled about 500 feet over it on to the opposite side. The leopard would live often to tell with pleasure; but the pan which first scaled half the hide off him and then bounded clanging in his wake from the top of the Himalayas to the plains below was something which he could not face.

Arabs at Omdurman.

The Arab mode of attack was quaint to a degree; formed in a line, each tribe advanced galant a pace or the village. When about five hundred yards from the mud houses they halted and commenced to dance, brandishing spears and swords in the air and firing off rifles. After a few moments they resumed the advance, dancing and firing all the while (in the air), when suddenly, with a yell, they rushed at the houses, and, having effected an entrance, they slaughtered every one within.

A Laplander will often skate 150 miles in a day.

A WAKE-UP ROUTE.

The Vicissitudes of the Business and Why the Projector Gave It Up.

"In the course of my hustling," said a man who has done many things for a living, "I got up once in a Western town a wake-up route, waking up people that wanted to get up at some fixed hour in the morning. It was a lively town, with a lot of people in it that made a practice of sitting up nights, and so found it hard work to get up in the morning, and I had no trouble in getting subscribers. I had hard work in serving 'em all. I man had to move sharp to get around to 'em all in time. He couldn't stay and argue with a man that was stupid and sleepy. If he wouldn't get up after half-a-dozen calls had to let him go, and it was this that finally made trouble, because these men wanted to be waked up with a club, so to speak. If necessary to break in a man was punctuality itself and never failed to be there at the appointed hour and to wake the man up, yet he was a slight and rather delicate man and he couldn't enforce his demands, quite aside from the question of having time to stay. Some big burly chap would say to him:

"'You get out my way or I'll break you in two,' and what could my man do?

"But in the morning these folks would always be sorry they hadn't got up and I'd generally get my money enough, but they used to come to the office and kick because I hadn't got 'em up. They said they'd contracted to be got up and they wanted to be got up.

"Well, I stood this sort of nonsense for a while and then I imported a wake-up from the East, a powerful, big-headed fellow who would wake up anybody at any hour of the night, no matter how sound asleep he might be and keep him awake. I sent this man out one night also with my little man for a pilot. It was like this:

"They'd go into the man's room, and the little fellow'd do the talking.

"'Come now,' he'd say, 'it's time to get up.'

"'You go 'way,' says the sleeper.

"'No,' says the little man, 'you want to get up right now, and if you don't I'm going to get you up.'

"And in a minute or less the big fellow would tackle him. He'd wake him up all right, and the sleeper realized in a minute every time what had happened. Then they'd go at it, right there; but my man was a hummer with a loud hum, and he cleaned out his route every time in short order. He licked fifteen subscribers that morning in an hour and forty minutes.

"But I knew that while we could lick 'em easy in detail, we couldn't begin to touch the business that they were sure to come; and so along in the morning, before they'd got around, we moved out.

Four Lions Weigh a Ton.

"What does a lion weigh?" Those who know the look of the king of beasts and his build would say his body really is, will probably come farthest from the truth. About 300 to 350 pounds is a usual estimate. But a full-grown lion will tip the scales at no less than 500 pounds. Five hundred and forty pounds is the record for an African lion. His bone is solid and heavy as ivory.

The other day I saw the lion very close. A Bengal tiger, killed two years ago by an English officer, scaled 520 pounds. A tiger this size has, however, not nearly the muscular strength than the biggest lion.

Few people know that a grizzly bear can give points to any other carnivorous animal as to strength. A large grizzly bear, weighing just four hundredweight, has been watched carrying a heifer twothirds its own weight up and down the steep slopes and rugged mountain side, and this without pausing for one instant for rest.

The big white Polar bear, though not really so dangerous a customer, is capable of performing feats of almost ordinary feats of strength. A polar bear has been seen to move with his paws a bowlder six men had with difficulty put in position to guard a cache of provisions.

Machine Work and Hand Work.

There are few people now living who can remember when joiner work, including even flooring and ceiling, was nearly all planed by hand,—a laborious process that did not in most cases include thicknessing, and was consequently an inferior method, except perhaps as to finished surfaces; and even this exception is not to be made in comparison with the fixed knife planing machine employed in Europe and, more notably, with smoothing machines invented in the United States.

Measured by manual energy, which may be taken as 2,500 foot-pounds, or one-thirtenth of a horse power, for a long run, it would take 130 men to equal the planing machine before named; but there is a difference in favor of the machine in the guidance and application of the cutting edges that justifies the ratios before named.

These comparisons convey an idea of the extraordinary economic results attained through the use of the principal processes of wood-conversion. They seem incredible, but there are no longer means of comparing because values are now reserved to the machine product alone, and hand-work no longer exists.—The Engineering Magazine.

The Costliest Bean on Earth.

It is not generally known that the vanilla bean is the costliest bean on earth. It grows wild and is gathered by the natives in Papantla and Misantla, Mexico. When brought from the forests these beans are sold at the rate of £2 5s per 1,000, but when dried and cured they cost about £2 5s per pound. They are mainly used by druggists, and last year over 90,000,000 beans were imported into this country.

Nails Never Grow Equally.

The nails of two fingers never grow with the same degree of rapidity. The nail of the middle finger grows with the greatest rapidity, and that of the thumb least. It has been computed that the average growth of the finger nails is one-thirty-second of an inch per week, or a little more than an inch and a half per year.

CARING FOR THE COUNTY INSANE.

Union County Freeholders Looking Into the Subject.

MAY BUILD COUNTY ASYLUM

THOUGHT THAT IT WOULD SAVE SEVERAL THOUSANDS ANNUALLY.

It is Said That the Outlay for a County Asylum Would Not Exceed $100,000, Which Would Afford Facilities for the Care of the 237 Patients Now supported in the State Institutions

The question of taking care of the insane and feeble-minded people in Union county has been under consideration for a long time by the members of the Union County Board of Freeholders, and it now looks as though in the near future arrangements will be made whereby the county people who have to be taken care of will not be sent to Morris Plains, as is now the case, but that the county will have an asylum of its own.

When it is realized that the county appropriates about $40,000 every year for its insane people and their care, it is considered about time a change was made. There are now 237 people from this county at Morris Plains that this county is obliged to stand the expense for. This does not include a large number of people who are paid for by their own people or friends, or who are detained at private institutions in various places. The question of the county providing an asylum for its own use has been a growing one, and it is confidently believed by the Freeholders that at least $10,000 can be saved each year to the county. It would probably cost the county in the neighborhood of about $100,000 for a suitable asylum, including land, and bonds could be issued and money secured at 4 per cent., and thus the county would save considerable money.

There is now a special committee of eight members from the Board of Freeholders who have the matter under consideration and they report to the full Board from time to time. Last week Friday this committee visited the Essex County Asylum near Caldwell, where they received a very favorable impression of the style and kind of an institution that Union county needs. This building is about 80 feet wide and 500 feet long. It is thoroughly equipped in every particular and is so arranged that as the necessity demands additions can be made to the building. The committee, of which J. Martin Roll is chairman, was very much pleased with what they saw. This committee is composed of members from every district in the county, thus allowing a full representation. The members have a certain tract of land in view for such a building, but rightfully they do not want to disclose it at present as the price might suddenly take a jump upward.

There will be a regular meeting of the full Board one week from Thursday, at which time a verbal report will probably be received from this special committee. In a week or so the committee expect to visit Camden, where there is a county asylum similar to the one in Essex county. From what can be learned there does not seem to be the slightest doubt but what Union county will have an asylum of her own, which will reduce the expense of caring for the insane to a large extent, at the same time giving them equally as good care as they now receive.

JERSEY TARS RAN THE SHIP.

Reserves on the Prairie Were in Full Charge.

Ensign S. S. Norcross, of the Battalion of the West, New Jersey Naval Reserves, writes from Gardiner's Bay, L. I., that the Reserves are having a fine practice on the United States auxiliary cruiser Prairie. The ship was turned over to the Reserves bodily Saturday morning, and from then until this morning, when she will put to sea again for the cruise home, the regular officers and men aboard merely acted as spectators, while the Reserve officers and crew performed all the duties aboard ship. The first few days were spent by the Reserves in familiarizing themselves with the Prairie's guns, and by the time the ship was turned over to them they were prepared to begin practice without assistance from the regulars.

First Meeting He Had Missed.

Last week Friday there was a committee meeting from the Union County Board of Freeholders, and by virtue of his office, as director of the Board, J. Frank Hubbard is a member of that committee, but owing to illness it was impossible for him to attend the meeting. This is the first meeting he has missed since he has been a member of the Board.

Out of the Hospital.

D. W. Littell, Jr., who has been confined to a hospital in New York for treatment to one of his eyes, has returned home, though he has not been permanently discharged from the hospital. It will be some weeks before Mr. Littell is able to attend to business.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing. Especially noticeable is the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend, the demand for them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. Now, I believe, to

AGED COUPLE ARE AGAIN IN TROUBLE.

Mrs. James Clark in Muhlenberg Hospital Now.

SHE WILL LOSE HER TOES.

SUFFERING FROM GANGFENE IN HER RIGHT FOOT.

Was Living in a Small But Comfortable House Near New Providence When Blood Poisoning Set In—Operation to be Shortly Performed—Feared at First That She Would Lose Her Entire Foot.

The troubles of the aged couple, Mr. and Mrs. James Clark, are not yet over. Mrs. Clark is now at Muhlenberg Hospital where an operation is soon to be performed on her that will result in the loss of the toes of her right foot. It was only by exceedingly clever work on the part of her physicians that she did not lose her entire right foot.

Readers of this paper will remember the Clarks, the old couple who lived in an old tumble-down shanty hidden away in the woods near Berkeley Heights. Clark was an old fish peddler in this section many years ago but illness and old age compelled he and his wife to give up any means of livelihood. With starvation staring them in the face, the facts concerning their circumstances were made known to the public by The Daily Press and relief was immediately offered by kind-hearted Plainfielders.

They left their old shanty and were domiciled in a small but comfortable house near New Providence. For a time all went well and then the Clarks began another period of trouble. Overseer of the Poor John Evans, of New Providence borough, was considerably interested in the old people and did all that was in his power as a borough official to aid them.

Two weeks ago Mrs. Clark began to suffer from an attack of gangrene in her right foot. Through the efforts of Mr. Evans and some of the Plainfield friends of the Clarks, Mrs. Clark was finally brought to this city where she is now quartered at Muhlenberg Hospital.

It was feared at first that she would have to have the entire foot amputated but her physicians were good ones and it is now declared that only the loss of the toes of that foot will be necessary. The operation will be performed shortly and then, when Mrs. Clark recovers from the effect sufficiently, she will be moved back to her home near New Providence.

JERSEY NOT FOR BRYAN.

SO "BOB" DAVIS, OF HUDSON COUNTY, SAID YESTERDAY.

Thinks Bryan's Nomination Would be Unwise—His Choice Was Dewey—Otherwise he Thought of Gen. Lee or Cleveland

Jersey City, August 2.—Robert Davis, Democratic leader in Hudson county, and who, next to ex Senator James Smith, Jr., is the best-known Democrat in the State, declared last night that New Jersey's delegation to the Democratic National convention will be against Bryan. A conference of Democrats is to be held at Asbury Park next Monday and the National situation will be discussed. Mr. Davis has been invited to attend. In discussing the matter last night he said:

"I certainly think it would be unwise to nominate Bryan or do anything to bring the silver issue to the front again."

Mr. Davis's personal choice for the Presidential nomination is Admiral Dewey.

"Could he be persuaded to accept the nomination," he said, "I think he would sweep the country."

"Fitzhugh Lee would also make an acceptable candidate and so would Grover Cleveland."

There was talk in Jersey City last night that at next Monday's conference the Cleveland boom would be launched.

Broke A Finger While Diving.

A painful accident occurred to Harry L. Maxson, of this city, a few days ago, while he and a party of friends were at Patchogue, L. I. Mr. Maxson was in swimming and while making a dive from a boat he struck a finger on his right hand fracturing it badly. It was with difficulty that he got out of the water and he has suffered much pain ever since.

Roundsmen Change Places.

The regular monthly change has taken effect in the police department. Roundsman Flynn has returned today duty, while Roundsman Frederickson will make his rounds during the night.

BADLY BURNED BY ACID.

STRANGE MEN THREW VITRIOL IN DEAF MUTE'S FACE.

Their Victim Was Frank Mesick, Nine Years Old, of Woodbridge—Happened Near Boynton Beach—Men Escaped.

Woodbridge, August 2d—Harry Webber, seven years old, and Frank Mesick, nine years old, were sent to Sewaren, about one mile from this place, yesterday afternoon to take some things to Webber's sister, who is employed by a Mr. Hawkins there. They left home about 2 o'clock and had a little wagon with them, in which they carried their things.

After they had delivered the goods to Webber's sister, the two boys started to walk down toward Boynton Beach. They were walking along near Smith's Creek, which is used as a harbor to tie up small yachts and overhaul them. A negro and a white man were engaged in painting a large cat-boat, and when they saw the two boys they called to them to go aboard. The Webber boy refused to go, but Mesick, who is deaf and dumb, stood still, and the negro induced him to board the boat. Webber then took the wagon and started to walk toward Boynton Beach. He says he looked back for Mesick and could not see him.

An hour after Webber reached home the Mesick lad was seen by the gateman at the Central Railroad crossing at Sewaren running up the road toward his home holding his hands to his face. When he reached home it was found that his face was terribly burned. The boy says the men on the boat threw some liquid over him. The stuff was evidently some powerful acid, presumably vitriol, as the skin about the boy's mouth and eyes is eaten away. His legs and arms are also badly burned. He is in a critical condition.

A search was made for the men, but without success. Young Mesick has not been home long from the deaf and dumb school in Trenton. It is supposed they the men threw the liquid on the boy.

ON LOOKOUT FOR FEVER

JERSEY CITY HEALTH AUTHORITIES WATCHING TRAINS FROM SOUTH.

Every Effort Made to Prevent Ingress of Yellow Fever From Virginia—Railroad Officials Co-operate Gladly.

Jersey City, August 2.—President John D. McGill and Inspector Daniel W. Benjamin of the Jersey City Health Board were ready yesterday to cope with any emergencies that might arise in Jersey City as the result of the yellow fever outbreak in Virginia. It has been decided to keep special watch over incoming trains from the south at the Pennsylvania and the Jersey Central stations. The railroad officers have offered to assist and the local health authorities say assistance they may need, and there will be the heartiest co-operation in all efforts to prevent the disease from reaching Jersey City and New York.

Health Inspector Benjamin intends to keep in close touch with the New York health authorities. He says the Jersey City officials will do their utmost to prevent any yellow fever germs from getting to New York via the railroads that run into Jersey City. The railroad officials declared yesterday that they would be fully on alert as the health authorities, and that special pains would also be taken to prevent the germs from being imported in freight and other goods.

WAR ON STRAY DOGS

Mayor Smalley Says Dog Ordinance Will Be Enforced to Letter.

Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of the borough, is on the warpath and has declared war against the canines in his domain. A short time ago His Honor issued a proclamation warning all owners of dogs to muzzle them, and if they were found running about without a muzzle and were not registered, they would be shot. This edict has not been heeded, in other words it has been wholly ignored. The Mayor now declares that he will enforce the ordinance to the letter, and has given instructions to the marshals to promptly shoot all dogs whose owners are not complying with the law.

Kicked by a Horse.

John Steiner, of Somerset street, is confined to his home with a severely injured leg. Mr. Steiner is employed by Conover, the truckman, and a few days ago he was kicked by a horse in the leg. Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan was called and is properly treating Mr. Steiner, who hopes to resume work in a week's time.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church, will leave next week for Saratoga, where he will spend his vacation.

PLAINFIELD LOSES A WORTHY CITIZEN.

Lemuel Wright Serrell, Sr., Died Tuesday Afternoon.

WAS A PATENT LAWYER.

HAS BEEN CLOSELY IDENTIFIED WITH CITY'S PROGRESS.

Came From England When a Lad and Succeeded to His Father's Business—Lived an Active Life—Prominent in the First Baptist Church—He Was Senior Deacon—Active in City Affairs

After an illness lasting about one month, primarily the result of paralysis, Lemuel Wright Serrell, Sr., aged 70 years, one of Plainfield's best known citizens, passed away Tuesday afternoon at 4:20 o'clock. Up to the time that Mr. Serrell was taken ill he was very active and attended promptly to business, going to his office in New York every day. In the death of Mr. Serrell Plainfield loses one of her very best citizens; her interests were his own. For twenty-eight years he resided in this city. He was a thorough Christian in every sense of the word, and lived the life he professed. In many channels he will be missed and the liberal support he accorded all worthy charities will be a living monument to his memory.

Mr. Serrell was born in London, Eng., August 21, 1829, and was the son of William Serrell. November 7, 1831, the elder Serrell and his family came to New York, where he opened a patent law office. At that time William Serrell was the only patent lawyer in this county. At an early age Mr. Serrell entered the office of his father, and since the age of fourteen years he has been engaged in the patent law business. After the death of the elder Serrell the son succeeded to the business which he held up to the time of his death. Its name conducted under the firm name of L. W. Serrell & Son, at the corner of Broadway and Duane street. Harold Serrell, of this city, was the other member of the firm. The great ability of Mr. Serrell and his strong personality resulted in the building up of a business second to none in this country. Mr. Serrell was without doubt the most widely known and best expert patent lawyer in this country. He handled some of the most difficult cases with the greatest ability and success, and from one end of this country to the other he was known in his particular line of business.

In the summer of 1871 Mr. Serrell came to Plainfield and resided here up to the time of his death. Three summers prior to that date he spent in this city. Since coming here he has been closely identified with the city's interests. He served as a Councilman for two terms and for several years he was a member of the Plainfield Board of Health. He was a staunch Republican. He was prominently identified with the First Baptist church and up to the time of his death was senior deacon. In every department of church work his influence was felt and there he will be greatly missed. He was a faithful attendant at all the church services and always took an active part.

Prior to the Civil War Mr. Serrell was sergeant in Co. D, Washington Grays, (8th Regt.), which position he held for eight years. During the Civil War he was First Lieutenant in Co. C, 13th Regt., U. S. Vols. He was an acquaintance of Henry Clay and took a prominent part in the great statesman's obsequies.

Mr. Serrell could date his ancestry back to 1572 to John de Serrell, who entered Queen Elizabeth's Navy in the conflict against the Spanish Armada.

Mr. Serrell was a man highly esteemed by all who knew him and especially by those who were associated with him in business. Everyone who had business with him placed the highest confidence in his ability. In the home he was kind and loving and to every member of the family there were endearing ties that will never be severed.

Among those who survive him are two brothers, Col. E. W. Serrell, of New York; Alfred G. Serrell, of Yonkers, N. Y.; a sister, Mrs. Wm. G. Mott, of Brooklyn. He also leaves five children: Harold Serrell, Mrs. Ella Serrell and L. W. Serrell, Jr., of this city; Wallace Lincoln Serrell, of Chicago, and George Serrell, who is now assistant purser on the Transport "Burnside," now stationed at Santiago. He also leaves a number of grandsons.

Mr. Serrell was a member of the American Institute of Christian Philosophists, and honorary member of

BASIS FOR SCANDAL IN STATE SCHOOL.

Governor Voorhees Began Formal Investigation.

WITNESSES ARE EXAMINED.

REMARKABLE HAPPENINGS AT STATE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Investigation Began Tuesday Afternoon and Will be Continued Today—Testimony Did Not Reflect Credit on Present Management—New Methods of Punishment Revealed—Employes Told Facts.

Trenton, Aug. 2—Governor Voorhees, in company with several members of the board of trustees of the State Industrial School for Girls, yesterday began a formal investigation of the scandals recently made public at that institution. In the party which went to the school yesterday afternoon besides the Governor, were Rev. Dr. George C. Maddock, President P. J. FitzGibbon and E. R. Cook, of the trustees. The examination of a number of witnesses disclosed the fact that the published reports are founded on facts, although they may have been exaggerated.

From half past three o'clock in the afternoon until 7 o'clock last evening the inquisition was in full swing, and it will be resumed at 10 o'clock this morning. Much testimony was adduced that does not reflect credit, to say the least, upon the present management of the school. The witnesses examined were all attaches of the institution and some startling revelations as to the methods of punishment in vogue at the institution were made.

By the testimony brought out yesterday many of the assertions concerning the harsh treatment of the girls at the school were confirmed. In addition, many new methods of punishment were revealed. The use of quinine and castor oil in cases where the girl inmates were too free with their tongues is one of the methods quite common at the school and with which the public is not familiar. From start to finish the proceedings were very interesting, almost every witness making some startling disclosure.

NIXON'S MEN WON'T STRIKE.

Discuss the Situation and Decide to Continue at Work.

Elizabeth, August 2—There was no strike yesterday at Lewis Nixon's, Elizabethport shipyard, nor is there any likelihood of there being one. The men are satisfied, they say, with the way Mr. Nixon is treating them and with the wages.

Monday night the situation was discussed, and it was decided not to strike.

This was a disappointment to the labor agitators from New York and Brooklyn.

Only Three Days More

when Foot Specialist Brown, 145 West Second street, will positively close his office here. A last visit to his office will save you years of misery and suffering, for when the feet ache we ache all over. Half the world's successes result from opportunities grasped at the right moment. After this blame nobody but yourself if you continue to suffer from corns or bunions. He has permanently cured the feet of others, he can do the same for you. H. A. Weber, grocer, Liberty and Second streets, says: "Ten years ago Mr. Brown perfectly cured my corns and bunions; no foot troubles since." S. Sharkey, grocer, Third and Richmond streets, says: "About twelve years ago Specialist Brown completely cured my bunions and coins, also made my enlarged great toe joints small. My corns or bunions never came back, and today my feet are as sound as a dollar." G. Voebl, baker, 127 Front street, says: "Four years ago Mr. Brown perfectly cured my long-standing corns and bunions; no foot aches since." F. R. Vandervoort, at Endress' meat market, Front and Park, says: "Four years ago Mr. Brown completely cured my ingrowing toe nails and coins; they have not pained me since." Mrs. R. V. Wagner, West Third street, says: "Over ten years ago Mr. Brown completely and perfectly cured my corns and bunions, the great toe joints were made small, and in all that time my feet have not hurt one bit; he also cured my mother's bunions and ingrowing toe nails at the same time."

PORTO RICANS THANK PLAINFIELD SCHOOLS.

For Gift of American Flags Sent in June.

MAYOR OF PONCE WRITES.

FLAGS WERE SENT THROUGH DR. H. K. CARROLL.

Went to the First Free American School in Porto Rico, Founded By Luis Porrata Doria, Mayor of Ponce—Dr. Carroll's Letter to the Mayor—Latter's Reply—Flags Gift of Children.

The day before Decoration Day there was a patriotic celebration in Bryant School, in which Lincoln School also participated. United States Commissioner H. K. Carroll was present and addressed the schools, giving an account of public education, so called, in Porto Rico. A large flag, with two or three hundred smaller flags, were presented to him, in behalf of the scholars, who paid for them in penny contributions. He received the flags for the American free school in Ponce, and forwarded them through the Cuban and Pan American Express Company, which carried them without charge. Dr. Carroll wrote a letter to the Mayor of Ponce, which, with the reply, is given herewith:

Plainfield, N. J.,
June 16, 1899.

Hon. Luis Porrata Doria,
Alcalde of Ponce,
Ponce, Porto Rico.

My Dear Sir:—You will soon receive—perhaps, indeed, have already received—through the kindness of the Cuban & Pan American Express Co., a package containing a large American flag and numerous small flags. These flags are the gift to the American school in Ponce, which I had the honor to visit in company with yourself in March last, of the Bryant and Lincoln Public schools of Plainfield, New Jersey.

These two public schools held a joint session in honor of Decoration Day, which is devoted to the memory of those who fell in defense of the Union in the Civil War of 1861-65. It is an intensely patriotic occasion as much so as Independence Day, which is celebrated the Fourth of July. The exercises, under the direction of Miss E. V. Shattuck, the principal of the Bryant School, consisted of patriotic songs and addresses in which the pupils, officers of the schools and visitors participated.

One of the most interesting parts of the ceremonies was the presentation, through the superintendent, Mr. Maxson, on behalf of the schools, to myself, as Commissioner for the United States to Porto Rico, of the large flag and the smaller flags, to be conveyed by me to the school in Ponce, Porto Rico. In accepting the gift, I gave some account of the public school system in Porto Rico, and paid lovingly of my visit to the school under the care of Captain Sutherland, Miss Dodd, Miss Hallsbaugh and others. With the gift of these flags from the children of our public schools go their best wishes to the children of the school in Ponce, for whom, individually, the small flags are intended. They were delighted to hear of the larger privileges which those children are now enjoying, and desire that their opportunities under the rule of United States shall be as great as those which they themselves are accustomed to. It is with very great pleasure that I act as the instrument for the transfer of this patriotic gift to your school. The message is one of hearty good will from children in the United States to children in Porto Rico. Our children love the flag because it is to them the emblem of liberty and justice and equal rights, and they doubt not that in time Porto Ricans will also love it ardently as their own dear flag.

I should be glad to be remembered to the teachers and to the patrons and patronesses whom I had the honor to meet when I was last in Ponce. With many kind remembrances of your courtesies to me, and with best wishes for the prosperity of the city under your charge, and especially of the school in which you are interested, I am, yours very truly,

(signed) Henry K. Carroll,
Commissioner.

July 15, 1899.

Mayor's office, City of Ponce, P. R., U. S. A.

Hon. H. K. Carroll, Special Commissioner for the United States to Puerto Rico, 95 Westervelt avenue, Plainfield, N. J.

My Dear Sir—Your esteemed letter of June 16th ultimo, is at hand, and I am very pleased with its interesting contents.

THE BOROUGH TAX RATE.

AGGREGATE WILL BE A FEW POINTS HIGHER.

The Borough Tax Has Been Reduced, But Increase in School and County Taxes Will Bring It About Equal.

The aggregate tax rate that the taxpayers of the borough of North Plainfield will be called upon to pay in the next fiscal year will be no lower than at present, and perhaps a trifle higher by a few points. It will not be the fault of the present borough officials, however. When the present borough government went into the office, one of its promises was to reduce the tax rate. As far as the borough officials are concerned, this has been done, for the borough rate itself has been reduced.

The total tax in the borough, it will be remembered, is composed of the borough tax, the county tax, the State school tax, the borough school tax and the Board of Health tax. The slight increase in the total amount of taxes to be raised during the coming fiscal year is caused by an increase in the appropriations of the borough school trustees, which is $2 050 larger than last year. This increase is the result of the additional expense in the running of the new school. The county tax is not yet fixed but it will be slightly increased according to the figures of those who ought to know.

The amount voted for the borough is $1,800 less than the last fiscal year. This is according to the promise of the new borough officials. It will not, however, overcome the increase in the borough school tax and the slight increase expected in the county tax will probably raise the aggregate tax rate a few points above the $2 20 where it is now.

BIRTHDAY PARTY IN BARN

FAITHFUL EMPLOYE OF MRS. E. R. POPE WELL REMEMBERED.

Barn and Lawn Decorated, While Many Friends Were Invited to Do Honor to Miss Bergen's 18th Birthday.

Miss Mabel Bergen, who for nine years has been employed in the family of Mrs. E. R. Pope, of Park avenue, will always remember with great pleasure the celebration of her 18th birthday, which occurred Tuesday. Her aunt, Miss Elizabeth Dunham, who has lived in the same family as a domestic for twenty-five years, has always taken a great deal of interest in her niece, and she told her that if she was a good girl she would give her a party on her birthday, and she kept her word. Mabel was a good girl and well deserved the honor accorded her last evening.

The scene of the festivities was in the large barn in the rear of Mrs. Pope's house, and where Mr. and Mrs. Albert Atkinson reside. The lower part of the barn was cleared of the horses and wagons and decorated with large American flags, while there was an artistic arrangement of Japanese and Chinese lanterns, suspended from trees close by.

Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson as well as "Aunt" Elizabeth, all helped in arranging the affair and in decorating, while Mrs. Pope and other members of the party assisted. A limited number of colored folk were invited and a quiet, but thoroughly enjoyable time was had. Music for dancing was furnished by Prof. Peterson.

In the upper part of the barn supper was served. In the centre of the table was a birthday cake. After a portion of the evening had been spent in dancing all adjourned to the upper rooms where refreshments were served in abundance, after which dancing was resumed.

Miss Bergen received a number of presents, and among them was an old shoe properly decorated, signifying good luck.

Those present to enjoy the occasion were Mrs. Blancher, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Dunham, Mrs. Jones, Rev. Tildon and wife, Miss Maggie Dunham, Miss Katie Dunham, Miss Elizabeth Dunham, Miss Minnie Dunham, Miss Louisa Dunham, Miss Grace Bowser, Miss Maude Doyle, Miss Mabel Doyle, Miss Alice Maynard, Miss Minnie Mitchell, Miss Anna Field, Miss Mary Tildon, Miss Walker, Miss Daisy Dunham, Alfred White, Frank Kelsey, Wm. Dickson, Able Var Kirk, Victor Bowser, Walter Peterson, Harry Kingslow, Geo. Anderson, Horace Van Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Atkinson.

Europe Agrees With Her.

Letters received in this city by friends and relatives of Mrs. Robert Binning, who is now in Europe with her husband, who is superintending the construction of a street railway in Glasgow, that the climate agrees with her and she has improved in health during her stay in that country.

WILL DARLING MAKES A QUIET PRISONER.

Visited by His Father and His Lawyer.

MAY PLEAD SELF-DEFENSE.

IS IN THE STRONGEST CELL AND IS CAREFULLY WATCHED.

Was Interviewed by Lawyer Angleman Immediately on His Arrival in New Brunswick—Angleman Refuses to Disclose Line of Action—Pathetic Meeting of Father and Son in the County Jail.

New Brunswick, August 2—William M. Darling, who shot and killed Harry Dunham at New Market four years ago, now lies in cell No. 2, the strongest and safest cell in the Middlesex county jail. Since his arrival here Saturday afternoon, he has been very quiet and has made a model prisoner. Two "trusties" have watched him carefully, to see that no attempt was made to end his own life.

Darling has not been inclined to see visitors aside from his lawyer, Winfield S. Angleman, of Plainfield, and his father. Lawyer Angleman reached the jail soon after the prisoner and the two held an hour's consultation. Mr. Angleman refused to say, however, what line of action would be adopted but he believed that it was a case of self defence that might be the case.

Darling has spent his time since he was locked up in the county jail here in a very quiet manner. He reads considerably and looks wan and tired. When they met the father was overcome with grief. It was the first meeting since young Darling fled from his home four years ago on the night of the shooting of Dunham. The young man was affected as much as his father. The prisoner tried to soothe Mr. Darling, but the latter could not discuss the case and left the cell soon to recover from his agitation.

Darling will probably be arraigned for trial the second Tuesday in September at the next term of court. Prosecutor Voorhees is working on the case and says that he is confident of a conviction. He has been quietly looking up the witnesses in the case and says that he has secured all the important ones. The trial promises to be an interesting one and much interest is expressed in the course of action the prisoner's counsel will take in his attempt to clear him.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

MARRIAGE OF MISS BERTHA F. WARMAN AND ELI LONG, JR.

Took Place Yesterday Afternoon at the Home of the Bride's Father, Thomas E. Warman, of Grove Street.

Miss Bertha F. Warman, youngest daughter of Thomas E. Warman, and Dr. Eli Long, Jr., were married at 2 o'clock yesterday P. M. by Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman, rector of Grace Episcopal church of this city.

The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's father, 104 Grove street, North Plainfield. The wedding was a quiet affair, only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom being present. There was no lavish display, the marriage being conducted in the simple and appropriate ceremony of the Episcopal church. After the ceremony and congratulations a light collation was participated in. The newly married couple then left for a short wedding journey. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Long will reside at 49 West Ninety-seventh street, New York city.

The groom is a son of General Eli Long, U. S. A., retired. He is a practicing physician in New York, with a promising future.

No High Step Here.

Station Agent Joseph A. Haynes, of the North Avenue station, has arranged to have portable steps used at all the principal trains so that the women will not experience any difficulty in getting on and off the trains. Mr. Haynes always has the interests of the traveling public at heart, and he is always striving to give as many comforts as possible, especially to Plainfielders.

A Big Time Coming.

The clam-bake to be given by the Plainfield Advancement Association will probably take place soon after the next meeting of the association, August 16th, possibly the next evening. It will undoubtedly be held at Mountainside Park and the invitation list will include one hundred prominent names.

—The enrollment book of the Plainfield Advancement Association is at Rowley's drug store, where any person desiring to join can be enrolled.

SOLDIERS' PLOT AT HILLSIDE CEMETERY.

Presented to and Dedicated by Winfield Scott Post.

ADDRESS BY ALEX GILBERT.

COMRAD JACOB JENNINGS FIRST TO BE BURIED.

Impressive Ceremonies Held Sunday Afternoon in the "City of the Dead" by the Local Grand Army Post—Military Salute Fired Over the Dead Hero's Grave—Large Gathering of Veterans and Their Friends.

The soldiers' burial plot, recently presented by the Hillside cemetery association to the local Grand Army Post, was dedicated Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock by Winfield Scott Post, No. 72. The plot was secured through the efforts of Justice E. D. Moffett, chairman; Captain J. F. Hubbard ann Col. Mason W. Tyler, a committee appointed by the post for this purpose.

The members of Winfield Scott Post, to the number of nearly 80, gathered at the Post's rooms yesterday afternoon. There were also present a number of ladies—principally members of the families of the organization. There were four carryalls used to convey the organization and the invited guest to the cemetery. Later Former Mayor Gilbert, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, Rev. Dr. A. Main, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, and many others drove to the cemetery.

At 4 o'clock when the dedicatory services were held there were fully 500 citizens gathered about the soldiers' plot.

Grouped about the sacred spot were the members of the Grand Army Post and the firing squad while in the centre stood the Hon. Alex Gilbert and Commander Charles Stevens of the Post.

The exercises were highly interesting. They consisted of the formal presentation of the plot to the Post by Former Mayor Gilbert, who is president of the Hillside Cemetery Association. The address was delivered in Mr. Gilbert's characteristic pleasing style. He refered to the lamentable fact that each year the members of the Grand Army were passing away—their numbers were growing less and less and it would be but a comparatively few years when the veterans of the civil war will all have gone to join the innumerable host. As Plainfield had furnished her quota of brave men who sacrificed their personal interests and many of them their lives for this great and glorious country, it was both just and fitting that those who from year to year pass away should have a suitable resting place. The cemetery association had taken this view of the situation and it cheerfully had donated and set apart this plot of ground to be used as a final resting place for the loyal boys who followed the stars and stripes in the dark days of the Rebellion.

Commander Stevens, in a few words, accepted the highly appreciated gift on behalf of Winfield Scott Post No. 73, G. A. R. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Lewis. This closed the dedicatory exercises.

The members of the Post then prepared to perform the solemn duty of burying one of their dead in the new plot. It was that of Comrade Jacob Jennings, a member of Capt. Hubber's company of the 30th New Jersey regiment, who died several months ago. The members of the Post marched to the receiving vault and secured the body of their former comrade and placeing it in the hearse escorted it back to the soldiers' plot, where the solemn military burial services were conducted by Edward Morse, chaplain of Winfield Scott Post. The invocation was offered by Rev. Dr. A. E. Main.

The bearers were Comrades Nailor, Walker, Britton, Huntington, Sheppard and Pennington.

Before the casket containing the body was ready to be lowered into the graves, Comrades Andrew Cox, E. D. Moffett and W. W. Corriell, placed upon it sprigs of evergreen, a rose and a piece of laurel—symbolical of immortality, purity and victory. Beneath these emblems, a flag had been spread.

Then when the final words had been spoken—"Earth to Earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust"—the body of Comrade Jennings was lowered to its final resting place, while the assembled veterans stood uncovered in silence reverently about the open grave.

It was the first burial in the new plot and the ceremonies were most impressive.

Then the firing squad, in command of Albert G. Perry took their places on either side of the new made grave. At the sound of the earth falling upon the rough box holding the casket containing the body of the dead soldier, the firing squad surrounding the grave fired three volleys—the military salute to the dead.

With the echo of the departing shots came the bugle recall, sounded by Dr. Berg, who stood in the grove a short distance from the soldiers' plot. It was the soldiers' "good night" to a departed hero, whose body was being laid at rest to await the sound of the great reveille on the judgment morn.

Following are the names of the members of the firing squad: David R. Weaver, S. C. Milligan, Alexander Sargeant, Israel Compton, James Baglin, John Emmons, John T. Finley, Preston B. Goodfellow, James M. Lewis, Simon Braider, Edward Devine, C. D. Pope.

DARLING JAILED IN MIDDLESEX.

Arrived at New Brunswick Saturday Night.

SHERIFF SHEETS GAVE IN.

CHIEF GRANT TELLS STORY OF THE TRIP AFTER DARLING.

Jersey Officials Started for Home and Then the Sheriff of Fulton County Finally Gave in and Surrendered Darling for $45 Actual Expenses and Fees—People in McConnelsburg Did Not Favor Sheriff.

Wm. M. Darling, who shot Harry Dunham at Pantz's Hotel in New Market four years ago, is now a prisoner in the Middlesex county jail at New Brunswick and will soon be tried for his life. Saturday morning Sheriff Sheets, of Fulton county, Pa., gave up his man andallowed the Middlesex county detective to take him home with him. Chief George W. Grant, of the Plainfield police force, was one of the party that went after Darling. He returned to Plainfield Saturday night after seeing the prisoner safely landed in the county jail at New Brunswick.

To a local reporter Monday morning Chief Grant related his experiences and told the details of the trip. He left Plainfield early last Monday morning and joined Detective John F. Ferguson at New Brunswick. Together they departed for McConnellsburg, reaching there late Monday night, after a short stop at Harrisburg to have Gov. Stone, of Pennsylvania, sign the extradition papers for Darling. They called on the Sheriff and County Attorney George Daniels, and the latter officials, after several conferences, refused to give up the prisoner unless paid $250. This, Sheets said, they thought was due for the terrible risk they ran in capturing such a man as Darling at the point of the revolver.

Finding that there was likely to be a hitch, the Jersey officers went to the Fulton House for the night. The proprietor, George Elkroth, was very indignant, as well as all the rest of the townsfolks at the action of the sheriff, and did his best to make things pleasant for the visitors.

By the next morning Sheriff Sheets had raised his price to $300, but finally agreed to compromise for $275. Then Furgeson telegraphed to Prosecutor Voorhees at New Brunswick, telling of the Sheriff's demand. The answer came back to wait for further orders.

Wednesday Voorhees telegraphed Furgeson to meet him in Harrisburg the next day. The detective did as he was ordered and that night both detective and Prosecutor returned to the Fulton county seat. Friday morning they visited the Sheriff again and tendered him his actual fees and expenses amounting to $45. He refused to except less than his original demand and the party of Jerseyites departed for home.

They had just crossed the mountain that borders McConnellsburg when they were halted at a little telephone station and told that the Sheriff had changed his mind and would swap Darling for the $45.

The party returned to the county seat again, settled up the affair with Sheriff Sheets and received his receipt for the $45. Early Saturday afternoon they departed, Darling handcuffed to the detective.

The Chief says that Darling took the whole affair quite coolly. He inquired of the Chief regarding his own family and a number of mutual friends. He talked little, however, during the trip and never a word was said during the whole time about the murder. Darling is somewhat changed in appearance, the Chief says. His face is bronzed with constant exposure to the sun. He has a moustache but his face looks rather thin and hollowed-eyed.

Darling and his escort reached New Brunswick at 4:50 o'clock Saturday afternoon after a quick trip. After seeing the prisoner in his cell, Chief Grant returned to his home.

Entertained the Youngsters.

Dr. Mary D. Hussey, of Arlington avenue, East Orange, formerly of Plainfield, entertained the children from the Judson Memorial church, New York city, Sunday. The large private park adjoining Dr. Hussey's residence was given over to the children and merry making was the order of the day. Luncheon was served in picnic fashion and all sorts of goodies were provided to make the occasion happy.

Wm. T. Kaufman and family, of West Seventh street, are sojourning at the Jefferson, Jefferson, N. H.

GUS FABER LEADS FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP.

Finished Second at Park Club Saturday Afternoon.

MANY LADIES PRESENT.

MEREDITH LRYDEN HAD LOWEST NET SCORE FOR THE DAY.

He is Now Second in Contest for the McCutchen Cup on the Links of the Park Golf Club—Most of the Crack Players Were Away—Only One Score Turned in for Buttfield Cup Saturday.

There was an unusual attendance of the fair sex at the clubhouse of the Park Golf Club, Saturday afternoon. Many of them played while others accompanied their friends about the course and were interested spectators of the play. There was the usual competition for the McCutchen and Buttfield Cups, but G. W. Faber and the Towsend brothers were the only crack players present and the honors of the day went mainly to the lesser lights.

The course was in excellent condition and the greens were fast. The recent rains left the turf delightfully green and every stroke did not raise a cloud of dust as it did several weeks ago. The threatening clouds that kept gathering over the mountain seemed to promise rain before the afternoon was over but the rain never came while the clouds served to keep of the sunlight.

G. W. Faber was on hand early in the afternoon and played his usual steady game. The first round was done in 51 and the second in 54, making his gross score 105. Meredith Dryden was out again and played in fine form. Dryden has been getting a heavy handicap but his excellent work of Saturday afternoon is likely to reduce it hereafter. He made the eighteen holes in 114 and, deducting his handicap of 22, he had a net score of 92, which was low score for the afternoon. Faber was second with a net score of 101.

William A. Townsend and Morgan T. Townsend paired off together. They played very evenly but the latter managed to win out by two strokes in the gross score. His lesser handicap set W. A. Townsend ahead in the net score. Samuel Townsend, father of the young men, succeeded in beating both his sons, and did the eighteen holes in 131, and his net score of 107 was just one better than that of his older son. Mr. Townsend was third in the day's contest for the trophy.

Mrs. Daisy Elsberg was the only competitor during the day for the Buttfield Cup. She played the nine holes in company with Gifford W. Cooley and finished in 83 which, minus her handicap of 16, gave her a net score of 67. Miss Saidee Mae Howell, her principal rival for the cup, was not present. Unless some of the other young women of the club turn out soon, Miss Elsberg will be the easy winner of the trophy offered by W. J. Buttfield.

W. de la R Anderson was out of town and so did not play. There has been considerable interest in the relative abilities of Anderson and Fred P. Taylor, who have both succeeded in making the eighteen holes in 92. It is to be hoped that they will meet on the links soon and play round together.

The scores turned in for the McCutchen cup Saturday were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Meredith Dryden.....	114	22	92
G. W. Faber.....	104	3	101
Samuel Townsend.....	131	24	107
Wm. A. Townsend...	124	16	108
Morgan T. Townsend	123	8	115

The results of Saturday's play made no change in the leadership for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup. G. W. Faber is still ahead, but it is only by the small margin of half a point. Finlashing second in the day's play he scored two points for the trophy, giving him a total of eight. Meredith Dryden was third, with 4½ points. His position as first in the day's competition gave him three points, or a total of 7½. If he continues to play as at present he is a very likely candidate for the cup.

Faber goes away this week and will probably not be seen on the links during August. During that time he will undoubtedly lose the lead and only very good playing on his return is likely to take him near the top again.

The standing for the McCutchen trophy and the points scored by the various competitors are as follows: G. W. Faber, 8; Meredith Dryden, 7½; W. de la R. Anderson, 5; Fred P. Taylor, 5; Gifford W. Cooley, 4; Charles E. Faber, 4; Dr. Douglas, 3½; R. D. Hibbard, 3; Aubrey C. Crow, 3; Arthur Peck, 3; Samuel Townsend, 3; Wm. A. Townsend, 2½; Clarence S. Roome, 1½; C. W. McCutchen, 1½; J. T. Scott, 1.

Mrs. George T. Rogers and Mrs. Samuel Townsend presided at the informal tea held in the clubhouse during the afternoon.

Contract to Remove Building.

John Gulick, of Bound Brook, has secured the contract to remodel the building at the corner of Lincoln place and Duer street, which will be opened afterward as a meat market and grocery by a Brooklyn firm.

DROWNED THEMIN DRINK

GERMAN'S REMEDY FOR HUNGER AND HOMESICKNESS.

He Tried it in Plainfield and Was Locked up—Other Inhabitants of Cell Called Upon Him During the Night.

Max Schultz had two reasons for getting drunk, so he told City Judge Runyon Friday afternoon. Sometimes he wanted to drive away the pangs of hunger and again it was the gloom of homesickness that he wanted to overcome. He didn't explain, however, which was the cause of his intoxication yesterday morning.

Roundsman Frederickson found him Friday morning wandering about the city streets without a realization of exactly what he did want. The Roundsman locked him up and he had his hearing in the afternoon.

"Have you ever been arrested before?" asked the Judge.

"Dozens of times," was the reply. Then Schultz explained that his home was in Germany, and that he had been away for several years. He grew homesick and hungry at intervals and immediately loaded up on whatever was handy.

Sergeant Kiely discovered one of Schultz's fellow inhabitants of the cell crawling across the prisoner's coat. He brushed it away and the prisoner thanked him. He remarked that there were plenty more where that one came from. He had seen worse places, he said, but he had seen better ones.

The Judge decided that Schultz hadn't done anything very dreadful and so suspended sentence. Schultz thanked the Judge and expressed a hope of meeting him at the Paris exposition next year.

LIVED TO A RIPE OLD AGE.

Mrs. Ann Davis, Aged 86 Years, Died at Her Son's Home Friday.

In the death of Mrs. Ann Davis, aged 86 years, which occurred Friday at the home of her son, Dr. T. S. Davis, of Park avenue, removes a woman of sterling worth and Christian character. Death was due to paralysis.

Mrs. Davis was born in Liverpool, Eng., and at the age of 20 years came to this country. A few years later she was married in Philadelphia to John T. Davis, who for years was general superintendant of the Diamond State Iron Company, now known as the Diamond State Steel Company. Mr. Davis died about eight years ago, after which his widow came to Plainfield and lived with her son, who is the only surviving member of the family.

JUST FOR A JOKE.

Hot By it Walter Southard Lost Three of His Fingers.

Walter Southard, of Elm place, who suffered the loss of all but the index flinger on his right hand July 4th, was discharged Friday from the hospital. A great deal of sympathy is expressed for the boy owing to the way the accident occurred. He was playing in the street when some fresh young men came along holding a can on firecracker. They asked the boy if he would like to have it, and of course, said he would, not knowing that the fuse was almost burned to the cracker. Just as he received the cracker in his hand it went off. The young men who played the dastardly trick were not known.

EUCHRE AT THE HUNTERSTON.

Guests Whiled Away a Pleasant Evening With the Cards.

The regular Thursday evening progressive euchre party at the Hotel Hunterston last Thursday proved as delightful as have been previous society events of this character. There were nine tables, which were placed in the parlor. The first ladies' prize was won by Mrs. Samuel Garre and the second was captured by Mrs. F. L. Kane. The gents' first prize was secured by Samuel Garre, while Van-Rensselaer Schuyler had to be satisfied with the second gents' prize. Tomorrow night the regular Saturday night hop will be held. These dances have became very popular with the young people of the Hunterston who look forward to these interesting events with pleasure.

TO MAKE AUTOMOBILES.

The Concern Expects to Begin in Elizabeth in October.

The Riker Electric Vehicle Company, now located at Ridgeway, proposes to remove before Oct. 1st to Elizabeth, where the company has leased the Brooklyn and New York Car Supply Company Works.

The new industry expects to employ about 500 people, and will bring from Ridgeway 250 operatives and about 150 families.

The company intends to manufacture automobiles.

No Permanent Pavement Decided Yet.

It is the purpose of the street committee from the Common Council to put down permanent pavement on some of the business streets of the city this fall. The committee is still at work considering what will be used, but as yet nothing definite has been decided.

CHOOSING A GYPSY QUEEN A BIG HOAX

Clever Work of the Press Agent of the Nomads.

NO ONE SAW HER CROWNED.

BUT FORTUNE TELLING A THRIVING BUSINESS THOUGH.

The Story of Selecting a Queen to Succeed "Snake Mary" is a Gigantic Myth, But a Subtle Ruse for Getting a Big Crowd of People to the Camp So as to Make Money Out of.

Long live Queen Laurel, ruler-elect of Gypsydom. Sunday she was crowned with a wreath of flowers, which happened to be artificial so they wouldn't fade, as typifying the sovereignty conferred upon her, and now she will await the death of her grandmother, "Snake Mary," before assuming the real responsibilities of the throne. A thousand people traveled from far and near to see the crowning of the young queen. They didn't see it, and even the crowd of Argus-eyed reporters of the New York dailies couldn't manage to find out exactly when it happened. The Queen was there, however, and the visitors were told that they might have the privilege of gazing upon her for the small sum of 10 cents.

The camp of the gypsies is located in the grove of maples on the county road, just beyond the city line and George Thatcher's Road House, "The Maples." The Harrisons were its occupants, but the great assemblage of gypsies from all over the country existed only in the imagination. There were half a dozen wagons, twice as many tents and possibly two score of horses. A generous supply of all varieties of dogs should not be forgotten.

During the last two weeks wonderful reports have been going forth regarding the great congress of gypsies that was to be held at the camp Saturday. It was evidently an event of much importance in the lives of these nomadic tribes. Alas for the reality. The visitors instead of gazing upon the strange and wierd ceremonies of the descendants of Romany found a very ordinary gypsy band or horse traders and fortune tellers, while their new-made Queen, clad in raiment that would drive Worth, the famous Parisian, into nervous prostration, was perched up in a little tent away from the vulgar gaze except on payment of a dime.

If it had not been for the wonderful tales of what was going to happen, it would have been all right. The old queen, "Snake Mary," is certainly a wonderful old woman. Ninety-four years old they say she is and it is easy to believe it. She is very feeble now but retains her memory to a wonderful degree and is remarkably shrewd. She was with her successor, Laurel Harrison, until noon when weakness compelled her to retire to the privacy of her own tent where she could see none of the curious ones that visited the camp, Queen Laurel, the queen elect, is a young women of sixteen years of the typical gypsy type. She was attired in all her finery and looked gorgeous, indeed. Her waist was of a brilliant red while bright yellow ribbons fluttered on every convenient point. They also adorned the skirt of a wonderful plaid. The usual gypsy turban surmounted her dark hair. She is a good looking young woman withal. A huge brooch, large as a "dollar watch," rested on her breast while chains and rings covered her wrists and hands.

She spent the day telling fortunes and being looked at. She had a wreath of flowers, but the Gypsies' statements regarding the time she received it, as her crown, varied materially. At any rate, none of the uninitiated saw the coronation. A small addition to the Harrison band arrived Saturday night. They were four women in the party, famous fortune-tellers all of them, who came to act, so one of the Harrisons said, as ladies-in waiting to the Queen. Last night they departed with the new Queen, under the charge of Colonel Smith, a famous Gypsy, for Washington, D. C.

There was a host of people who managed somehow to reach the Gypsy encampment yesterday, and they were grieviously disappointed. They wandered about the camp, sat on the side of the road, and visited the neighboring road houses. Some had their fortunes told, and the coffers of the wanderers were increased accordingly.

A new light was thrown on the situation by one of the Harrisons. In conversation with a local reporter. He remarked that "Snake Mary" had been crowned several dozen times during her career. It was a good thing for business, he said. There were a great many people, he explained, who would not come to the camp on other occasions.

The little army of New York newspapermen marvelled at it all but particularly at the ability of the press agent of the Harrison family who had managed his department with such wonderful success. He must be a great man, they said.

CAPTAIN MORRISON HOME FROM MANILA.

He Went There With a Cargo of Coal for Dewey's Fleet.

HIS DAUGHTER WITH HIM.

SAYS AGUNIALDO IS MADE THE TOOL OF OTHERS.

He Had Several Interviews With Dewey and Has Great Admiration for the Hero—Well Versed in the Philippine Situation—Says the Islands Contains the Richest Ground Known.

After an absence from Plainfield of several months, Captain George D. Morrison returned home last Sunday, accompanied by his eldest daughter, Miss Agnes Morrison. The Captain and his daughter have been at Manila for several months. They have had a large experience as well as a delightful time. They both return in the best of health and spirits and are carrying a fine coat of tan.

It will be remembered that Capt. Morrison sailed with a cargo of coal from Philadelphia for Manila to be delivered to Admiral Dewey. Before he reached his destination his cargo was discovered to be on fire, but fortunately the coal was saved and delivered all right to the Admiral. The boat was the transport Vigilant and had been in service many years. After an examination it was condemned, and the Captain sold her in Manila soon after the coal was removed from her.

The Captain and his daughter returned home on the transport Indiana, arriving in port last evening at 10:30 o'clock. They had a delightful trip home. Mr. Morrison was seen by a Daily Press representative Monday and he found him brimful of knowledge concerning affairs in the far east. During his stay in the Philippines he had a fine opportunity of learning much about the natives and their condition. He also had several interviews with Admiral Dewey, and is perfectly capable of giving the true state affairs in that part of the country.

Mr. Morrison says that the United States should by all means capture the Philippines as they contain the richest ground known. Anything will grow there and everything shows a remarkable degree of fertility. The Captain is very pronounced in his views concerning Aguinaldo, and thoroughly believes that he is simply a tool being used by some of the more brilliant members of the home cabinet to fight the United States. Regarding this leader Mr. Morrison says that the only real trait he possesses is a cunning that is truly superlative. He is keen, but exceedingly treacherous, and very wiry. He wears no shoes and goes about stealthly trying to shoot United States men. He says that in the opinion of Admiral Dewey, Aguinaldo does not write the proclamations and manifestoes, but they are written by members of the cabinet.

He says that they secure money to carry on the war by extorting it from rich natives. One firm by the name of Barber Bros. has given up thousands of dollars and they are afraid of their lives. They seek protection from this country, but are afraid lest they will be detected in their intentions and be shot down.

Aguinaldo at the instigation of the cabinet put a ten per cent. tax on all exports, but as nothing can be exported this scheme is a dead failure. The captain believes that the leader will be shot down or killed in some way before long, as things are getting too uncomfortably warm for him. He speaks in the loudest terms of praise concerning the United States soldiers and says they are a brave and enduring lot of men.

BLOCK SYSTEM COMPLETE.

Pennsylvania Railroad Will Finish the Work Sunday.

The Pennsylvania system of block signalling will be completed on the New York-Philadelphia line Sunday if the present plans of the railroad officials are carried out. This system is automatic and is as near perfection as possible.

It has been in operation from New York to Rahway and from Monmouth Junction to Philadelphia for a number of years, giving complete satisfaction. It is noteworthy that two fatal collisions which the New York division has had in recent years occurred between Rahway and Monmouth Junction, where the old system of hand signalling was in vogue. The signal system is electrical in operation, the current being supplied by storage batteries placed along the tracks.

—A number of prominent Plainfield people visited the Gypsy camp yesterday and Saturday and had their fortunes told. Some were not well-pleased with the result.

CALVARY BAPTIST CHURCH DEDICATED.

Services Held all Day Sunday in the Edifice.

VISITING MINISTERS THERE.

PRINCIPAL SERMON DELIVERED BY REV. MR. CARTER

The Society Started April 27th, 1896, With Twenty Members, 18 Cents in the Treasury and $96 in Debt—Now Own a Handsome Home, Which They Expect to Clear of Debt in Two Years.

The handsome new edifice of the Calvary Baptist church was appropriately dedicated Sunday by the members of the church assisted by several prominent divines from various parts of the State. Services were held morning, afternoon and evening and each one was very largely attended.

In the morning the dedication sermon was preached by Rev. J. T. Carter, D. D., of Newark. His text was "The Lord is in His Holy Temple," and he delivered a powerful discourse. He praised the efforts of Pastor Scott Wallace and his flock in erecting such a fine church in so short a time. He spoke about the organization of the church April 27th, 1896, with twenty-six members, 18 cents in the treasury and $96 in debt. Since then the pastor has raised $3,511.18, and the stone church erected and $3,500 has been borrowed for eight years, which the pastor says will be paid back in less than two years. Dr. Carter then went on to say that at present the membership is 218 and constantly growing. The Sunday-school membership is one hundred.

In the afternoon at 3 o'clock a strong sermon was delivered by Rev. Wm. Burchard, of Elizabeth, whose text was "Accept the Lord Build the House Your Labor is Vain." He spoke of the great mystery of how the members were able to erect such a beautiful church inside of twelve months, and also praised them for their great work. He advised them to put their trust in the Lord and to work onward and forward in the cause of Christ.

Last evening at 8 o'clock the closing service was held when Rev. W. F. Pressley, a returned missionary from Africa, delivered a sermon. He also gave some helpful advice and told each one to be a missionary for Christ. He dwelt at some length on the history of the church, and told all what a grand thing it is to work for the Lord.

There was special music at each service rendered by the combined choirs from the Mt. Olive, Fillmore and Calvary Baptist churches, under the direction of William Johnson. Miss Mitchell presided at the organ. The pulpit and platform decorations consisted of potted plants chiefly.

Those who assisted at the various services were: Rev. Wm. Farrar, of Philadelphia; Rev. Mr. Hill, of Newark; Rev. Mr. Scott, of Long Branch; Revs. Johnson and Mitchell, of this city.

The church is of stone with an ivory and basement finished off in hard wood. The main room is large and comfortable. There is also a gallery and a choir loft. Downstairs is the Sunday-school room. There is also a kitchen and numerous closets and a few small rooms. The contractor was Wm. Smith, and the total cost of the church and ground is $6,000. Rev. Scott Wallace is pastor and the following are trustees and deacons: Spencer Conway, Ferdinand Brown, Mansfield Robison, P. Reid, Hampton Probasco, Cristobal Matten, John Perkins and Spencer Boisseux.

Each one of the members pledged yesterday to give a dollar and about $150 was collected. Dinner and supper was served at the church for the members and visitors, and the following were in charge: Miss Lulu Scott, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Emma Brown, Mrs. Dolly Reid, Mrs. Anderson, Spencer Conway and Spencer Boisseux.

The church was fortunate in having the organ and pulpit presented to them by friends. The electric lights were also put in at a nominal figure.

To Make Musical Instruments.

The Orchestrelle Company, of Westfield, has been incorporated. The company will manufacture orchestrelles, seolians, pianolas, etc. The company will acquire the plant and patents of a company now engaged in a similar business in London Eng. The authorized capital stock is $200,000 divided in 2,000 shares of $100 each. Ten shares have been paid in. The incorporators are Matthew Sinclair, William L. Perkins and Frank A. Butler, all of Westfield.

Trolley Car Jumped the Track.

One of the trolley cars cars jumped the track at the corner of Watchung avenue and Fourth street Sunday forenoon, but fortunately no damage resulted. Conductor Jesse Hatfield succeeded in getting the car back on rails again.

FASCINATING SPORT FOR THE WEALTHY.

Polo May be Introduced Into Plainfield.

EXPENSIVE GAME TO PLAY.

PROPOSED ATTRACTION TO BRING YOUNG MEN INTO CLUB.

Talk of Reviving the Union County Country Club in the Fall Brings Out That Suggestion—Likely Candidates for the Game—Richard Waring Has Had Some Experience—Game is a Fascinating One.

Polo is a game that, so far, Plainfield is not acquainted with. While some of the Plainfield young men have played, there has been no attempt to start any interest in it here. There is a prospect now however that the game will be played here and under the auspices of the Union County Country Club or what ever its successor's name happens to be.

With the practical dissolution of the club last spring it was understood that the men who have been behind the club from the start would reorganize it again in the fall and would make some attempt to interest the younger set in its affairs.

One of the means that has been suggested to bring the young men into the club is the introduction of polo and the making of proper grounds for the game in the neighborhood of this city. The game is only one in which the wealthy can participate as it is necessary for each player to have at least three polo ponies, well trained for the game, which are decidedly expensive. The sport is a very fascinating one, however, to both participants and spectators and would undoubtedly be popular.

Richard Waring, of Park avenue, has been playing this season on Long Island and is quite an enthusiast on the sport. There are a number of young men who are good horsemen and could undoubtedly pick up the game very rapidly. Louis E. Waring, Daniel Runkle, the Fisk boys, the Shepards and a number of others are looked upon as promising candidates for the game should it be started.

TWO MEN DECLINE.

Collectorship of Customs at Burlington Goes Abegging.

The Secretary of the Treasury has sent word to the Representative of the Second Congressional District and the two Senators from New Jersey that the post of Collector of Customs at Burlington is vacant. At any rate, that is the statement made by a high official. Mr. Gardner declares the difficulty to be to find a suitable person for the office. Two persons—Messrs. Whitaker and Billingham—have declined. There are two collection offices in the Burlington Customs District, namely, Trenton and Burlington. The appointment is for the district, a deputy attending to the other office.

There is such trouble in finding a site for the New Brunswick public building that a special agent will again be dispatched there by the supervising architect. He will go there this week.

KILLED A MAD DOG.

Difficult Job for Dog Catcher Frisbie to Accomplish.

Dog Catcher Frisbie was called to Crescent avenue Friday afternoon to deal with a mad dog that had spread terror in that vicinity and kept all children within doors in fear of being attacked and afflicted with hydrophobia. Frisbie found the cur—a fox terrier with white head—in a barn. With considerable difficulty he lassooed the canine and brought him to his assassination factory, where he humanely killed the mad dog with much dexterity.

Protection Hose Invited to Plainfield.

Protection Hose Co., No 3, has received an invitation from Warren Hose Co., of North Plainfield, to be their guests and participate in the annual parade in that city to take place Thursday, October 12th. The acceptance of the invitation is contingent upon a parade in this city, and that seems to be contingent upon the action of Franklin Hose going to York, Pa. It is said if they go the expenses will be large, and as they will come from sources that would enter into a local parade, they could not stand both.—Rahway Democrat.

Fell Down Stairs.

Mrs. Catharine Day, mother of Theodore Day, of Dunellen, met with a serious accident about 4:30 o clock Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Day had occasion to go up the stairs and coming down she missed her footing and fell to the landing. When picked up by some members of the family Mrs. Day was found to be hurt considerably. Her head was cut in two places and she was otherwise severely bruised. Dr. Brakely was summoned and took eight stitches in the unfortunate woman's head, which was cut in the front and at the side.

A POSSE OF CITIZENS CHASED TWO BURGLARS

Caught in Act of Looting a House in Washington Valley.

IDENTIFIED AS ITALIANS.

THEY ARE MEMBERS OF THE COLONY AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

The Property That Was Invaded Belonged to a Mrs. Mary Cottrell, Who is Not Occupying it at Present—Robbers Discovered by Two Young Men Who Had Been Playing Tennis.

For several weeks past the residents of Washington Valley have been in a state of terror as a result of the numerous petty burglaries that have occurred in that vicinity. Last Friday, however, the supposed guilty parties were caught at their nefarious work and chased by several indignant citizens all the way to Scotch Plains, where they were identified.

Among the handsome summer homes maintained in that section is that of Mrs. Nellie Cottrell, of New York. At present the family is not staying at the house, which is left in charge of William Archibald. Friday night Richard Hart and Samuel Wilson, of New York, were playing tennis on the court connected with the house. As they started to leave as darkness set in they discovered one of the large windows open. They started to investigate and as they neared the house two men jumed out of the open window and started off at a hot pace.

Hart and Wilson gave chase and as they seemed to be gaining on the supposed burglars the two latter halted and faced their followers. When accosted the strangers spoke broken English and seemed much discomfited. Fearful that they might be armed Hart and Wilson did not tackle them. The strangers resumed their journey on a dog-trot towards Scotch Plains, and Hart and Wilson followed at a safe distance. Several neighbors saw Wilson and Hart and they also joined in the chase, but even with force of numbers on their side they did not care to tackle the foreigners in the van.

The strangers went straight to Scotch Plains, and there their follower succeeded in having them identified as residents of the Italian colony. It is believed that the two men are guilty of nearly all the depredations that have been committed in Washington Valley.

GREETING TO BIG BOSS

JERSEY G. O. P. PROPOSE TO HAVE AN OVATION TO SEWELL.

The Senator Will Arrive From Europe August 11th and Will be Given a Royal Welcome by His Followers.

United States Senator William J. Sewell is to be given a rousing welcome upon his return from Europe. Arrangements for his home-coming were made at a meeting of New Jersey Republicans at the Hotel Washington, Jersey City, Thursday evening. Senator Sewell will arrive in New York Harbor, August 11th. It is proposed to charter one of the largest of the Starin line steamers to carry the Senator's friends down the Bay to meet the steamer on which he will be a passenger.

At Quarantine Senator Sewell and family will be transferred to the pleasure boat and taken to the Pennsylvania Railroad pier, Jersey City. There will be a band on board, and before making a landing the Starin boat will sail up the river, giving the reception party a view of Grant's Tomb. There will be no end of refreshments, and it is probable there will be some speechmaking.

The object of the hearty welcome is to convince Senator Sewell that he is still "the biggest Republican in New Jersey." It is expected that at least three hundred prominent Republicans will be in the party. The committee in charge of the affair consists of Congressman Henry C. Loudenschlager, chairman; Willard Morgan, of Camden; Hamilton Kean, of Union county; State Controller William S. Hancock, of Mercer county; Dr. C. H. Herold, of Essex county, and Col. S. D. Dickinson, of Hudson county.

Vice-President Hobart and Senator Kean are expected to be in the party.

Enjoying the Lakes of Killarney

A letter was received Saturday a. m. from Rev. T. Logan Murphy, former rector of Holy Cross Episcopal church, who with Mrs. Murphy and daughter, Miss Annie, are traveling in Europe. The letter is written from the Great Southern Hotel, Lake Killarney, Ireland. Rev. Mr. Murphy writes that the members of the family are well and enjoying themselves.

Education in Egypt.

A thousand Mohammedan boys and girls in Egypt are receiving the rudiments of a Christian education in the mission-schools, where the day's work always begins with worship and an hour each day is devoted to religious instruction.

FIVE O'CLOCK TEA BRUSH.

New Contrivances to Make Easier Households Tasks of Women.

The array of brushes for household use is constantly being added to by inventors with a quick eye for the exigencies of the moment. Besides the various grades and sizes of crumb brushes, recognized readily by their curving outlines, there is now a new comer known as the 5 o'clock tea brush, and designed for use in brushing the crumbs from highly polished tables over which no cloth is laid. The bristles of this new addition are so soft as not to injure the handsomest table ever set. The handle is ornate enough to make the brush a not inappropriate adjunct of luxurious surroundings. This brush is not a prosaic half moon like its older and tougher associates. The head of this is nine inches wide and all together unique among crumb brushes. There is a ring on the handle through which a ribbon may be slipped for further decoration, and the usual implement kept near at hand to be deftly wielded by the tea-table fairy in the fair tea-pourer at an afternoon function.

Dusting brushes increase in number, as do dusters made of feathers and of strong hemp. The latest addition to this family is a revolving brush of wood, stiff bristles, made for wiping out the corners and interstices of carved furniture. It is an automatic contrivance. Once fix it in place against the stubborn dust hole in the mahogany, and by rotating the round handle more or less rapidly the work is done and the corner wiped out clean as quick as a wink.

The passementerie brush is a new recruit in the regiment of clothes brushes. It is made with such discrimination that not even the most delicate trimming and beading could be injured. Insertions and overlayings of jet and iridescent beads, that would be utterly ruined by a whisk-broom or ordinary clothesbrush application, look brighter and happier for a dressing down with the passementerie brush, whose bristles are soft enough not to scratch the beads, yet sufficiently stiff to penetrate the little hollows and interstices and get the dust out of them. This passementerie brush is also recommended for brushing silk gowns and curtains and such delicate fabrics as would be ruined by the coarser brushes. A new fringe brush, for brushing out the fringe of handsome table cloths, is noted, and also, most important of all, is a contrivance for cleaning these velvet brushes and for banishing dirt when it shall have alighted on them.

Inexpensive Wedding Gifts.

For a comparatively inexpensive wedding present nothing could possibly be more acceptable to a bride than a number of well-cushioned coat forms. Procure say half a dozen strong wire forms. Make dainty silk bags of a suitable size, to cover the arms; line these well with cotton batting, sprinkled liberally with sachet powder.

Insert the arms of the form and draw the bags up tightly around the hook; finish with a generous bow of ribbon of the same shade as the silk.

A bride who recently received six of these useful articles, all in ravishing pink, used them in packing her bodices and proclaims that never before did her gowns emerge from her trunk in so perfect a condition.

A word to the wise maker: Baste your cotton batting right up with the seam of the bag and stitch altogether.

If you wish to add to this gift another newly devised and suitable bridal offering, make a few pretty trunk tray cloths of linen simply bound, embroidered with a monogram and with ribbons attached, to take the place of inside trunk straps.

Smaller oblongs of the linen made to exactly match the tray cloths are of the greatest service in packing shoes and slippers.

If one be so lucky as to have forms, tray cloths and shoe cases all in the same pretty shade has small excuse if her trunk is not a model of order and prettiness.

One Woman's Work.

Here's a schedule of one woman's work for one day prepared by a sympathizer:

Breakfast at 6. After that, the dishes to wash, the chickens to feed, pies to make for dinner, doughnuts to fry, Sam's shirt to iron, some aprons to wash out for the children, Mary's cut finger to do up, lamps to fill and clean and of all earthly things this is the most abominable!) stove to black, hungry tramps and gossiping neighbors to attend to, dinner to get, dishes to wash, beds to make, halls to sweep, sitting-room to dust, silk to scrub, cake to make for the church socialite, Tommy's "sums" to do for him so that he need not be put back in his class, biscuits to bake for supper—for men always want hot biscuits—bread to mix for to-morrow's baking, dishes to wash—

Roland For an Oliver.

What To Eat tells a story of two young women with bright auburn hair, who had just sat down to luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, when a florid matron with a crimson dress took a seat opposite, and, after glancing at her neighbors and examining the menu, remarked to the waiter that red-head ducks were not served that day. Then the latter ordered a broiled lobster to get the young women's order, whereupon one of them glanced at the florid woman and then at the bill of fare, and said to her sister: "The boiled lobster is not on the bill."

Gloves With Black Stitching.

"We sell six pairs of gloves with black stitching to one with the white," said the man at the glove counter, "and all the new gloves are coming over with the black stitching."

SCHEME OF DOUBLE TRACKS IS OPPOSED.

Property Owners Unanimously Against the Project.

COUNCIL REMONSTRANCE.

WATCHUNG AVENUE IS MONOPOLIZED ENOUGH NOW.

Seventy Per Cent. of Property Owners Sign the Remonstrance Which Will be Presented to the Common Council if the Street Railway Company Apply for Right to Lay Double Tracks.

The announcement that the Plainfield Street Railway Company are conducting private negotiations with the members of the Common Council, looking toward permission to establish a double-track between the end of the switch on Watchung avenue to where the present double-track begins on West Front street, has stirred up the property owners to prevent any such deal.

Already a prominent property owner along the line, where the additional track is wanted by the company, has visited a majority of the other property owners and secured their signatures to a remonstrance which will be presented to the Council if the application is made.

The interested property owners believe that the company is altogether too grasping in this latest attempt to secure further rights from the city. At present they practically monopolize Watchung avenue between North avenue and Second street with their long switch, which makes traffic for vehicles and bicyclists inconvenient and positively dangerous at times. The avenues between these two points is really nothing more nor less than a yard for the trolley people now; and with double tracks extended over the rest of Watchung avenue and down Front street the thoroughfares would be still less of service to the people.

For residential purposes the property owners along Watchung avenue and Front street, where the trolley tracks run, claim that their land has depreciated one-half in value by the invasion of the streets with the railway. But of the present condition, when the whole public is served by the arrangement, they have no complaint. When, however, the Street Railway Company seek to further monopolize the streets in front of their property they do entertain forcible objections. Those who have signed the remonstrance against double tracking the portions of streets in questions consist of over seventy per cent of the property owners. And those whose names have not yet been signed reside out of town, or are at present not to be seen by the leader in the movement.

With such a formidable array of names it is scarcely likely that the application for building double tracks along the proposed section will be granted by the Council.

BOY FELL IN FIT AND WAS DROWNED.

Sad Fatality That Befell Son of Herman Parsch.

WAS HUNTING BULLFROGS.

FELL FACE DOWNWARD IN A SMALL POND.

Accident Occurred Friday Afternoon Near Scribner's Brickyard on Harrison Avenue—Body Found Dead—County Physician Wagoner Granted Burial Permit Without an Inquest Held.

Edward Parsch, the eight-year-old son of Herman Parsch, who lives on Harrison avenue in North Plainfield, near Scribner's brickyard was drowned Friday afternoon in a peculiar manner. The boy is subject to fits, one of which caused the fatal accident.

The boy has taken great delight in shooting bullfrogs with a slungshot, in the use of which he became quite dexterous. Friday afternoon he left his parents' home to enjoy the sport, and went to a small pond in the vicinity of the brickyard.

He removed his shoes and it is supposed he was wading in the water hunting for bullfrogs when he was evidently subjected to a fit. He fell on his face in the water and was drowned without being able to aid himself or scream for help.

When he failed to appear later at his home his parents instituted a search for him, and at 5 o'clock found his dead body lying in the water where it had fallen.

Saturday morning County Physician Wagoner, of Somerville, came to Plainfield and went to the scene of the fatality, and after viewing the body of the boy granted a burial permit.

The parents are grief stricken over the lost of the boy.

AN INTERESTING STUDY.

Great Tact Required in Crowds Which Bring All Classes Together.

The behavior of people in crowds would make an interesting study of itself. In an ordinary crowd the majority are apt to be unacquainted with any formal etiquette, and the rest seem to forget all they ever knew; only those who are possessed of natural politeness and unfailing good nature are saved from becoming savages under such circumstances. Of course it is unpleasant for people of refined nature to be brought into very close contact with the ruder populace, and it may frequently happen that the very ones who have had most training in courtesy are the most disagreeable and rude in such a crowd. The nerves of the common people are less easily disturbed, and the physical discomforts common to crowds are not greater than they are accustomed to in ordinary daily life. Unless you can be sure of bearing yourself with courtesy and good humor, you should avoid crowds for your own sake as well as out of consideration for others.

If, from choice or necessity, you flock with birds that are not all of your own fine feather, your aim should be to respect the rights of others without relinquishing your own. You are not a door mat, to allow yourself to be trampled upon without remonstrance; nor yet a cur, to snarl and snap at those who, perhaps, through no fault of their own, encroach upon you too closely. Even in the highest circles people are apt to lose their heads, to say nothing of their hearts, when packed in large numbers, as witness the frays that are reported to take place among the fair "gentlewomen" who attend the queen's drawing room.

Orchid Tea.

Of course, every one is aware that under the name of "tea" we often drink a beverage that has no resemblance with the real leaf. But there are several "teas" which are not fraudulent manufactures, though they are not made of the leaf.

In Mauritius, for instance, they make tea of the leaves of an orchid. In Peru they drink mate, a tea made from the leaves of the ilex. The Abyssinians make a tea from the leaves of the catha edulis, which has such stimulating qualities that even a leaf or two is prized as a gift. The reviving effects of "the cup that cheers," and thus is most valuable to travelers. The Tasmanians are said to be the happy possessors of no less than a hundred substitutes for tea; while the Tonkinese have teas of their own made of berries, leaves, buds and barks of trees. In Sumatra coffee leaves are infused in the teapot, and the result is said to be an excellent beverage.

Denomination.

The Philadelphia Record tells of an old Pennsylvania Dutch farmer who came into possession of a check for $200. It caused him a great deal of anxiety, and for a long time he could not muster up courage to have it cashed. Finally on a trip to town, he summoned up nerve enough, and, strolling into the bank, presented the check. The teller looked at it hastily, and then, after the fashion of his kind, brusquely asked: "What denomination?" "Lutheran, got durn it!" But that's that got tew do with it?" answered the old farmer, to the great astonishment of the bank official. It required several minutes' explanation before the teller could get the old man to understand his question, and then the latter took his money and departed, with sundry growls derogatory to banks in general.

Some Paradoxes.

"As big as a whale" might be rather small, as there is a species of the cuttle cean genus hardly three feet long. Nor does the expression "as awkard as a crab" apply on some of the South Sea Islands, for a crab is there the that not only runs as fast as an average man, but climbs trees with the ease of a schoolboy.

Nor does "the busy little bee improve each shining hour" down in Mexico. On the contrary, it soon learns that, as there is no winter there, there is no necessity for laying in a store of honey, and degenerates into a thoroughbred loafer.

Africa's Large Lake.

Lake Superior is in danger of losing its distinction of being the largest fresh water lake in the world. African explorers begin to think that Lake Victoria Nyanza is larger. Superior covers 31,200 square miles and Nyanza has been credited with 30,000, but recent explorations have discovered a hitherto unknown bay on its southern side which so increases its known area as to make it a question whether it is not larger than Superior. Further explorations and more careful surveys must be made, however, before a decision can be reached.

Two Most Valuable Stamps.

At a philatelic exhibition recently held at Birmingham, England, there were placed on view the two most valuable stamps in the world—a penny and a twopenny Mauritius. Only twenty-three specimens of the 1848 Mauritius stamps are known to exist, the collective value of the two exhibited at Birmingham is $10,500. They belong to a Parisian collector, who loaned them for the exhibition.

They Turn to the Left.

The soldiers boys in Manila say that the Tagalogs and natives there invariably turn to the left instead of the right in passing others on the sidewalks and in the streets, and consequently there are numerous accidental collisions with Americans.

An Important Matter.

"He said he wanted to consult me privately on a matter of vital importance to his future and of course I thought it was a proposal."

"Wasn't it?"

"No, he wanted my advice about choosing a wheel."

Growth of Sunflowers.

An eminent Indian medical officer is satisfied that the growth of sunflowers in malarial soil is better than eucalyptus as a preventive of malaria. The government of India is making extensive experiments to determine this point.

ROAD RACES TO BE HELD THIS MONTH.

To Start From Plainfield and Perth Amboy.

VALUABLE PRIZES OFFERED.

G. H. KENYON WILL HOLD RACE ON PUMPTOWN COURSE.

It Will Be a Handicap Event of 15 Miles, Open to Amateurs Only—The Date Set is Saturday Afternoon, August 19th—The Race Starts at 4 o'Clock—Other Race to Be Held Also.

Plainfield has seen very little bicycle racing this year on either track or road. The Crescent Oval is not rideable, and while the roads are in good condition there has been but few efforts to arrange speed contests there. Now comes the announcement of two big road races this month, one over the Plainfield-Pumptown course and the other over the Amboy-Metuchen course.

The Perth Amboy Scandinavian Cycle club has arranged a 25-mile handicap road race for Saturday afternoon, Aug. 12th, which will be open only to amateur riders. It will be held over the county road between Perth Amboy and Metuchen, which is reported to be in excellent condition. Entries for the race close August 8th. Among the prizes offered are a Stearns racing wheel, a Cleveland racing wheel, and a silver service pitcher.

On the Saturday afternoon following the Perth Amboy race, August 19th, G. H. Kenyon, a local bicycle dealer, has arranged for a fifteen-mile handicap road race to be held on Park avenue, between this city and Pumptown. The course will be the same as that the road races arranged by Harry K. Lister. The start will be made from Randolph road on Park avenue, thence to Holly's Corners, making the turn to the left to Oak Tree and on to Pumptown. Rounding the remains of the old pump, the riders will return the same way to Campbell's Road House. Circling the grass plot there, they will return to Pumptown by the same route and thence back again to the starting point.

The race will be open to amateurs, and will start promptly at 4 o'clock. The time prize will be a White sewing machine. The first prize will be a set of Palmer tires, the second a set of Hartford tires, 80s. A Delta bicycle lamp and a Brown racing saddle will be the third and fourth prizes respectively. Entries will close with Mr. Kenyon the Thursday preceding the race.

CITY ELECTION OFFICERS.

NAMED BY THE REPUBLICAN CITY COMMITTEE.

Fourth Ward Officers Are Not Yet Chosen—No Other Business Done at the Meeting Held Thursday Evening.

There was a meeting of the city executive committee of the Republican party last Thursday to elect the local election officers. The officers in the first, second and third wards were chosen and the names will be sent to the county committee. The fourth ward has not made its choice as yet.

The election officers were named as follows: First ward, first district, George Moore and John H. Tier, Jr.; First ward, second district, B. T. Barnes and G. Thorn; Second ward, first district, Armstrong Mulford and John H. Doane; Second ward, second district, W. F. Spangenberg and Charles Smith; Third ward, first district, B. Frank Coriell and John W. Murray, Jr.

While there was some discussion of the present political situation, there was nothing else of importance brought to the attention of the committee at the meeting.

PLEASURE AT REVERE HOUSE.

Cards, Music and Dancing Formed the Evening Pleasantly.

Progressive euchre at the Revere House last Friday was the attraction, and a very enjoyable game was had. It was under the direction of Harry Stothoff and Miss E. Somerville. The first ladies' prize was awarded to Mrs. George B. DeRevere; second to Miss L. Pendergast; first gentlemen's prize to H. L. Stothoff; second to T. W. Andrews; consolation prizes to Miss E. Somerville and J. Lynch Pendergast. After the game refreshments were served and dancing followed. During the evening Miss Maude B. Fowler entertained the company with some of her charming vocal selections.

A Noble Gift.

General Yun, a Korean, recently contributed $1,000 to establish a Christian industrial mission school at Songdo. His son, the Hon. T. H. Yun, who was educated in the United States, transferred to the mission of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, for the same purpose, a lot valued at $1,200.

PROPOSED STATION FOR TROLLEY ROAD.

Exchange Depot at North Avenue Suggested.

ON PRIVATE PROPERTY.

HORSEHOE DOUBLE-TRACK SWITCH TO REACH IT.

Watchung Avenue Would No Longer be Blocked by Waiting Trolley Cars, and the Passengers Would Have Some Place Wherein to Await Arrival of Car.—Would Improve Present Service.

One of the questions that the Plainfield Street Railway Company will have to consider with the extension of its lines and the completion of the Elizabeth-Plainfield line will be proper facilities for the care of its passengers and cars at the North avenue exchange. The lengthening of the old switch there will answer for a time, but the advent of more cars is bound to bring some kind of a change. At present there is no attempt to provide for the shelter and comfort of the patrons of the cars.

It has been suggested that the company would do well to establish a regular terminal station on property adjacent to Watchung and North avenues and there do away with the present system that practically appropriates Watchung avenue for a block. The plan suggested was that the company should possess itself of property on Watchung avenue at the head of North avenue and run a horseshoe shaped two track switch through it so that the cars on their arrival at the exchange depot would not stand in the public thoroughfare, particularly blocking it as at present, but would be equally convenient to the public. There would be plenty of room to accommodate all the cars that the company wished. A switch connecting the two tracks would provide for any arrangement that might necessitate the turning of cars.

To the public a very popular feature of the plan would be the depot or waiting room where passengers could find shelter and rest while awaiting the arrival of the cars. At present the company makes absolutely no provision for them and only through the kindness of P. D. Mallon, whose pharmacy stands on the corner, can they find any place to wait or find shelter in time of storm.

The wonderful growth of the trolley systems in the past few years is likely to be repeated in the future. With Plainfield the terminal of the line connecting this city and Elizabeth, there will be a great increase in the traffic as well as in the number of cars. It will soon become positively necessary for the traction companies to do something. The proposed plan seems to answer the requirements and would undoubtedly add greatly to the efficiency of the present system. With a regular transfer station for its trolley system, Plainfield would hold up its head with the best.

Of course, the trolley company isn't going to any expense that it does not feel absolutely compelled to. Such a station would, however, do away with a present state of affairs that is by no means to be wished for and open one of the main thoroughfares to the free use of vehicles.

DEATH OF MRS. HELLWIG.

She is the Mother of the Teacher of Foreign Languages.

The death of Mrs. Clara P. Hellwig, aged 73 years, occurred Wednesday morning, July 26th, at her residence, corner of Watchung avenue and East Fifth street. She was the mother of Miss Clara S. Hellwig, a teacher of languages in this city. She is a native of Russia, but has lived in this country many years. She expected to leave in a few days for Saratoga to visit her son. Death was due to age infirmities. She leaves two daughters and two sons.

DEFECTIVE SUMMONS.

Causes a Dismissal in the Charge Against George Becker.

The action of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals against George Becker came up for trial before Justice of the Peace Storms, at New Market, at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. In the absence of Counsellor McClure, Law Student Sweeney appeared for the Society. While S. Angleman represented the defendant.

Before going into the case it was discovered that Justice Storms had issued a defective summons, which was objected to by Attorney Angleman, who asked for a dismissal of the case on the ground that the summons was defective. Law Student Sweeney consented and the proceedings were dismissed.

New proceedings were immediately instituted against Becker. Mrs. C. P. Stinks, of Crescent avenue, who made the complaint to Officer Pangborn, was present at the hearing. She has taken an active interest in bringing Becker to justice for cruelly torturing his horses, as is alleged by the complaint filed with the justice.

Travelling Libraries for New Jersey.

The thought of them started in the Women's Clubs, and the movement to inaugurate travelling libraries was agitated by the State Federation of Women's Clubs more than a year ago. At the last session of the Legislature a bill was passed authorizing their establishment in New Jersey and the sum of $1,500 was appropriated for this purpose. In expending this amount during the present year, the women are to be accorded the privilege of offering suggestions to the special committee having the matter in charge, consisting of State Librarian H. C. Buchanan, Controller Hancock and Secretary of State Werts.

The scheme being a new one has been somewhat misunderstood, even by some who voted for it. It is said some Legislators cast their vote with the belief that an additional political office would be created and some lawyers have believed that reference books could be forward in quantities from this State Library.

The plan, as conceived by the women, was of a most unselfish character. The outline of the plan in carrying out the project is to provide boxes that will contain fifty well-selected books. These boxes are to be sent into the country districts and hamlets, where there are no circulating libraries, for such time as want that can hardly be imagined by the inhabitants of cities and towns who have an excess of reading matter.

Some responsible person, like trustees, must interest themselves in the receipt of these books, providing distributing points and guaranteeing their careful and useful return. It is possible that the State Library committee will charge the commitee $5 per year for the use of the library, the money to be used in keeping the books in good condition. Probably the books will be left in a community for a period of six months. The books will be on history, science, fiction and poetry. The localities interested will be allowed to suggest the character of the books desired. Industrial districts might desire more books of a scientific nature.

Additional appropiations will be made yearly for the purchase of new books.

Prosperous Official Conduct.

If Governor Stone, of Pennsylvania, has any stamna about him he will see to it that Sheriff Sheets, of Fulton county, is quickly and severely punished for refusing to respect the requisition signed by the chief executive of the Keystone State. That even a Pennsylvania backwoods politician should propose to hold a prisoner wanted for murder in order to line his own pockets with cold cash he is not entitled to, is quite the most preposterous proposition of "public office for private gain" that we have ever heard of.

The final act in this serious farce on the part of the Fulton county officials stamps their previous attitude as a mere "bluff," for had they felt assured that their refusal to release Darling to the custody of the New Jersey officers was backed up by law they certainly would not have relented at last and turned the prisoner over as they did.

Horse traders believe that there are excusable lies, and as the Gypsies are the highest and the most expert in the profession of "swapping" nags it is perhaps no wonder that the decendants of Romany have filled the public mind with weird and romantic tales of the choice and coronation of a Queen of their clan to succeed "Snake Mary." We had always supposed that New York possessed the champion "press agents" of the world, but since Silas D. Drake, of woman's suffrage fame at Lincoln, and more recently the Harrison tribe of nomads have worked their wonderful stories off on an expectant public, it would seem that if there are any medals to be presented for promoting publicity without money they should come to this particular section.

Now that the officious Sheriff of the little county in the mountains of Pennsylvania has come to a realizing sense of the situation and relinquished William M. Darling to the Middlesex county officials, the good folk of that county will be able to enjoy all the excitement of a murder trial. It's the first one they have had for over twenty years.

GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, ruins the digestion affects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

Underground Wires.

With the disappearance of the old system of overhead telephone wires from the more thickly populated parts of the city, Plainfield will see the practical benefits that accrue to the city in the establishment of the underground conduit system by the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company. While a telephone wire is not in itself a very dangerous thing, yet when it falls and happens to become crossed with an electric power or light wire, it is extremely dangerous to whoever comes in contract with it.

The great network of wires in the city streets are ever a blot on the good appearance of the place besides being dangerous in the possibility of falling and becoming crossed with a high potential current.

The appearance of the business section of this city will be greatly improved by the change which is already being made. It will not be long before the electric light wires will go underground as well and the system of wires now supplying light through the city will disappear from sight. It is a step that all progressive cities in the country are following and Plainfield has been particularly fortunate in its dealings with the corporations owning the wires. Both were willing to take the step while the telephone company was even anxious to go about it and would have had the work done before now but for delay on the part of the Council in passing the necessary ordinance.

The Boston Hearld, discussing the work of the conference at The Hague, says of the arbitration resolution: "It is, therefore, a genuine surprise that the statesmen composing this conference, whose qualifications and training nobody will venture to sneer at, have agreed that such a tribunal is immediately needed, and further, have agreed upon a form of constitution and a method of procedure that they consider suitable and operative. When all the circumstances are considered, this work, in its completeness, is a marvelous one."

Park avenue, between Front and Fourth streets, is not a beautiful sight, but there is a good day coming sometime when that thoroughfare is to be blessed with a permanent pavement. It is better to have all the various excavations now and have them over so Park avenue can have a long rest after the Council has provided for that permanent pavement.

DONATIONS TO THE HOSPITAL.

Manning, literature; Mrs. Lawrence Myers, basket apples; Mrs. J. D. Runyon and Miss Annie Boice, basket apples, egg plants, sardines, lemons, sugar and prunes; Mrs. Gorman, literature.

Real Warm Weather Rest and Comfort.

There is a powder to be shaken into the shoes called Allen's Foot-Ease, invented by Allen S. Olmsted, LeRoy, N. Y., which druggists and shoe dealers say is the best thing they have ever sold to cure swollen, burning, sore and tender or aching feet. Some dealers claim that it makes tight or new shoes feel easy. It certainly will cure corns and bunions and relieve instantly sweating, hot or smarting feet. Allen's Foot-Ease costs only a quarter, and the inventor will send a sample free to any address.

Don't Speak Any More

There are two families of Hebrews who reside close to each other on Somerset street. Monday evening the children belong to these families engaged in a dispute and finally the older members became interested in the trouble. It was finally necessary to call Marshal Campbell and he succeeded in quieting the disturbance. The two families are not now on speaking terms.

They Want Time to Decide—Valentine's Account Showed a Shortage of $25,000 in Addition to $7,000 He Took the Day He Ran Away—Edward S. Campbell Permanent Receiver.

Perth Amboy, August 1—The Perth Amboy Savings Institution, of which George af. Valentine was treasurer, may help swell the wreckage caused by the collapse of the Middlesex County Bank, of which he was cashier. It was learned yesterday that the savings institution had been harder hit than has heretofore been suspected.

The deputy bank examiner yesterday called together the directors of the savings institution and gave them information which was a surprise to say the least. He told them that Valentine's accounts with them showed a shortage of $25,000 in addition to the $7,900 which he took with him the day he ran away. The $7,900 has been returned, and Valentine's father has paid over the amount of his son's bond, $15,000.

"The bank examiner has decided," said the deputy examiner, "that before he will consent to the Perth Amboy Savings Institution resuming business you gentlemen will have to make up between you the $10,000 shortage still remaining."

The directors declined to state last night whether they would make up the amount or not. The decision of the bank examiner is final, and if they do not follow his suggestion the bank must close.

Edward S. Campbell, Vice-President of the National Newark Banking Company, was yesterday made permanent receiver of the Middlesex County Bank. Thomas Maguire, the temporary receiver, will today turn over the bank's papers to him. Mr. Maguire said last night that about $110,000 of Valentine's shortage was found in the account of the Middlesex Bank with the Park National Bank of New York. Valentine, he said, would get checks on the New York bank in proper form, payable to himself, for sums of $100 and would raise them, before presenting it, to larger sums. One check, he said, was raised from $100 to $10,000.

KICKED BY A HORSE.

SERIOUS INJURY OF YOUNG SON OF COUNCILMAN BURTIS.

Is Summering at Long Branch—While Playing About Horse Was Kicked Over the Eye—Serious Wound Result d.

Word has just been received in Plainfield from Long Branch of a serious accident that befell the young son of Councilman and Mrs. Murray Burtis, of Fairview avenue. Mrs. Burtis and the family are stopping at that place for a time.

Sunday morning the lad was playing about an old horse that is kept on the place where the family is stopping, and no one had any idea that the animal was inclined to kick. The boy touched the horse on the hind quarters, when suddenly, without warning, the lad received a blow in the face over the left eye, the animal having planted one of his hind feet squarely on the boy's face. The little fellow was knocked insensible. He was quickly carried to the house where he soon regained consciousness. A physician was called at once and he was obliged to take twelve stitches in the cut made by the horse's feet. He pluckily stood the pain necessarily caused while the cut was being stitched and he would not take an anesthetic during the operation.

Mr. Burtis received word today that the boy is doing well and is now practically out of danger. That he was not killed by the blow is a mystery for the force of the kick was certainly strong enough.

Thousands Upon Thousands of people in both Europe and America are being restored to health and strength by the use of Speer's Port Wine.

This Wine is a little higher in price but worth five times as much as others for invalids on account of the iron derived from the soil of the expensive vineyards in which the Oporto Grape vines from Portugal are grown in New Jersey. Speer's Port Wine has been adopted by the most scientific and experienced physicians.

Outing on the Mountain.

The members of the Scottish Thistle Social Club, accompanied by their wives and children, enjoyed an outing Saturday afternoon on Johnston's Drive. Everyone had a good time singing old Scotch songs, after which a bountiful collation was served by a committee of women.

PLAN TO CARRY JERSEY.

CHAIRMAN GOURLEY HOPES TO REDEEM THE STATE.

Democrats Will Confer—Leaders of the Party to Gather at Asbury Park, and all Differences of the Past May be Reconciled

Trenton, N. J., August 1.—The announcement that the Democratic State Committee will hold a meeting at Asbury Park Monday, August 7th, is an indication that the party is alive to the situation, and that it means to make an effective victory at the election next November. That meeting will not be confined to the members of the committee alone, because of the invitation issued to the chairmen of the various county committees also to be in attendance. It is believed by prominent leaders of the party that much good will result from this conference.

Reports as to the standing of the party in each county, of course, will be presented, and from these will be obtained necessary information as to the best methods to be pursued in the waging of a warfare against the Republican enemy. The State committee as at present constituted is composed almost entirely of men who supported Bryan and the Chicago platform. The only notable gold advocates on the committee are Edward F. C. Young, of Hudson, and former Senator Keys, of Somerset. Still, perhaps, that will not make much difference as to the subjects which will take up the time of the conference. In last year's campaign Bryan and the silver theory were seldom alluded to, and, as there is no State ticket to be chosen this year, there is less reason to distract the Democratic voters by dragging into the contest such disturbing elements.

All sensible members of the party feel convinced that with unity in their ranks there is a bright prospect for making gains in the campaign for members of the Legislature, which will soon be opened in real earnest. In many counties, according to common report, there are serious dissensions in the Republican party, especially over candidates for the State Senate, and, consequently, an opportunity is presented to the Democrats, which they have not had in some years back, to go into the contest and win an old time victory. A good organization and harmony in the ranks, of course, are required, and to bring about that condition of affairs the State committee and the representatives of the county organization intend, it is stated, to devote their best efforts.

MARTINE A BRYAN MAN.

SAYS THAT HE BELIEVES THE NEBRASKIAN WILL BE RENAMED.

The "Farmer Orator," a Great Admirer of Bryan—Does Not Believe the Financial Question is Settled Yet, However.

The recent interview of Congressman Daly in which he declared for a renomination of William Jennings Bryan by the Democrats, has aroused more or less interest in political circles throughout the State. Tuesday ing a Press reporter met James E. Martine, the "Farmer Orator," who was one of the most enthusiastic Bryan men in the last National Campaign. Mr. Martine was asked if he voiced the sentiments of Congressman Daly. Mr. Martine replied with interest:

"Well, I do not just recall what my friend Daly said, but I will say for myself that I believe in bi-metalism as a principle, and I feel that Bryan is the logical candidate for the Democratic party in the next campaign. I admire his courage and personality. I believe he is the most available and strongest candidate we can name. But I am a Democrat, and believe in the wisdom and judgment of majorities, and shall support the candidate whomever he may be.

"What do you think of the party prospects?" asked the reporter

"I believe we shall win. The money question is not yet fought out. The advance and encroachments of trusts will be fought, and then the Philippines question—all these give the party true issues upon which to go before the people

"Once for all, you need not ask whom I will support in politics. I am a believer in parties, a partisan if you please. I love my party and its principles, and am always ready to press its claims and voice its sentiments."

Will Build Colonial Residence.

Mrs. Emma Darling has sold to Howard C. Runyon, through S. D. Drake's agency, about two acres of land on Rahway road and Prospect avenue. Mr. Runyon expects to build a colonial residence on his newly acquired property. The same agency has also sold a lot about 400 feet deep on Prospect and Woodland avenues adjoining the Denton property.

KILLED BY DIPHTHERIA.

NINE-YEAR-OLD BOY A VICTIM OF THE DISEASE.

Germs of the Malady Carried Into His System by Milk Furnished by a Dealer—The Little Fellow a Favorite

Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock occurred the death of Albert Morris, nine-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Morris, of West Front street, as the result of diphtheria.

The little fellow was taken ill with the disease but a short time ago, which was the result of drinking milk furnished by a milkman in whose family there was diphtheria. Dr. Keeney was called and she at once called Dr. Davis in consultation. It was decided that the boy's condition was very critical and hopes of recovery were slight. The best of medical care and treatment was given and soon there were signs of improvement from the disease. But as the malady grew better other symptoms appeared and it soon became impossible for him to retain any nourishment and it was impossible to prolong life.

The boy was the life of the household and was a favorite among all who knew him. His sudden taking off will be a severe shock to many who have known of his illness.

TELEGRAM HAS THE CALL

WORLD AND JOURNAL ARE STILL BOYCOLLED BY BOYS.

The Strike Against an Increase of the Price of the Two Sheets Still Maintained—Few of Them are Sold Here Now.

Hen's teeth are about as scarce as the evening editions of the New York World and Journal. The boycott against these papers in Plainfield has not yet been raised by the half a hundred boys who sell evening papers. There was a rumor Saturday that the strike had been declared off; that the publishers of the evening World and Journal had acceded to the demands of the boys and agreed to sell them papers at half a cent each or 100 papers for 50 cents. This rumor, however, proved not to be true. The newsboys are not selling the boycotted papers and there is not much liability of their being sold in this city at least for sometime by these boys. As it is estimated that there were nearly six hundred evening Worlds and Journals sold in Plainfield, the boycott against these papers has come to be a serious matter to those papers. The strike has lasted over a week and during that time the strikers have destroyed or prevented the sale of several thousand papers. The strikers have now turned their attention to the Evening Telegram and that paper is being pushed by the boys for all its worth The few Worlds and Journals bought in this city are sold by the regular news dealers, over their counters, as the dealers find it almost impossible to secure boys to sell the boycotted papers on the streets. In consequence of the trouble with The World and Journal the Evening Telegram is being purchased by hundreds of people who formerly bought The World and Journal.

To Give Guests a Good Time.

One of the best conducted hotels in this vicinity is The Arlington on Somerset street, which is run by Charles Jensen. The location is beautiful and guests find an abundance of breeze from the mountains. Mr. Jensen announces that commencing tomorrow evening, and continuing every Tuesday evening until further notice, he will give his friends a good time. There will be good music for dancing.

College Reorganized

The new Gregg College, Babcock building, has been reorganized and has added a complete commercial course. More room, new furniture, able, experienced faculty, enables the college to give students the same treatment received in New York or Newark. Students entering now receive free instruction until September 1st.

Little Progress Made.

Thus far the committee from the Common Council designated to investigate the feasibility of the city purchasing the plant of the Plainfield Water Supply Company have not been able to make much progress. The work of the committee is not yet fully under way and will not be able to report for awhile.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, healthful food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

DIDN'T KNOW THE PLACE

BOUND BROOK MEN'S EXPERIENCE IN CITY JAIL.

After Two Hours in a Cell, They Spent the Rest of the Night Kidding Themselves of Cell's Other Occupants.

John Hereo is a bartender in a Bound Brook hotel John Daly lives at Gateville and works in Bound Brook. Saturday night they came to Plainfield, met with sundry adventures, spent two hours in the city jail and the remainder of the night in trying to rid themselves of the many legged occupants of the cells who insisted in accompanying them.

Patrolmen Myers says Daly had been drinking too much. Hereo agrees with him. Myers told the two young men to move on. There were words and Daly became abusive in his language. Myers locked them both up, as Hereo refused to desert his friend.

That was at 11 o'clock. Two hours later some of their friends found City Judge Runyon and that official agreed to let them out on their promise to appear for trial Monday morning.

Monday a. m. Hereo was on hand, and Daly came later. Hereo told the court of thrilling experiences with the other occupants of the city jail. The young men living in Bound Brook had never heard of the wonders of Plainfield's city jail. They occupied the benches in the cells only to find that they were invaded by the bugs. After the Judge released them they went to a secluded corner in the borough, where they spent the rest of the night assisting each other in the removal of the vermin.

The Judge thought Hereo had all that was coming to him and so suspended sentence. As the prisoner departed bidding the court good-bye, Sergeant Kiely socially called out.

"Come again sometime."

"I will not" was the emphatic rejoinder as Hereo locked himself over carefully to see if his last brief visit had brought any of the unwelcome guests.

AT ASBURY PARK.

Founder Bradley Smiles Because Last Week Was a Money Maker.

Asbury Park, July 31.—Trolley parties are all the rage. Driving, boating and card playing have been relegated to the list of things obsolete. The women who take these trips are as much an attraction if not more so than the place to which the parties go. They make it a point to adorn themselves with ravishing gowns of cream and white. Their faces are wreathed in smiles and their chatter is most lively. The railway companies owe the success of the trolley party scheme to the female contingent.

Founder Bradley is all smiles today. The last week was the only real moneymaking week he has had thus far this season, but the outlook for August seems promising.

CRASH ON CENTRAL ROAD.

Two Trains in Collision and Two Passengers Hurt

Phillipsburg, N. J., July 31.—While rounding a stalled freight an express train collided with a coal train on the Central Railroad, at Springtown, Saturday afternoon. The crews of both engines jumped and escaped injury. The locomotives were badly wrecked. Passengers on the express train were thrown half the length of the coaches, but only two were seriously hurt. They are F. B. Smith, of New York, a traveling salesman, who had his spine and left hip hurt, and W. F. Neff, merchant at Allentown, who is suffering from Shock, and is unable to tell where he boarded the train. Both men were taken to the Easton Hospital.

Funeral of Samuel Flynn.

The funeral of Samuel Flynn, who died at his home on West Sixth street Saturday night from a complication of diseases, was held Monday morning from St. Mary's church. Father Westman officiated. The interment was in St. Mary's cemetery. The pall-bearers were Wm. O'Connor, John Traynor, Edward Coffey, Daniel Crowley, John Marrah and John Canary, all shopmates of the deceased in the Pond Tool Works.

GREAT TIMES IN THE WOODS OF MAINE.

Judge W. A. Coddington and Friends Just Returned.

THE JUDGE SHOT A DEER.

THEY SPENT TWO WEEKS IN THE WILDS OF MAINE.

History of a Very Remarkable Trip—Lived in a Log Cabin, an Old Resort for Famous Statesmen—Visited Other Plainfielders—Judge Coddington Made a Wonderful Shot—Fine Fishing Reported.

Judge William A. Coddington, who has but recently returned from the northern portion of the State of Maine, has some interesting experiences to relate. The genial Judge was accompanied by two jolly good fellows in the persons of Edward White and Samuel S. Squier, of this city. This trio returned Sunday morning, brown as berries. If the readers of this paper have any doubts about the good things the gentlemen had, Judge Coddington will set them right on that score.

The gentlemen were absent from Plainfield about two weeks. They literly took to the woods—not from any sense of escaping from their political or social friends, but simply to have a good time. The Judge and his friends sought the seclusion of the dense wilderness, and they found it. They journeyed away up into the extreme northern portion of Maine and went into camp "far, far from the madding crowd." They went by rail to a place on the map called Greenville, but which is known to but few outside of the school children living in Hon. Thomas Bracket Reed's State. From this point the Judge and his party secured the services of a trusty guide in the person of William Armstrong, a tall, hard-disted, good natured son of the celebrated prohibition State, who has piloted hundreds of city folk to good fishing and hunting.

Up through Moosehead lake the party went by steamboat to Spencer Bay, a cove of the great Moosehead lake. At this point the boys, figuratively speaking, "pitched their tents." They found a commodious log cabin, which the guide gave them to understand had been occupied in former years by eminent statesmen from nearly all the eastern states. The camp is nearly 600 miles from Portland and is located in the heart of the great pine timber belt. There is not an habitation within 50 miles. It is literally in the dese forest. But what sport the Judge and his friends had.

The second day after locating Judge Coddington and the guide went after deer. They paddled up Lucky Pond. After many difficulty the Judge succeeded in picking his way over the bogs of the swamp. The guide, with true backwoodsman's instinct, soon denoted the presence of deer. He notified the Judge and the latter was on the alert to the occasion. Presently a fine doe was seen approaching. For a moment the sight of the handsome creature completely upset the Judge. In his excitement he shook like an aspen leaf, but it was only for a moment. In a twinkling of eye the affable Judge was "at home" and he let drive with his trusty rifle, as they say in the story books. It was a clever shot. The bullet struck the doe directly back of the ear and he dropped within a hundred yards of where the amateur hunter stood. The guide said it was one of the best shots he ever saw.

As the law prohibits the killing of more than one deer for a hunter's food, the Judge and guide did not attempt to try their luck further, but set about reaching camp. While the Judge and guide were after deer Messrs. White and Squier were angling for the game trout, which they caught in large numbers. As the Judge and guide came in sight of the camp the former lifted the carcass of the doe to his shoulders and, like a cat carrying a mouse, bore it proudly into camp. Then the Judge took his first lesson in the butcher business. He dressed that deer The guide said it weighed fully 150 pounds, but when the hunters had next day. Venison steaks cooked to a turn enough to make the mouths of all water who read this story. Besides the venison steaks the guide fixed up a dish that he called venison broth. Judge Coddington says it was the most delicious beverage he ever tasted.

About three miles above the camp of the Messrs. Coddington & Co., F. C. Langhorn and Mr. Happenset, of this city, were located on what is known as the Penobscot Pond. The first Sun day the Judge and his party visited them and were royally entertained. Before breaking camp Mr. Langhorn took several snapshots of the party and also of scenes about the locality where they were located.

The only thing that at all disturbed the serenity of the party was the incessant hooting of the owls and the unearthly screeches of the loons at night. Judge Coddington says it is more demoralizing to his sensibilities than a Republican convention.

It is possible that Judge Coddington will make another trip to the Maine woods late in the fall.

DOG WITH AN APPETITE.

LATEST ACHIEVEMENT WAS TO EAT A DERBY HAT.

John Powers' Bull Dog Devoured Frank Story's Hat With Much Avidity —Dog is Still in Very Good Health.

Frank Story, of East Second street, who is a clerk at the drug store of John Powers, on Somerset street, is minus a fine derby hat, and if it had not been far Mr. Story's eagle eye he would never have known what had become of it.

Now it happens that Mr. Powers owns a fine bred bull dog, and this canine has a tendency to eat every thing in sight. He has taken pills by the hundred, and he thinks nothing of putting away fifteen bottles of patent medicines at all kinds in a week's time, but this, his latest move, has astonished everyone. His appetite for medicines and drugs having become poor, he has turned his attention to eating wearing apparel, hats, etc. Mr. Story placed his hat on a nail, but it fell within reach of the dog. The canine lost no time in getting to work.

The hat was devoured with much avidity. Just as the dog was tackling the last mouthful Mr. Story happened to catch a glimpse as it was disappearing, and there was nothing left to tell the tale but the band of ribbon that encircled it.

Strong emetics were given in the hope that even if the hat was gone, the dog's life might be spared. The last report is that the dog is doing well, much better in fact than the hat, but Mr. Story has learned his lesson and in the future if the dog gets anything belonging to him it will be because he cannot help himself.

FUNERAL OF H. JOSEPH WHITING.

Services Were Conducted by His Former Brooklyn Pastor.

The funeral services of the late H. Joseph Whiting were held from the home of his son-in law, Henry A. McGee, at Orchard place, Washington Park, Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. Rev. Dr. Henderson, of the Simpson M. E. Church, of Brooklyn, of which Mr Whiting was a member, officiated at the service. The bearers were Clifford A. McGee, Harry L. McGee and Raymond A. McGee, of Washington Park, Ralph Whiting and Irving Whiting, of Bound Brook, all grandsons, and Harry Bailey, of Bound Brook. During the service there were several hymns sung by a quartette composed of Mrs. and D. E. Tisworth and Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Bigelow, Jr. Interment was at the Bound Brook cemetery.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

No Baby Parade in Asbury Park.

Asbury Park, July 31.—"Founder" Bradley has announced officially that there will be no baby parade in Asbury Park this summer. Mr. Bradley said that the work connected with the annual pageant was too great for his nerves. The announcement is received with general regret. Many mothers had already prepared silking and expensive feature for this annual mareh of the infants.

PORTO RICANS' THANKS.

Lincoln public schools, of Plainfield, in sending to the American Free School, of Ponce, a beautiful National flag and numbers of smaller ones so that our children might appropriately celebrate Decoration Day and the 4th of July, deserves the praise of all persons who truly enjoy the greatness of the American Republic Fortunately, today, my small island of Puerto Rico is an integral part of that great country, and I, as a Porto Rican, am proud to be called American.

I have unlimited faith in the future of Puerto Rico under the gallant flag of the Stars and Stripes; for a country, formed under the influence of the good advices of Washington, Franklin and Lincoln, cannot but carry, wherever Providence beckons it to go, freedom and progress. I am not at all impatient and am tranquilly awaiting the unfolding of events, being sure that sooner or later we will gain my always cherished ideal: the fulness of American citizenship.

I regret that these flags arrived too late for our 4th of July celebrations, as we received them the day before yesterday, and I immediately sent them to Miss Hollabaugh, of the American Free School.

The flag is the emblem of a country, therefore to love one's flag is to love ones country; nothing, then, is so practicable and important as to carry to the hearts of children the feeling of love towards our flag; and thus will patriotism grow in the hearts of children, and when they become men, the roots of that patriotism will be at such a depth that it will be impossible to tear them from their hearts.

The beauty of the American flag gives it an immense advantage over that of other nations. It is so beautiful that children, and even men, when they behold it for the first time, admire its gallant red and white stripes and its beautiful blue background, where radiant stars, representing a group of the freest States in the world, are shining, begin by being interested in its pretty folds and colors and then learning to love it as we love and are interested in all beautiful objects which are placed before our eyes; then, little by little, the reason is so folds itself and the spirit penetrates in the ideas represented by the symbols, sentiments are born in our hearts, making clearer to our intelligence the principles that are represented by the flag.

These assertions, which I have the honor of exceeding to you, are not illusory suppositions, but are born of my own experiences, having noticed it myself and observed it in my loved children. In the first few days of the American invasion in our island, I placed in the hands of each of my four children an American flag and you can not imagine how glad they were to receive, it calling it pretty, graceful, and showing it to everybody especially to the troops, which at the time were seen everywhere.

For these reasons, the gift from the Bryant and Lincoln schools, through your kindness, to the American Free School of Ponce, can be considered as one of the principal elements for the progress of patriotism in Puerto Rico, and also an efficacious method by which, little by little, will be established the union between Americans and Porto Ricans.

I, who had the honor of founding the first American school in Puerto Rico, will endeavor, from this City Hall or outside of it to gain the beautiful end of union and partriotism, as we all wish it.

It is probable that I may go to the United States with my family some time next month, and if so hope to have the pleasure of seeing you.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) Luis Porrata Doria,
Mayor of Ponce.

Our Young Folks

ACROSTIC POEM.

Never, never let us tarry, as we go the way of life,
Ever fearless and undaunted, let us battle through the strife.
Verily, 'tis hard to follow in the way that conscience shows,
Even he who plants the seedling, still must tend the flower he sows.

Rendering what God has given, into gentle harmony,
Sowing through the coming harvest we may never, never see,
And although death soon o'ertakes us, when the mission we fulfil,
Yet, although the world forgets us, virtue will remember still.

Dare, then, to exist and labor, close to Mother Nature's breast,
In this world our tasks await us, and we have no time to rest,
Even though the way be dreary, God must know that all is best.

OUR LITTLE GRAY HELPER.

Poorly Equipped by Nature, Yet He Does His Work Well.

We have a little gray helper who cannot hear, nor see, nor make any noise. He wears a little gray coat, and he lives in tiny caves which he burrows out for himself. Our little gray helper has no feet, so he crawls.

He works busily for us all day in the ground under our feet, coming out chiefly at night to get his food. Then he does not take anything which anyone wants, but only fallen leaves and bits of stuff which no one cares about, and which are best out of the way.

Although much less fortunate than we, having neither legs, nor feet, nor hands, nor eyes, nor ears, he has all that is necessary to the performance of the work he has to do; and since our little gray helper has all he needs, and does his work, and does it well, we may think of him as being quite content and happy. And since the work that he does for us is very necessary and important work, and since he does it exceedingly well, we need not regard him with less than respect.

He has a system of blood vessels, a nervous system, and—yes, a brain. When you come to consider him under a microscope and in relation to the work he has to do, he is quite an interesting and exquisite bit of mechanism. He uses his brain, and has wisdom to know what to eat and how to get it. Though he has neither eyes nor hands, before taking anything into his cave, he examines it carefully by means of his one sense (touch), and with his little upper lip, which the scientists call prostomium. This lip is very sensitive.

He is prudent and thrifty, always dragging into his little house enough to secure him against the coming day, for blind and deaf as he is, he knows it is not wise to be out in the daytime, for the birds and their babies like him entirely too well.

He also knows that, being of a chilly nature, he will need to be wrapped up a bit when he goes to sleep in his cave, so he makes his own little bed of blades of grass and bits of leaves which he has dragged in with the little lip that does so much. He sees quite fresh air when he can get it, so he rests with his head near the mouth of his cave; and Mother Nature, realizing that this might give Robin Redbreast an unfair advantage of him, provided him with a head-covering darker than the rest of his coat, and very nearly the color of earth.

Great Names.

This game can be played by as many as like to take part.

Every player is provided with paper and pencil, and at a given signal each begins to write down on the paper all the names of celebrated people that he can recall, beginning with the letter "A"—musicians, artists, authors, Bible characters, or any others—only the player must be able to prove whether he really lived and what he was. One of the players must time the game with a watch. He gives, say, three minutes for the letter "A," and by that time all must stop writing. Then go on with all the letters of the alphabet, giving the same time for each. The one who has the largest number of names is the winner.

The Bells of Cologne.

If you want to hear the "Bells of Cologne" just take a silver tablespoon, tie a piece of string around the slender part of the handle so as to have two ends of the string. Wind an end of the string around the first finger of each hand, placing the tops of each finger in each ear. Allow the back of the spoon to strike the edge of a wooden table.

Mabel Wanted to Know.

Little Mabel was visiting in the country and saw some little pigs for the first time. What attracted her attention most was the twist in their tails, and after looking at them for a while, she asked: "Say, grandpa, does the piggies' mamma put their tails up in curl papers every night?"

The beautiful colors seen in the soap bubble arise from the fact that the bubble, being very thin, reflects light from both the outer and inner surfaces of the film.

THE GOWNS AT BIARRITZ.

Henriette Rousseau Tells What is Worn at the Famous Resort.

If there is a more delightful spot than this old and fashionable watering place, I have yet to find it. The breeze blows refreshingly all day and all night, sweeping down part of the time from the Pyrenees, pungent with the breath of the pines, and the rest blowing in from the sea, laden with the life giving salt spray. The place itself is quaint and old in some parts and painfully modern in others. The most painful parts of the modern portion are the astounding prices put upon everything, especially if the visitors are suspected of being Americans.

The Frenchwomen who come to Biarritz are usually of the wealthiest class, for poor ones or even those of moderate circumstances cannot afford to throw away their money, and the Frenchwoman is thrifty. The most of the nobility have their country seats and there pass the summer, but they try to pass at least a couple of weeks at this delightful spot.

As to the bathing costumes, I will dismiss them at once, saying only that they are so very scanty in material that it is useless to waste time upon them. The Frenchwoman likes an occasion like this and seizes it. Even in Newport no such bathing suits were ever dreamed of.

But, bathing suits aside, there can be no place where there is a more lavish display of fine costumes. Even on the day of the Grand Prix and Vernissage the dresses are not so fine. And here we have variety. There are delicious morning dresses of cashmere, veiling, estiral and popeline d'ete. These are half smothered in lace, with just a few satin ribbons to lighten them up.

The gowns for the early promenade are apt to be of mohair. While mohairs, made as the Parisian modistes only know how to treat this stuff, is a wonderfully attractive gown. It is tailor finished and has no trimming but very narrow white soutache. White braid on the white mohair does not sound much, but it is very charming when seen. The new delicate lavender, the violine and rich shades of gray and two or three of pink are all seen in these tailor gowns of mohair.

Perhaps one reason of the popularity of mohair here is that the sea air does not crockle or shrink it, a fault often found with almost every kind of woolen goods otherwise suitable for seaside wear. Gray is and always was a favorite with Frenchwomen. And I think they are the only ones who can seize upon all its possibilities.

Evening dresses are always worn rather ostentatiously for the first two days, and every lady has at least two. This is done perhaps to impress the people with the fact that the newest dress is not quite ready to remain and does not choose to compromise her position as a traveler until further acquaintance.

These traveling suits are elegance itself. The colors are light and the skirts are close and rather long, but quite simple. The corsages are almost all in a short bolero shaped jacket which can be closed or left open. This always matches the skirt. Some of these boleros are quite plain, but others are very ornate. A regular shirt waist is worn beneath them. Foule is a new weave of wool for tailor and traveling costumes. It is light and springy and does not crush.

For carriages, for afternoons about the parlors and porches and the delightful gardens there is no limit to the beautiful gowns. Silks, crapes, grenadines, muslins, organdies and no end of lace and chiffons are seen.

White jackets made of a fine felted flannel with a close twill are carried ready to slip on if the sea air grows cool. These dainty little jackets are lined with bright colored taffeta glace.

The dinner dresses are marvels of lightness and elegance and all have that quality described by no other word than chic. Voiles, or veilings with satin stripes, are very beautiful. They are made with tunics, the edges of the tunic and that of the skirt richly trimmed with lace, ribbon and all sorts of frivolity in the shape of ruffles, puffs, ruches and gauffering.

One elegant gown of pure white nun's veiling had a scalloped tunic, all the scallops outlined with renaissance lace in ivory color, the edges being finished with a silk fringe. Imagine lace with a silk fringe! It is too rich for common folks.

Grenadine and the delicate fine wool barege are both used to make exquisite creations for evening. These are nearly always all in one solid color or rather tint, for as a rule they are light in color. They are trimmed so elaborately with lace that it is hopeless to try to describe them. Much fringe is used also, and it is always gray.

White, cream ivory and black lace gowns over slips of colored silk or satin are very fashionable here for evening dress. Also, there is a new shade of lace called ocher, a sort of rich yet dull yellow. This comes in skirt widths, also as flouncing and other widths. It is made up over black taffeta or satin, and thus treated it is of indescribable richness.

FASHION NOTES.

Pretty Blouses and Bodices of Transparent Goods.

The disappearance of the blouse has been repeatedly predicted as imminent, but each season, nevertheless, the blouse reappears in new and attractive varieties. This summer the finest white wash fabrics are employed, incrusted with lace and embroidery, puffed, tucked, hemstitched and elaborated with all sorts of fine needlework. These delicate blouses are worn with or colored skirts and with or without a bolero. They are not to be adopted by stout women, however, as they increase the apparent size of the figure a great deal.

Bodices of tinted or figured lawn and nainsook often have a yoke and sometimes sleeves of open white fabric, either embroidered or cut by bands of insertion. These yokes and sleeves are unlined, showing the arms and neck beneath, and are therefore not worn for the street by refined women. They are intended for house use and look out of place elsewhere.

The cut shows a costume of pearl gray veiling. The skirt has three horizontal bands of guipure of graduated widths. The bodice is gathered at the waist in front, opening over a plastron of guipure. Regular and reverse of white moire are bordered with a band of guipure, and small crystal buttons decorate the fronts. The sleeves are plain, save for a guipure band at the wrists, and the belt is of white moire, the plaited collar being of veiling. The hat of pearl gray straw is trimmed with pink azalees and their foliage.

Dainty Gowns and Accessories For Summer Wear.

Among the most charming of summer gowns are those of the Trianon order, striped or flowered, recalling Severe shepherdesses and all sorts of dainty china things. Far from being expansive, however, all gowns are clinging and are molded to the figure so that they cover up it as an umbrella case envelops an umbrella. Where draped tunics are used the drapery is slight, and the folds are long and flowing in the classical style, all bunchiness being avoided.

A great many buckles, pins and jewels of all sorts are used in the draperies of corsages and in decorative bows and rosettes.

Chemisettes of white or cream lace over blue, pink or rose silk have the narrowest of ribbons, tinted to match, run through the interstices of the lace to form stripes.

A new idea is to have the lower edge of the chemisette extend below the belt in square tabs, forming a sort of basque.

The belt most in favor at present is a band of grosgrain ribbon of a color matching the chemisette, fastened by a jeweled or metal buckle.

The tea gown illustrated is of mauve crepon. It falls straight in large, flat plaits from beneath a short bolero of guipure, which is pointed at the back. Around the foot is a band of guipure, the collar is of guipure, and the large, open sleeves are finished with a frill of guipure. The tea gown fastens at the top under a large bow of mauve satin, with a buckle, below which it opens over a straight front of accordion plaited cream surah.

Old soldier Jim!

His arm ain't half as big as mine,
But he says he ain't got no whine

He 'listed 'cause he knew 'twas right;
An' licked the Spaniards out o' sight,
"For freedom's sake!"

He said it awful loud an' grand
An' father thinks he's got more sand

THE EDUCATED FLY.

Manner in Which Two Boys Can Perform a Wonderful Feat of Magic.

The educated fly travels across a marked mirror to any number or letter called for. The trick is explained by the illustrations. The mirror, which rests on an easel, is divided by the magician into twenty-eight squares, and a number and letter are written in each. The mirror is first removed from the easel for inspection, and is then placed on the floor, resting against the easel. At this point a boy crawls behind the mirror and lets down the wooden back of the easel, which serves for a shelf seat for the boy after the mirror has been restored to its place. A cloth at the back of the easel behind the mirror hides the boy when he climbs to his perch on the shelf. The cloth is numbered and lettered in duplicate of the mirror, and the boy is armed with a powerful magnet. The fly is of cork, with an iron core, which is set flat against the glass in a lowered corner of the mirror, where it is held by the magnet. It is evident from this arrangement that by moving the magnet to the square called for the fly will be seen to travel to exactly the same spot.

Getting Ahead of Queen Victoria.

Little Prince Alexander, the eldest son of the dead Prince Henry, husband of Princess Beatrice of England, has always been noted, from his earliest childhood, for bartering proclivities. He lends marbles and tops at interest to his cousins, the little Connaughts, and, on one occasion, got up quite a little corner in dolls, which he succeeded in purchasing at a great reduction from his small Albany cousins.

The other day he received a present of one sovereign ($5) from his mother, and, having quickly spent it, applied for the second. He was gently chided for his extravagance, but, unabashed, wrote to his grandmamma. The Queen had been warned of the financial embarrassment, and she replied in the same strain of remonstrance, whereupon the Prince responded:

"Dearest Grandmamma: I received your letter, and hope you will not think I was disappointed because you could not send me any money. It was very kind of you to give me good advice. I sold your letter for £4 10s."

Cat Commits Suicide.

Grieved over the loss of her little ones, Tounette, a beautiful black Angora cat, put an end to her life most strangely.

Her litter of kittens were drowned, being very much in the way, and when Tounette returned her grief at their absence knew no bounds.

Going to the top floor of the tenement house the cat acted in a peculiar manner.

She looked down, pondered a while, then deliberately leaped over and was dashed to death on the pavement below.

A cat always falls on its feet, but Tounette's head struck first, for she deliberately doubled up her feet and would not be saved.

TOILET HINTS.

Advice Concerning the Care of the Hair and Complexion.

The hair should be allowed to float loosely upon the shoulders for a little while every day, if possible, as when it is kept closely coiled or braided all the time the air does not have free access to it. It should never be arranged upon the head while it is wet or even damp, but after a bath should be left hanging until it is quite dry.

Bran water is excellent for the skin and is of service in cases of sunburn.

Tears are destructive to beauty and if habitually indulged in bring on an untimely aspect of age, so weeping is to be avoided as much as possible. Faded eyes, with the skin about them worn and loose, red eyelids and scanty lashes are the result of frequent crying, and insufficient rest has almost as bad an effect on the personal appearance. A great deal of sleep, a good digestion and no tears are more preservative of youth than all the cosmetics in the world. Rosewater is very soothing to the eyes, while thin eyelashes caused by inflammation of the lids may be improved by bathing the lids regularly with an infusion of camomile or cornflowers.

The cut illustrates a morning jacket of golden brown cashmere. It is cut in scallops around the edge, and also at the top, where it is pounced on a yoke of ecru guipure over golden brown silk. The top of the sleeves is also of guipure over silk. The scallops and edges are finished with a band of narrow black velvet. The belt of soft brown silk is tied at the side.

Useful Hints Regarding Dressmaking and Millinery.

Parasols of Scotch plaid are pretty for the country and seaside. There are also parasols of lace over a lining of silk which matches the costume.

Circular ruffles, so much worn, lose their attractiveness when made of thin goods. For cloth, velvet and substantial wools and silks they are satisfactory, but for sheer fabrics gathered ruffles will be found more effective.

It is said that light straw hats may be cleaned by rubbing the braid, band by band, with lemon juice, and immediately covering it with powdered sulphur, leaving the hat to dry in a dark place. Dark straws disfigured by dust may be cleaned perfectly by first giving them a thorough brushing with a clothes brush, then brushing them with a small brush dipped in kerosene oil. The hat must be left 24 hours for the oil to dry and the odor to evaporate. It is hardly necessary to say that all trimming must be removed before the straw is treated.

The wrapper illustrated is of accordion plaited lilac crepon over white silk. Around the foot are two bands of guipure edged by fine ruches of lilac mousseline de soie. The little plaited pelerine is trimmed in the same ways as are also the plaited sleeves. Around the neck and wrists are thick ruches of lilac mousseline de soie and white lace, and a bow of lilac satin with long ends is placed at the throat.

FASHION NOTES.

Summer Gowns and the Proper Accessories.

The princess gown continues in high favor. The upper part is usually so cut as to simulate a low necked bodice worn with a guimpe of crepe de chine, net or mousseline de soie.

Little capes of beige or gray cloth are seen as part of the summer outfit, for use in the cool of the day at the mountains or seaside. An air of novelty is given to these capes by the addition of a scarf of mousseline de soie of the same color as the cloth. This scarf is arranged over the shoulders to form a capuchon.

Large hats are soon to be worn again. They will be much trimmed, in a way recalling the Louis Quinze period, with large flowers and clusters of plumes.

PRINCESS GOWN.

Strings of silk tulle, to be tied in a large, soft knot under the chin, will be a frequently seen feature.

Hats and gowns en suite, little seen of late years, are beginning to reappear. There is always a certain quality of refinement about a costume matching throughout, and the return of the style to general favor is welcomed.

The princess gown illustrated is of pastel blue cloth. The front is slightly draped across the bust and closes at the left side with groups of buttons and cords. The edge of the front, the foot and the sleeves is stitched, and there are stitched plaits across the top of the sleeves. The valois collar is also stitched. Buttons and cords finish the wrists. The hat of black straw is trimmed with black plumes and yellow roses.

WHITE COSTUMES.

They Are Used For House, Street and Evening Wear.

White gowns are at a premium this summer. They are worn at all places and for all occasions. There are white wrappers, white tailor made costumes, white carriage, visiting, yachting and ball gowns. White waists, with other skirts, are seen in all varieties, from the plainest lawn or pique shirt waist to the most delicate lace and needlework.

The most generally useful white costumes are those made of pique or cotton duck. The linen duck is heavier and soon becomes stringy. These gowns are made with a plain or a tunic skirt, and are either without trimming or are decorated with braid, bands of insertion or stitched straps. The bodice is in the form of a jacket, a bolero or a blouse. A shirt waist of pique to match the skirt is very pretty. Sometimes white and colored pique are combined in the same gown, or white with a dot is combined with blue or white. Little jackets of scarlet cloth are worn very effectively with all white gowns for the country and are decidedly picturesque.

The cut shows an evening gown of white silk gauze embroidered with silver over white silk. The skirt is plain, save for the embroidery. The bodice has a square decolletage outlined with silver passementerie, and there is a large silver motif embroidered at the left side. The bodice is gathered at the waist under a belt of light green velvet. The sleeves are of unlined spangled gauze and have plaited epaulets.

THEY ALL SING TO BABY.

Who shall sing the lullabies
When our little baby cries?

First and best is mamma's strain,
As she sings and sings again,
Sweetest words for babies ears,
Words that quiet all his fears;
"Hush, my darling, lullaby."

Next the wind takes up the song,
As it briskly flies along
By the casement in the night,
Murmuring as in affright:
"Hush, my darling, lullaby."

Then the raindrops coming down
On the quiet, sleeping town,
Dash against the window pane,
And repeat the low refrain:
"Hush, my darling, lullaby."

And the waves upon the shore
Sing the baby's song once more,
Wind and rain and wave and weather,
Sing the baby's song together.

BOOMERANGS.

How to Make Them and How to Throw Them.

Boomerangs are of two kinds—returning and non-returning. The first is called invariably the Australian boomerang because it originated among the natives of Australia, and is used almost exclusively by them at the present day.

Travellers assert that a native will leave his home in the morning armed only with a couple of return'ng boomerangs, and will come back at night carrying a large number of birds killed with these strange weapons.

The boomerang that comes not back differs little from the ordinary club. It is, however, preferred to-day to the other by the native Australian.

If you care to try your hand at boomerang throwing, it will be well to make them, as they are expensive weapons to buy and may be broken before proficiency is acquired.

The boomerang is formed of a bent stick, one side rounded, the other flat. It is necessary to choose a very hard wood and heavy wood, and the best plan is to cut a piece from a natural bend or root of a tree, and to let the curve of the boomerang follow the grain of the wood.

They differ in length from 15 inches to 3½ feet, and in breadth from 2 inches to 3 inches. They should be about three-quarters of an inch thick, tapering toward the ends, which may be either round or pointed, while the edge must be sharpened all round. One side must be convex, the other flat, the sharpness of the edge along the convexity of the curve varying in different boomerangs. When thrown, the boomerang rushes forward for some distance, and and then generally returns in an ellipse to within a few paces of the thrower. If the boomerang strikes its mark it fails to the ground.

In throwing, it must be grasped at one end, stretched back behind the shoulder and then brought rapidly forward above the head, the inside facing the direction in which it is thrown. It may be hurled upward in the air or forward so as to strike the ground some distance from the thrower. In the first case, it flies with a rotary motion its shape would suggest, and suddenly returns in an elliptical line to a spot near its starting point.

An Apparent Impossibility.

Give one of the children a piece of paper, in the center of which is a round hole about the size of a penny. Also give him half a dollar and a request him to pass it through the hole in the paper. He will give you a look of scorn and claim that it can't be done, or, however, insist that it can, and furthermore you set about to prove it to him.

PASSING COIN THROUGH THE HOLE.

No. 1 is the piece of paper, now folded as seen at No. 2, with the coin between its folds. Crease at each side as seen in No. 3. Take hold of the paper with one hand each side of the coin, and gently push the coin out. What has been accomplished in folding and creasing the paper was to elongate the round hole so that it would become a long slot, instead of a round opening.

A Good Natured Emperor.

The Emperor of Austria was paying a surprise visit to the cadet college in the Neustadt of Vienna when he entered a classroom and there sat, an interested and sympathetic onlooker.

Suddenly his eye fell on his plumed helmet, which he had left reposing on a bench in front of the head boy in the class. Then he noted that the boy had quietly put a couple of pears into it, handing it around as a gratuitous memento among his schoolfellows.

The Emperor was merciful and merely said: "My young friends, if you want to rob me of my feathers, I would sooner give them to you myself."

Thereupon, amid the enthusiastic applause of the boys, he suited his action to his words. He returned from the cadet examination with "plucked" expressed plainly in his smiling crest.

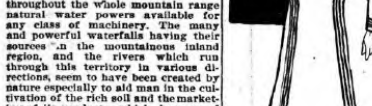
A FINE OPENING.

PORTO RICO A MAGNIFICENT FIELD FOR ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.

The Coal Problem and Many Other Expensive Items Most Ready Solution By Reason of Abundant Water Power—Laborers Earn About 75 cts. a Day.

The establishment of electric tramways throughout the island of Porto Rico, from east to west along the central range of mountains, is desirable, easy, and relatively inexpensive. An electric line, starting from Aguadilla or Humacao at the east end, touching the interior towns of Juncos, Caguas, Aguas Buenas, Sabana del Palmar, Barranquitas, Barros, Jayuya, Utuado, Adjuntas, and Maricao, and terminating at Mayagues, with branches from the main line to the villages along the coast, would serve better than any other system ,to move the rich products of those districts and to accomodate the great number of passengers who now have no means of convenient travel.

The coal problem, and many other expensive items of railroad building, need not be a consideration in the operation and construction of such a tramway system, as there exists throughout the whole mountain range natural water powers available for any class of machinery. The many and powerful waterfalls having their sources in the mountainous inland region, and the rivers which run through this territory in various directions, seem to have been created by nature especially to aid man in the cultivation of the rich soil and the marketing of its products, which, because of the high altitudes and necessarily heavy grades of high-roads, if these should be built, would otherwise be very costly. The interior of the island is extremely mountainous, as may be well seen from some of the illustrations. Around the entire extent of its coast, however, is a flat belt of rich lowlands ,suitable for the cultivation of sugar and tobacco.



MAP OF THE ISLAND OF PORTO RICO.

The highest village of Porto Rico, Aybonito, situated at an altitude of 2,300 feet above sea-level, is on the line of the central highway which runs from Ponce to San Juan. This fine highway, built originally by the Spanish government for military purposes, is 20 feet wide, macadamized 14 per cent., which would be the maximum also to be met with in the construction of a tramway along the mountain range.

The ballasting of rockbeds, in whatever direction the lines might run, would cost but little, as there is more than enough material for this purpose on the ground; and throughout the whole extent of the proposed line there is to be found wood of excellent quality for cross-ties. The labor required for such a construction is abundant and comparatively cheap, as the laborers in this region, accustomed to the hardest work, have never earned more than 75 cents a day (Porto Rican currency); and it would be an exceedingly easy matter to procure 2,000, 3,000, or 4,000 men for any kind of an enterprise.

Skilful stone cutters are easily to be had; and on the ground along the route is found an ample supply of stone suitable for bridges, culverts, and other constructions of a similar nature. In short, it is not necessary to seek elsewhere the materials for the construction of a tramway or railroad, as all, excepting the rails and other metal parts, are to be had along the mountain range. With abundant and well-distributed water power, from streams that do not fail even in the dryest seasons; with the materials for ballast and ties at hand; with labor cheap, good, and plentiful; the building of electric railway lines will certainly be attended with but little cost compared with the substantial profits that such lines may be expected to earn.

In the whole island, whose coast line measures 330 miles, there exist only the following steam railway lines, belonging to a French company: One line, of one meter gauge, from San Juan to Camuy, sixty-two miles long, and its operation produces an average income of $2,735 per mile annually. Another line leaving San Juan on the north, passing through Martin Pena and Rio Piedras, and terminating at Carolina, is 14 miles long. But the income from its operation is not so great, as another steam railroad which runs in the same direction about half the distance or to Rio Piedras, thus dividing with it the traffic of that region. Still another line, 35 miles long, runs from Aguadilla to Hormigueros. Another short line is in operation between Yauco and Ponce, a distance of 22 miles, with two stations on the line at Guayanilla and Tallabon. This railroad has an average annual income of $2,760 per mile, but it should be noted that, because of the high freight rates, $2.25 per ton, for a 22-mile haul, or ten cents per ton-mile, a great part of the freight-carrying between Yauco and Ponce is performed on the road, in successful competition with the railroad. The freight rates of the ox-carts are not much lower than those of the railway, and the speeds are about the same. Besides this excessive charge, the railway does not offer the facilities which should obtain in this district, as it does not reach to the harbor of Ponce, where the great bulk of business is done. Bulk must be broken and the goods transferred, the transportation of merchandise and not wear the same kind of bicycle suit, not simply because there is diversity in taste, but because there are individual points to be considered, such as age, weight and the sort of riding to be done A woman who bowls along a few miles upon an asphalted pavement in the level streets of a city can clothe herself much more daintily than one who takes long trips over rough country roads, where mud, water and dust are abundant, tumbles a thing to be anticipated and a drenching shower not an impossibility, to say nothing of a great deal of exertion and consequent warmth, prone to wilt frills and furbelows. Frills and furbelows are never, indeed, appropriate to bicycle clothing, which should be always of the tailor made order, trim, close and free from floating ends and fluttering accessories, but white, massie and pale gray gowns, patent leather shoes and similar attire may be worn by the easy rider, who is contented with a spin around the square, whereas the country excursionist must get herself up in a far more substantial fashion.

DRYING COFFEE IN PORTO RICO.

The cut shows a bicycle costume of gray cloth, stitched ornamentally with black. The skirt is short, and there is a bolero with two steel buttons, having stitched revers and a crenolated collar. The pocket flap, sleeves and cuffs are also stitched. The skirt waist is of black and white check, the belt of tan leather with a steel buckle. The gray straw hat is trimmed with black. MILLINERY NOTES.

Hats and Bonnets of the Prevailing Fashion.

Hats and bonnets are of the airiest texture, gauze, mousseline de soie and tulle being immensely employed for them. One of the most novel and delicate millinery trimmings consists of large balls of tulle on a tall wire stem. The balls are made of ruffles of tulle gathered together at the center on the same principle that is employed in ball pewulpers. Large flowers—often really colossal roses, bluets, etc. —are favorites, and there are toques all of flowers, as well as hats having either the brim or the crown of flowers, while the rest is of something else. Open straw and straw finely embroidered are also made and are very light. The old fashion of foliage covered with a white bloom is revived, and great bunches of such whitened leaves are worn on many hats and bonnets alone or combined with flowers.

Bluets are probably more worn than any other flower. Then come violets and afterward a crowd of flowers held in about the same esteem, one as another. Roses and cowslips of all colors and hyacinths have a prominent place. Less frequently seen, but exceedingly attractive, are clusters of hydrangea in the delicate natural shades of blue, pink, green and lavender combined with white. These are a charming decoration for a white or pale gray hat, and some exquisite models are exhibited.

The picture shows a toque of draped straw of a cherry red, which forms a large knot in front, pierced by a long, curling feather, which turns to the right. At the left side is a large bunch of lilies of the valley. The same idea may be carried out in dark blue straw, with a black or brown feather and bluets. JUDIC CHOLLET.

TO COVER UP BONES.

How the Thin Girl May Make Herself Plump and Pretty.

There is absolutely no beauty in bones. Skeletons are very disagreeable things. Wired up for the benefit of medical classes, they may be confined to the privacy of such institutions. But there are others.

The living, moving ones are about us, hung with every fabric of the loom, fashioned by hands skilled in the art of padding and plumping. But the bony framework shows through it all.

Bony women are called "distinguished looking" in polite society. With bravery born of desperation, they give their doorknob shoulders, spikelike elbows and audacious collar bones to the world at every opportunity. Matter of fact people refute the idea of bones as a sign of the thoroughbred.

Emaciated matrons and fleshless maidens, remember the Venuses for the fullness of your mistake. Venus de' Medici doesn't show a bone. Venus of the apple fame is plump all over, with ribs so well covered you couldn't count them.

Venus rising from the sea is dimpled and fluted with the beauties of health Venus de Milo is perfectly immense. How she would sigh through her marble image if she could see French stays and the various distenders and make shifts of the nineteenth century bony woman!

Ah, ye bony maidens, if you would be sweet and fair to look upon, begin at once to put flesh on your bones.

"And how, pray?" inquires a thy bit of a skeleton, large eyed and decidedly unwholesome because of her scrawny frame.

Olive oil, unadulterated, crossbonned little girl, olive oil is the thing for you. Begin it at once. It is salvation to thin women. Buy the very best grade of salad oil. Insist on the best. It sells for 80 cents per pint, but half a pint will do to begin on.

Rickety babies get it three times a day and manage to get fond of it. Better still, they grow strong and plump, pretty and lovable.

This is what you want. Begin with two teaspoonfuls at mealtimes and gradually increase the dose to a tablespoonful each time. The oil isn't half bad. Take a bit of wine or coffee after, and the thing is done. Each time it tastes a little nicer until a day comes when you discover you like it. It may be eaten on salad, which is really as good a way.

Then you must eat, but do not overeat. Digested food makes good blood and fine tissue. Surplus food makes trouble.

Any creature that can eat can get plump and good to look at. But the kind and quantity of the fat depend largely upon the character of the food eaten. Unwholesome food does the system more harm than good.

If the process of evolution is to be hastened in every possible way, it is well to remember that five or six little meals are better than three square ones. Let the articles of diet be dainty and partaken of in small portions.

Those foods eliminated from the list prescribed for obesity diet are about right for the thin, skinny woman. Water is fattening, and it is a wise habit to take a glass before retiring and upon arising. Cornmeal mush is the very best food for tissue building.

Of course the little thin girl is in a hurry, especially for her neck and arms, so she might spend 15 minutes each day rubbing in some olive oil after a hot bath. The cheaper grade of oil will answer for this purpose.

And something else besides all this—time and patience! Here is the rock on which beauty with other things worthy is ofttimes wrecked in feminine lives. Nature is not art. You cannot plump out your anatomy with beautiful firm flesh in an instant.

Except in squeezing, nature is never abrupt. Time is her handmaid, patience her servant. Time must be allowed for firm, healthful flesh to grow upon the bones, rounding out the hollows into curves of beauty.

You must wait, wait, wait. The change is gradual, and no one should expect to be metamorphosed into one of the Venuses of old in a few weeks. But wait. After awhile will come a change.

And then! Talk about complexion remedies! Throw skin whiteners and eye brighteners to the four winds. Why, the olive oil cure will beautify any girl in half a year, for it does what cosmetics cannot do—builds up the system, strengthens the interior and gives the vital organs a new lease of life.

THE LATEST STYLE.

Pretty Gowns and Attractive Wraps Now Seen.

For elaborate and elegant toilets pale and delicate tints are the newest. White, pastel blue and pale rose are seen among pearl, mastic, cream, gray, lavender, the best models, which are often very simply made, the delicate tone and perfect cut of the gown giving it its chief claim to the eye. Sashes, fichus and tunics after the antique style are frequently seen as a part of rich costumes, the skirt being of the trailing order, of course.

Boleros are almost invariably the accompaniment of tailor made gowns and as outer garments are largely replacing capes, although the latter, in cloth, are useful for traveling wraps, or, short and very elaborate, are still in demand for evening wear or for those with elaborate gowns. The approaching decline of the cape in general favor is owing to the change of style in sleeves. While these were comparatively ample, and sleeves were large, the cape was convenient and suitable. Now that the fashion has changed to clinging, trailing robes, outlining distinctly the arms and the entire figure, the cape is becoming undesirable because it tends to conceal or at least veil the form.

The cut shows a pretty little mantle of black peau de soie embroidered in open patterns over gray satin. The close fitting behind and is bordered with three ruffles of black lace headed by a ruche of mousseline de soie. The capuchon of plain peau de soie is lined with ruches of cream mousseline de soie, and the flaring collar is made to match. The lining of the mantle is straw silk. The second pauying hat of black straw is trimmed with Elects and gauze wings.

The SUMMER SEASON.

Dainty Fabrics For Elegant Summer Costumes.

For the warm season charming gowns are designed of satin merveilleux, gauzes striped with velvet and foulards of all varieties, some resembling Sevres china, others showing Scotch plaid effects.

TUNIC COSTUME.

Small, conventional figures are the favorites among printed silks, and the pattern is, as a rule, well spread over the gown.

The wearing of ornaments in the hair has always been more favored in France than in America, but even there the fashion is gradually declining.

Instead of adopting one special perfume and always using it, as was formerly considered most elegant, the fashionable woman now changes her perfumes with her gowns, using a different scent with each, according to her ideas of what is appropriate to the costume and the occasion.

An illustration is given of a remarkably pretty summer costume for ceremonious wear. The lower skirt is of ecru guipure applied upon white silk. Over this is an accordion plaited tunic of sky blue crepe de chine, caught up in cogullies at the left side by a chou of black velvet The bodice, of sky blue plaited crepe de chine, has a plastron and epaulets of ecru guipure over white silk, with a decoration of black velvet choux. The plain sleeves are of ecru guipure over white silk, the collar frill of guipure. The accompanying hat, of leghorn straw of the shepherdess shape, is trimmed with pink azaleas and black ostrich plumes. The parasol is of sky blue silk, with a band of ecru guipure insertion.

SUMMER GOWNS.

Details of Their Trimming and General Arrangement.

Small buttons of fine goldsmiths' work are fashionably employed as a decoration for bodices, and even white blouses of wash materials are thus adorned. The smaller the button the more valuable it is, as a rule, stones of genuine value being frequently used.

The mode has a tendency to enlarge the width of the shoulders, although sleeves are close and sleeve caps are less and less seen. The bodice itself is cut rather wide at the top, and the top of the sleeve is stiffened with canvas to give it a square form.

Costumes of lawn, thin nainsook or batiste, or Swiss muslin are usually made over a lining, either colored or white. It is not necessary that this lining should be silk, percaline or some similar lining fabric of fine quality answering the purpose very well. If it is colored, the lower edge may be finished with a pinked silk ruffle of the same shade, and in any case it is best to stiffen the hem a little in order that it may give proper support to the separate outside skirt.

The princess costume of pink crepe de chine which is shown in the sketch has a slight train, and closes at the left side, the edge of the skirt having a deep flounce of plaited pink mousseline de soie, which outlines the line of closing up the side of the skirt to the waist. The flounce is headed by a continuous design of bow knots in narrow black velvet. The bodice has a mousseline plaiting, headed by ruffles of black lace headed by a ruche of mousseline de soie. The capuchon of plain pink de soie is lined with ruches of cream mousseline de soie, and the flaring collar is made to match. The lining of the mantle is straw silk. The second pauying hat of black straw is trimmed with Elects and gauze wings.

Flowers and Other Trimmings For Summer Hats.

Enormous flowers are used on hats—roses so gigantic that they almost cover one side. Then there are turbaslike scarfs of gauze and garlands of flowers, all tending to enlarge the mass of the hat. High, detached sprays of trimming are less used than they were last year.

Orchids are now upon some of the most elegant models of hats. Large shapes, with twisted brims, are much trimmed with these effective flowers, especially hats of the directoire style, which are shown by the great millinery authorities.

Scarfs of tulle and gauze, coming from the back of the hat and tied under the chin or at the side, are becoming to nearly all faces, and their revival is an agreeable circumstance.

illusion, which answers the double purpose of protecting the skin and making it appear clearer.

A novelty in parasols is of light colored taffeta, decorated with Louis Quinze knots of black velvet in application. Another idea is to have the velvet bands design a Greek or arabesque border, the edge of the parasol being cut to follow the shape of the design.

The picture shows a hat of leghorn straw. The brim is not very wide and curls upward. Around the crown is a band of black velvet, and in front is a chou of sky blue ribbon and a full trimming of bunches of black and white grapes, with leaves, black and white dandelion bulls and ears of ripe wheat.

CHILDREN'S FASHIONS.

Summer Clothing For Very Little People.

White is the best of anything for small children, as it is never injured by washing, and a child's clothing requires constant laundering. Nainsooks, lawns and batistes are used for the little gowns, while summer coats are made of duck or pique. While the fit of a little child's garments is of no great importance, so long as the general shape is good and does not cramp movement, the style should be carefully chosen with reference to the type of child who is to wear them. A slight, small child looks well in fluffy clothing with ruffles, big collars and similar adornments, while a heavy, plump, robust child requires plain dresses and coats and comparatively small headgear. To overload a plump child with trimmings is to convert it into a mere bundle.

The best way to make a two piece dress for a small child is to mount the skirt on a plain underbodice of cambric or muslin, buttoning at the back. This holds the skirt in place without inconvenience, and if an open jacket is to be worn the front of the underbodice may be trimmed to give a chemisette effect. Mother Hubbard gowns are still, however, preferred for little children.

The picture shows a little girl's dress of pique. The skirt is trimmed with stitched straps of the same material, which outline the tablier and pass around the lower part. The straight loose jacket is trimmed in the same way and fastens with two rows of pearl buttons. The fronts are rounded, and there are a square collar and revers. The hat is trimmed with bows of taffeta, stiffened at the edges with a bordering of straw braid.

TUNICS.

They Are Universal Favorites This Season.

Tunics recalling the classic type are more and more seen. For evening gowns they often assume the princess form, with a low cut bodice, and are worn with skirts adorned with circular flounces.

SUMMER CAPE.

Embroidery, spangles, open needlework and incrustations are all pressed into the service as decorations and are used with the lavish profuse of Byzantine ornamentation. Tunic gowns are usually fastened in front or at the side.

Cloth of very light shades is enjoying immense favor, because it is the thinnest possible weight, very fine and smooth, and is really no more oppressive nor unsuitable to the season than any other thin wool goods. Cloth costumes for elegant wear are pearl gray, light beige, ecru, putty color, pastel blue or lavender and are made with a long skirt, very flaring at the foot. The trimming, consisting of fine braiding or stitched bias bands of satin, is arranged to simulate a corselet on the bodice and a tunic on the skirt, or the bodice is a bolero opening over a chemisette, which for a slight figure is full and fluffy, but for stouter contours is kept flat, like a plain, pointed vest.

The tiny cape illustrated is a pretty finish to a summer costume. It is of black spangled tulle over white satin and is trimmed with two plaitings of black mousseline de soie. The high, flaring collar, which is lined with white satin, is mousseline de soie, is bordered with a ruche of black mousseline. In front are two scarfs of black mousseline de soie, held in place by choux of the same material.

MAKE A DRESS BOOK.

GOOD REASONS FOR THE INDIVIDUAL FASHION VOLUME.

A Woman May Know What Increases or Diminishes the Size of Her Waist and Should Know What Affects the Chest Line.

Are you tired of cutting out fashion ideas, pinning them to the pincushion or tucking them into the mirror frame and losing them before you are ready to use the hints?

Then buy five cents' worth of white or ecru wrapping paper, of the size which will fold to make the book most convenient and agreeable for you to handle. Eighteen inches by twelve are about the dimensions of the white paper sold ordinarily by druggists, and the measures give a page of excellent proportions for fashion purposes.

What you will make of this paper eventually is your own fashion, or, better yet, costume book. Every good housekeeper has her own individual cooking guide. No one volume ever written is sufficient for the housewife who has any creative ability.

From time to time the real housekeeper evolves good methods and receipts. These she writes on the blank leaves of her cook book, to be handed along and improved by future generations. The genuine housekeeper is not altogether ready made, and never completely learned.

There are good reasons for the individual fashion volumn, or the Dress Book, as I prefer to call it. I confess I start upon the arguments with hints from men. The right sort of men look down upon women's "fashions." The same kind not only enjoy but require pretty dressing by their women associates.

Where is the point of difference?

It is a fact well known that the dress of a man once likes pleases him until it is usefulness is past. In or out of style he enjoys what once has met his fancy. Far be it from me to commend men's models of consistency in any general sense without certain explanation and apology. In matter of dress I think we can learn much from what, as well as may be admitted, is their blindly excellent taste. Blind because no man other than a few authorities knows the difference between ruching and tucking. And it requires an artist to tell just by shutting his eyes whether pink and yellow go together.

A woman may know what line and color increase or diminishes the size of her waist, and consequently know what raises or depresses the chest line. She ought to know what length in sleeves is ungainly, and that which in skirts is ungraceful.

And to that end must the faculty of comparison be cultivated. No person may say to a woman: "This is pretty that is ugly." She will pass around the lower part. The straight loose jacket is trimmed in the same way and fastens with two rows of pearl buttons. The fronts are rounded, and there are a square collar and revers. The hat is trimmed with bows of taffeta, stiffened at the edges with a bordering of straw braid.

OVERHEAD WIRES ARE NOW COMING DOWN.

Telephone Company is Removing Its Old System.

TRUNK LINES ARE HERE.

COMPLETED TO NETHERWOOD AND MEN AWAIT CABLE.

When That Comes They Will Continue Trunk Lines to Somerville, and Then Complete the Work of Demolishing Overhead System in This City—Many Large Poles to be Removed.

The maze of telephone wires that rise high above the city are soon to go. The work of removing them has already begun, and, with one interruption of a week, perhaps, will be continued until the last of these unsightly wires is gone from the principal part of the city.

The gang of linemen of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, which has been stringing the four new trunk lines from New York to Plainfield and two new trunk lines from New York to Somerville, has now completed its work as far as the Netherwood hill on South avenue. From that point an aerial cable will carry these lines to South avenue and Richmond street, where the underground conduits overhead begins and the wires go underground.

This length of cable was expected to arrive here last week but it didn't come and now the gang of linemen have been put at work by Manager Charles W. Bunyon in demolishing the old system of overhead wires until the cable comes. Then the cable will be put up and the gang will go to Somerville with the two lines for that place. On the conclusion of that work they will return to Plainfield and finish taking down the overhead system.

In the business section of this city there are many poles that will be taken down when the old system is removed. Only the distributing poles, which can be told by the distributer, which looks like an armored turret, that is on top of all these poles. All the others are to be taken out.

OVERCOME BY PET GOAT.

Mrs Winifred Duffley Dragged About the Yard and Injured.

Mrs. Winifred Duffley, of 328 East Fourth street, had an exciting adventure with a pet goat Monday morning. It is Mrs. Duffley's custom to look after the animal, of which she is very fond. Monday the goat was in a lively disposition. When Mrs. Duffley started to chain up her pet he became quite frisky and for a few moments led his mistress a lively dance. His prancing aroused about, shook his head playfully, kicked up its hind legs spitefully and finally made a dash about the yard. The sudden liveliness of the goat surprised the old lady and in a jiffy she was pulled about in a violent manner. Mrs. Duffley's strength finally gave out and she finally became exhausted and fell. Members of the family assisted her to the house, and later Dr. Tomlinson was summoned.

Although Mrs. Duffley was considerably shaken up,she was not seriously injured. For some time she has been a sufferer with heart trouble. She is nearly 80 years of age.

Officials Waiting to See How the Line From Westfield to Scotch Plains Will Go.

Westfield, August 1.—Work on the trolley road being built through here by the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railroad Company, has stopped. The railroad officials are now lying low until they see which way they are to go to Scotch Plains. The public hearing to be given the application for the franchise will no doubt show that the people are in favor of the Prospect street line but this will hardly suit the trolley people as this street is wide enough for a single track road only and it is their wish to have a double track road all the way from Elizabeth to Plainfield.

TOUGH LUCK.

Mike O'Brien Last Seen in the River—Struck It Rich, But Was Drowned.

"The stories of prosperity in the land are good enough, and I allow that there are good reasons for the same; but now and then, gentlemen, you will hear a bit of hard luck individually, and where you can't understand why it should be so."

The speaker was a Western man. He was about to tell a story he had in mind to prove his assertion. And this is what he said:

"There was the case of Mike O'Brien in the country where I lived. He went into the mines with a pick and shovel, and after the usual experience he struck it rich, and had about settled down to take things as they found the balance of his life. Last summer a young kinsman of Mike's, a tenderfoot, went out to get Mike to make him help to become a miner. Mike dropped all his own interests and went with the youngster into the hills, where there is that hard rock which man finds nowhere else in this world. The two went prospecting where few white men had ever been. They staked claims and dug shafts and found favorable indications. One day while they were engaged digging a shaft the tenderfoot accidentally smashed Mike's right hand with a sledge. Blood poisoning was threatened. Many a weary mile lay between the hill where they were and civilization, so they started out to the hot springs to get relief. For a long time Mike was unable to work, and when he got well he was down to hard pan. It was about the time when all our country was making a stampede for the Buffalo Hump country. Mike, however, was a little too late to get in with the rush. After every body else had gone Mike and two of his friends who were also too late to get in the game made their way together without saying anything about their destination. They were gone all summer and part of the fall. When they came back they had not a wonderful strike; they had rich milling gold ore. The strike was away up on the Salmon River. The men laid in a supply of grub for the winter and returned to the country and put in a winter's work. They realized more than they expected. After they had settled all doubts as to the richness of the mine, one of the partners, a man named Smith, came down and closed a deal for a bond to a syndicate for $400,000. Mike O'Brien's interest in this negotiation was $50,000. It was necessary for Mike to come down from the mountains to sign papers to get his money, and after the hard knocks Mike had this $50,000 was a fortune to him.

"The journey from the mines to the town where Mike was to go is made on the Salmon River. In some places the stream is wide, deep and treacherous. Four men were in the boat. After they had gone some distance they met a man whose business was boating freight. After a while they all man agreed if they would help him with a heavy load which he was hiding up stream, he would bring them back over the treacherous waters free of charge. When they came to a bolting and ugly place in the stream the boat capsized. Two of the occupants sank at once and were seen no more. A third occupant struggled and was rescued while Mike O'Brien was carried out by the current, and in spite of his despairing cry, he disappeared, hands up. Mike had one child, a daughter, down here in the States. She will get his share of the deal whenever she is found; but, gentlemen, I submit to you that the prosperity of the country did Mike O'Brien no good. He went down right in sight of it, and after he had worked mighty hard to reach the point from which he saw it."

No Such Place As Gretna Green.

The novelists have woven a romance about Gretna Green and its village blacksmith, but the fact is that this and all which for all time will stay a debonegsent to the wares of successive professional story tellers. The sordid facts of Gretna Green are these and the still more sordid details of the Gretna Green registers are widely different from the romantic impression which we associate with the days of postboys and the mad racing and chasing through Carlisle. The history of Gretna Green is the history of a curse upon the abominable marriage laws of Scotland. We call them abominable, for they are the curse of the Scottish people. The marriage laws in Scotland were and are (for they remain unaltered) atrociously simple, and therein lay the temptation and attraction of Gretna Green. Probably the novel-reading Christie will be shocked to hear that there is no such definite place as Gretna Green; the name applies to a district comprising some number of villages or hamlets some miles apart. All that was necessary was to get over the border into Scotland, and there make the necessary declaration before witnesses. The blacksmith's shop on the high road coming from Carlisle was the most easily accessible, and was probably the best known, but there were some houses just over the border which kept witnesses at hand, and retained a register of the contracts entered into. The registers were a secondary matter, and the fees demanded were frequently large and, where secrecy was an object, extortionate.

Those Gretna Green marriages still occasionally take place, though now only between residents in the neighborhood, but the same ceremonies take place all over Scotland. There is nothing especially distinctive about the contracts made at those Gretna Green marriages. Provided they are actual and proper ceremony takes place, it is said these Scottish marriages are not valid upon persons where both are of English domicile, though those intending to elope can have the consolation of the fact that the publishing of banns and other requirement necessary in England are not compulsory in Scotland, and a marriage in a Scottish church is binding. So a couple of runaways from England may still carry matrimonial advantages. The English law attaches great weight to domicile, and provided domicile be established, a marriage legal under the laws of the place of domicile is held to be valid in England.

A HOARY PROBLEM.

If a Cannon Be Fired From a Car Traveling at the Rate of a Mile a Minute, &c.

The question was sprung in a Bohemian den on Orleans street, after the coffee was brought in. "Suppose a cannon was mounted on an engine," said one of the inner Circle, "and was—"

"Aw! that's as old as Patti," sneered a privileged guest, "and as simple as A B C."

"Shut up," replied the charter member calmly, "and listen to the proposition. S'pose a cannon was mounted on a locomotive, pointing backward. The cannon is so charged that it carries a ball exactly one mile in exactly one minute and the engine is moving forward at a mile-a-minute speed. When the cannon is fired what becomes of the ball?"

"Plain as day," declared the privileged guest who had been fidgeting during the statement. "When the cannon is fired the ball begins its flight and, theoretically, as they started with the engine or the gun. It simply wings through space for a mile from its point of departure, and there it stops. The action, or the force of projection, requires one minute, during which time the locomotive has been traveling steadily in the opposite direction at equal speed, and, therefore, also covered one mile from the place of explosion. Distance between a point of arrival and point at which ball drops, one mile. It's a boy's redundant water. Gimme a cigarette, somebody."

"Your explanation is dead wrong," said a member who had been thinking swiftly. "It ignores the most essential factor in the whole problem. You must remember, when the cannon is fired, that the engine is traveling in the opposite direction at the rate of a mile a minute. In other words, the tube, the gun itself, is being drawn away from the ball at exactly the same speed the ball would develop if the gun was stationary, thus neutralizing the effect of the powder.

"It is as if you struck at a man at the rate of ten feet a second and leaped backward at the same speed. Naturally, you wouldn't hit him. The ball, of course, simply drops at the muzzle of the cannon. It don't go an inch. It is inert, dead and motionless, resembling, in that respect, the thinking machine of the gentleman who has just favored us with his reasoning."

"Rehay there!" exclaimed the poet lauriate of the Quartier Latin, "don't get so gay and haughty! You've dimly apprehended the principle involved, but you've still away off yourself from the real Pearl of Truth. Listen to the only genuine Buddha: Your explanation is based on the assumption that the speed of the ball and speed of the engine neutralize each other because they are equal." "Yep," admitted the charter member grudgingly. "Precisely," continued the poet, "and there, my boy, is where you fall down. Their speeds are not equal.

"The engine is moving forward at a mile a minute and goes as fast at one part of its journey as at another, but the speed of the ball, on the contrary, is constantly diminishing, until it drops, spent at the end of its flight. It is evident, therefore, that it starts at much more than a mile a minute, and as equality of speed is the basis of your childish theory, you will consider yourself squelched. Tell the minion to pass the growler."

The charter member lesped wrathfully to his feet and five others began to talk simultaneously. "Order!" cried the boss Bohemian, pounding on the table with a mahl-stick. "Gentlemen, stop yelling or the place will be pulled. This problem was unfortunate, but it illustrates most of the affairs of life. We are deceived by surface simplicity, rush wildly at conclusions and take a cropper over some small, unobstrusive fact which we hadn't noticed.

"The Gretna Green business reeks with fiendish subtleties. The ball, for example, partakes of the momentum of the engine, which must be overcome before it can drop. Then again, it is important to know whether it was fired with or against the revolution of the earth. Again you must determine what percentage of the speed of the projectile is developed before it reaches the muzzle, and that in turn involves the length of the tube and character of the bore.

"These are things it would take a skilled mathematician 'steen months to figure out. They would carry them into differential calculus and probably into the asylum. Therefore, in the interest of sanity, I declare the question barred."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Angler.

Big and clumsy as it is, and lacking in sensitiveness as it may seem, the angler is difficult to keep alive in captivity, one reason being that it is hard to get it to eat. An angler have been kept at the Aquarium in New York six months, but that is believed to be record time. Only a few more or three days after its arrival, taking for its first meal a flounder weighing about a pound.

The flounder is, in its shape, well adapted to fit the angler's mouth, which is, in proportion to the size of its body, the largest mouth in the world of an alligator. The angler is of a very different shape from the alligator, being much wider, flatter and with its forward end rounding like the end of a great stubby-shaped platter. Its mouth, which opens from side to side, extends back about a third of the length of its body, making it, instead of long and deep, like the alligator's mouth, broad and deep, or more on the cellar door pattern.

A day or two after eating the flounder, this angler took a two pound bake fish, and, as it prefers its food alive, the baker completed the cure of the cod, and held down in the water and shaken gently to give it the semblance of life. Then it was pulled out of the water and held down in the angler's mouth, and presently the angler dropped its trunkful and shut the bake in and gulped it down.

According to a high authority cold water is a valuable stimulant to many, if not all, people, its action on the heart is more stimulating than brandy. It has been known to raise the pulse from 70 to over 100.

WARS CAUSED BY TRIFLES

England and Her Allies Drifted Into the Crimean Troubles.

Many wars have had trifling causes. A dispatch altered in one or two points by Bismarck brought on the Franco-German conflict. Palmerston said facetiously that only three men in Europe ever knew what the Schleswig-Holstein troubles which led to two wars were about, and two of them died before the conflicts began, while he, the third man, had forgotten. A slighting reference by Frederick the Great of Prussia to Mme. Pompadour of France was said to have been one of the causes of the Seven Years' War, sometimes called the "war of three petticoats," from the fact that the France of Pompadour and the Russia of Catherine II, joined the Austria of Maria Theresa against Frederick.

According to John Bright, England and her allies drifted into the Crimean War without realizing it until after they got in, and they did not know what they fought for even after they started while it is certain that everything which was supposed to have been fixed by that conflict was disturbed afterward. Indeed, the first quarter of a century of wars beginning With the commencement of the French Revolution and ending with Waterloo, Wellington, Sheridan "settled nothing," according to Sheridan. The average person who lived in those days knew as little about the causes of the slaughter as old Kaspar did about the battle of Blenheim when questioned by little Peterkin.

Quail.

Pliny was much more accurate as to the habits of migrating quails than most others of his time, when the notions that when crossing the sea they were sometimes blown out of their course and drowned. He was also aware that their migration was by night, and makes the curious statement that when the multitudes were roaring and they were dangerous to small boats, on whose sails and rigging they settled, "often by night," and overset them. Tens of thousands are taken on the coast of the Pontine marshes, and in Sicily one hundred thousand are said to have been captured in one day. In the islands of the Greek Archipelago they are caught and cured just like sprats or pilchards, with the difference that they are netted on the land instead of in the sea. The heads are cut off, the bodies split and then salted and packed in tubs. Further East one of the greatest of the annual quail catches takes place on the Hesporus. The main body of these quail are looked for on the return migration in autumn, not in the spring. It is then that the birds are hatched during the summer on the plains of Poland, of Turkey of Rumania, and South Russia are on their way South, and pass in myriads over the straits and along the Asiatic shore. But in old days there were often years of respite for the birds.

War on the Bosporus, or in Greece and the Archipelago, or in Egypt or Spain or Italy, might at any moment "shut off the supply" for a series of years; and population not only failed to increase, but often receded; and there were no railways or steamships. The demand was a local one; and as in the days of Moses people tired even of quail. Now the population of Paris, London and Berlin are added to the return of spring quails. The birds are caught lean and are forwarded alive to be fattened. The market becomes more copious in everywhere growing, engines for their capture are better devised, and the demand is clearly overtaking the supply.

Oyster Shell Windows

Among the various and curious objects brought home by the sense of our returning soldiers none excite more interest than the delicate plate-like shells called conchas met only because of the thick and usually dark, massive and rough-shelled oyster family, but from the fact that shells serve as windows in may of the buildings of the Philippines.

The shell is nearly round, about four inches in diameter, compressed, and so thin that it is semi-transparent. In appearance the interior of the shell resembles isinglass, with opalescent tints, the interior being lightly rough. The animal is so exceedingly fat that when the valves are closed they apparently touch. This is probably the same species of mollusk which is known in China as the Chinese window oyster, and which is used for windows, lanterns and similar purposes. These ingenious people also powder the shells, which they use for silver in their water colors.

The better class of houses in Manila have windows in frames which slide in grooves, so as to be opened or closed, as desired, and in these are set the conchas, which soften the bright tropical sun rays. As a further protection against light and heat ,blinds are used which run in the grooves with the windows. The Governor's Palace, which was rebuilt about two hundred years ago, has for windows the same sliding frames set with many panes of the window oyster.

A Curio

A resident of Bristol, Pa., owns a curiosity in the shape of a copper button, the kind said to have been worn by the servants of George Washington when in office as President of the United States. The button is about one and one-half inches in diameter, and is quite elaborately engraved. Around the edge are the words: "Long live our President." In the centre is a monogram "G. W." There are said to be only about three of these buttons now in existence, and two of them belong to members of the Washington family.

East Indian famines have had some comic features. In Aurungabad the priests were paid to pray for rain and did so day after day, but the rain failed to appear, though very costly processions were organized. At last the people became angry, threw the gods into the rubbish heaps and blocked up the entrance to the temples with masses of thorns as a penalty for failure. Then the rain came to the relief of a Hindoo god to attend to business if he wants to keep his job.

PIPE LINE BLOCKED BY MONTCLAIR NOW

Connecting Line of the National Transit Company.

OWNED BY STANDARD OIL.

LINE WILL PASS THROUGH WASHINGTON VALLEY.

Right of Way Was Secured Through There Last Fall and Winter—Leaves Main Pipe Line at Bound Brook to Run to Hackensack—Montclair Will Not Allow Line in Outskirts of City.

The extension of the pipe lines of the Standard Oil Company is going on unceasingly. For several months that corporation has been trying to secure the right of way for a line connecting the present line of the National Transit Company at Bound Brook with one of the Standard refineries at Hackensack. The right of way is now completed as far as Montclair, but now the great oil company is in trouble with the Common Council of Montclair, which refuses to grant permission for the pipe line to go through that city.

The agents of the National Transit Company, which is owned by the Standard Company, visited Somerset county last fall. The new line was run, leaving the old one just above Bound Brook, through the Chimney Rock Notch, and then back of the first range of the Watchung Mountains into Washington Valley, and thus on in the direction of Newark, but passing to the west of that municipality.

The right of way through Somerset county and Washington Valley was secured after considerable trouble, and the agents of the Transit Company were kept in that neighborhood for many weeks interviewing property owners. The line was steadily advanced, however, until now Montclair refuses to allow the line to pass through the outskirts of that city.

The company may be compelled to turn and run round Montclair,and thus considerably increase the length of the line. It will, however, be only a question of time, for the company is persistant and will manage somehow to get the line through. It is intended to connect one of the Standard refineries at Hackensack that is now completed to receive the bulk of its oil by tank cars.

WAS HE "JACK THE PEEPER?"

His Excuses Being Unsatisfactory, A Blow Closed One of His Eyes.

Rahway, August 1—Women have been complaining recently of another "Jack the Peeper," who frightens them at night by gissing his eye to cracks in the window shutters. George Bierwith and William Moore saw a man in Lewis street about 11 o'clock on Saturday night whose actions led them to think they had found the impertinent fellow. They overtook him, stopped him and asked him what he was doing. He said he was a Mr. Drady, of Plainfield, but gave an unsatisfactory explanation of his actions, the men say, and one of them gave him a swift punch in the right eye.

"Mr. Drady" did not stop to remonstrate or even retaliate. He started off on a hard run, and soon vanished. If he is really "Jack the Peeper" he will have to peep with his left eye for a week or two.

There is no one by the name of Drady in the Plainfield directory.

Road House Burned Near Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, N. J. August. 1.—A bicyclist riding by Wilbur's roadhouse on Rahway avenue, a mile west of this city, at 2.15 o'clock this morning saw the house ablaze. He aroused the family, who fled from the place in their night clothes, and began to fight the fire, which started in the cellar. After subduing the flames, at about 5 o'clock, they sought refuge in a house nearby. At 6:30 o'clock the fire broke out anew and the building was destroyed. The loss will be $5,000

CAME IN TALLY-HO

Distinguished People of Camden Visited This City.

A distinguished party of people from Camden visited Plainfield Monday while enjoying a trip about New Jersey on a tally-ho. The party consisted of Judge E. A. Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. Harrington, Wynne Armstrong, Mr. Burling, Mrs. Chamberlain, Miss Morgan, Miss Shivers and Miss Whital. While in this city they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. T. S Armstrong, of the borough. Mr. Armstrong is a brother to Judge Armstrong. They left the city last evening and one addition was made to the party, Fred Armstrong, son of T. S. Armstrong, who will accompany the party on its trip by tally-ho through various Jersey towns. Before they return home they will stop at Lake Hopatcong for a time. All were delighted with Plainfield and its natural beauty.

A Prominent Physician.

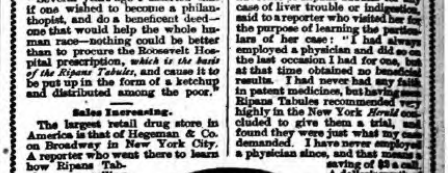
A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—he could do no better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department.

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When they are bought I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which parallels the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."



A new style pocket containing FIVE RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper form of convenience, and sold for FIVE CENTS, is now on the market. It is for the use of those who do not care to purchase the bottle containing 120 tabules (now sold for 60 cents), but who want a supply of the best medicine known for the occasional ills of life. Ripans Tabules may be had of druggists, or by sending the price to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce street, New York City. TWELVE of the FIVE-CENT packages will be sent for FIVE cents. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists. The FIVE-CENT packages may also be had of some dealers.

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at times obtained no benefit or results. I had entirely lost faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar. At the time of this interview there were present two daughters of the family, who objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do justice to the public in the daily press may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. I have spoken about my case in the papers and have some other person similarly afflicted call to see me, and they have all been greatly benefited. I have no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

4 US AFTERBATH

It makes the skin white and soft, removes pimples and dandruff and all eruptions from the person.

For the Head and Hair and Body.

The body and limbs of every child should be rubbed with a wet sponge each bath. Just enough dropped in the palm of the hand to rub over every part of the surface of a child, once a day will keep the skin soft and white, then pores free from getting clogged with impurity passing out from the system. A teaspoon full is sufficient to moisten the cuticle (skin covering) of a grown person. The effect is wonderful: pimples on the body and face are entirely removed by a few applications of the 4 Us. Druggists sell it.

TELEPHONE COMPANY INVADES CRANFORD.

Will Try to Establish Local Exchange There.

CANVASS IS MADE THERE.

COMPANY SECURED A FRANCHISE IN CRANFORD IN 1898.

But Made no Attempt to Take Advantage of It—Franchise Expired After a Year as Nothing Was Done—May Try Same Tactics as Were Used in Bound Brook if Committee Fails to Grant a New One.

Cranford, August 9—The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company seems to have opened an active campaign in all the suburban towns along the line of the Jersey Central. Cranford has now been set as an objective point.

A representative of the telephone company arrived here a few days ago and is now at work on a systematic canvass for subscribers to a telephone exchange, which is to be established here in the near future if the consent of the Township Committee can be obtained. The fact is, the consent will not actually be necessary, for the company can follow the same method they threaten to do in Bound Brook, of running their wires over private property.

The representative of the company could give no information as to what the company's plans were regarding Cranford, nor how soon they expected to put them into effect. All he wanted was subscribers.

It will be remembered that this same company made an attempt to establish an exchange here in the spring of 1898.

Finally, April 14th of that year, the legal permission to open an exchange was granted, subject to certain conditions. One of the conditions was that "in all streets where poles of The Suburban Electric Company or any other company are or may be erected, said The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company are hereby granted permission to place wires through said streets only upon said poles." Another was, "if within twelve months from the date of application said company shall not have established a local telephone exchange service to the people of Cranford, then this franchise shall be null and void." In addition to the contract contained in the franchise an agreement was made whereby the company pledged itself to make a cash payment of $100 to the township.

This payment was made, but as the twelve months' time limit has expired without the establishment of an exchange, it seems clear that all the rights and privileges obtained by the company have been forfeited, and that the company will have to begin all over again.

HAD ALWAYS BEEN HER FRIEND.

Perrine Wanted His Side of the Trouble Told—Has Gone West Now.

Charles M. Perrine, who was arraigned before City Judge Runyon Tuesday morning on a charge of assault preferred by Mrs. Carrie Conger, which was dismissed, called at The Daily Press office last Tuesday and declared that he wished his side of the story heard. The charge, he stated, had not been proved. He had for nearly nine years befriended Mrs. Conger as far as lay in his power and had never injured her in any way. He declared that he left for the west that night and would be absent from Plainfield for a number of years.

Surprise to Miss Young.

Miss Nettie Young, of the borough, was tendered a surprise last Tuesday by a number of her young friends. A pleasant time was passed in dancing and playing games, and refreshments were served at a late hour. Among those present were Miss Grace Emmons, Miss Evelyn Simonson, Miss Emma Line, Miss Emilie Dunham, Miss Winters, Miss Bessie Martin, Willard Martin, William Jeffreys, Walter Emmons, Edward Ross, Horace Martin, Jr., and Raymond Poole.

VALUABLE OLD CURIOS.

NOW IN POSSESSION OF MRS. PHOEBE A. CROWELL, OF CRAIG PLACE.

Century Old Set of China Imported From France in 1782 by Celebrated Huguenot Family—Also a Rare Old Platter.

Curio seekers and others interested in ancient wares are still to be found in all cities, towns and boroughs throughout the land. Some years ago the craze for rare old things swept over the country and every man, woman and child was collecting old china, clocks, chairs and bric-a-brac of all descriptions. Of late the mania has subsided somewhat although relic hunters are still to be found. The writer came across a set of rare old china dishes the other day that have been in one family more than 70 years. They are the property of Mrs. Phoebe A. Crowell, of No. 10 Craig place. The china is believed to be more than 100 years old.

It was imported from France about 1782 or thereabouts, and is believed to have been the family of a celebrated Huguenot. There are thirty-nine pieces in the set, which is in an excellent state of preservation. It was presented to Mrs. Anna B. Cole, mother of Mrs. Crowell, who then lived in Chester, Morris county, when the former was married, and it has been in the family ever since. When Mrs. Crowell was married, more than forty-five years ago, her mother gave her the set of dishes as a wedding present. Mrs. Crowell also has a platter which is believed to be nearly one hundred years old. It is handsomely decorated and contains a scene on the Hudson river opposite Fort Miller. This platter was originally owned by Sarah Hugg, the grandmother of Mrs. Crowell, but long since dead. Beside the dishes Mrs. Crowell possesses a grandfather's clock, nearly one hundred and twenty-five years old, which was brought to this country from England by a member of the family. The clock keeps excellent time and is a handsome piece of furniture.

BELIEVE BANK IS SAFE.

Investigation Into Affairs of Merchantile Co-operative Bank Association.

A committee, consisting of Mayor Rockfellow, Councilman R. L. Toiles and J. B. Coward, all members of the Merchantile Co-operative Bank Association, went to Red Bank Tuesday and made a thorough examination into the affairs of the bank, whose headquarters for this State are at that place. It learned that the New Jersey bank has nothing to do with the one in New York. The committee from this city were thoroughly satisfied with their investigation and they will report to the local stockholders that, to the best of their knowledge and belief, the bank is safe. The members were satisfied beyond doubt as to the safeness of the bank.

LIFE-SIZE PHOTOGRAPH.

Presented by I. M. Dunavan to A. L. Force, of The Daily Press.

Louis M. Dunavan, of fire head quarters, yesterday presented to A. L. Force, of The Daily Press, a life size photograph of himself and his brother, the late W. L. Force, which was taken in 1871 and presented to Engine Co., No. 1, of which W. L. Force was at that time the foreman and A. L. Force the engineer. The picture, which is neatly framed, shows both men in the uniform of the engine company—red shirt and eight-cone fire hats. The picture is to be given a prominent place in The Press editorial office.

Built Hotel at Washington Rock.

James M. Frazee, of Trenton, brother of S. D. Frazee, of Plainfield, was in town several days last week calling on old friends and acquaintances, and noting the great changes that have taken place in Plainfield since he was a resident here. Mr. Frazee was the builder of the Washington Rock Hotel many years ago, and was also owner of a large tract of land on West Front street, east of H. C. Compton's farm. Mr. Frazee is now quite aged and rather feeble.

His Business

CABLES ARE GOING, TOO.

POLES ARE TO BE REMOVED IN A SHORT TIME.

Park, Watchung and North Avenues Are Nearly Freed From Telephone Wires—Linemen are Now Taking Down the Heavy Cables—Other Streets Will Follow—Removal a Great Improvement.

Most of the single wires on Park, Watchung and North avenues and on Fourth and Front streets have been taken down and now the great cables are being removed from the poles in those thoroughfares. A gang of linemen of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, numbering fifteen in all, have been at work here for a week and greatly changed the appearance of things overhead.

The linemen have taken down the single iron and copper wires and removed most of the cross trees on the posts. Those that remain only wait the removal of the cables which is going on as fast as possible. It is rather slow work for the cables are heavy and then have to be coiled up on huge spools for transportation.

The linemen will continue in Plainfield for the rest of the week at least. As soon as the last of the cables are down on the streets mentioned, the cross-trees will be all removed and then the poles taken up. Most of the poles are in good condition and can be used elsewhere.

After the removal of the wires from the main thoroughfares, the wires on the other streets where the underground conduit system goes will follow. Even now the greatly improved appearance of the streets, now the wires are gone, is very evident.

TROLLEY BASEBALL LEAGUE.

Union County Standard Says That One Will Be Organized.

Good idea! Trolley it along. We don't know just where the idea sprung from; but we suspect "Charlie" Denman. He is much given to thinking things. Never mind whence came the idea; it is, all the same, good. And here it is: A Trolley Base Ball League. By that meaning a league within the trolley circuit comprehending Elizabeth, Cranford, Westfield, Springfield, Rahway, Plainfield, Bound Brook, Somerville, New Brunswick, etc. It is not necessary to have high priced playing talent. There is plenty of good amateur ability. And we believe that the public, within this district, would, if properly assured as to the straightforward character of the movement, give it countenance and all the financial support required.

What do you say, Elizabeth, Cranford, Westfield, Plainfield, Bound Brook, Somerville, Springfield, Rahway, New Brunswick, etc., etc.?

For Westfield, yes! Trolley it.

Just think of what a lively time we'd have on hand now if a course of league games was in progress within this territory this summer, and all the places connected up with trolley routes as they probably will be next summer!

Should the idea materialize we beg to offer to the league directors, free of charge, quarters in the Standard building, located within one minute of the Jersey Central station at Westfield and on line with the prospective trolley route, now under construction.—Union County Standard.

NO FIRES LATELY.

Plainfield Fire Department Has Not Been Called Out For a Month.

It has been nearly a month now since the city fire department was called out to do active duty. At one time late in the winter hardly a day passed that the department did not have to turn out for a blaze. Chief Doane accounts for so many of the fires at that time by the heavy rains washing down the soot in the chimneys to a point so near the fire that in many cases a fire in the chimney resulted. The Chief says that all householders will do well in the fall, as the time comes for the furnace fires to be started again, to have the chimneys swept and the great accumulation of soot removed before there is a fire.

Mrs. C. D. Stillman and babe, accompanied by her sister, Miss Alice Barlow, returned home last Monday from Plainfield, N. J., after an absence of several months, Mr. Stillman meeting them at Beaumont. Miss Barlow will spend three or four months here with her sister. They report a very pleasant voyage from New York to New Orleans, on the steamship Knickerbocker.—Sabine Pass (Tex.) News, July 27, 1899.

EUCHRE AT HUNTERSTON

BIG BENEFIT WILL BE HELD THIS EVENING.

Elaborate Arrangements Being Made for Decorations for That Occasion—Captain Snyder to be in Charge.

The subscription euchre to be given at the Hotel Hunterston this evening is now an assured success. Captain Snyder, who is chairman of the committee on decorations, has been busy for the past two days with designers and workmen from New York who are doing their utmost to make the affair as gorgeous as it deserves to be. The broad piazzas will also be arranged for parties who don't care to play cards but who may enjoy the music and watch the animated scene within the great ball room where the affair is to be held.

The Hunterston is now quite full of guests but many have engaged rooms in the neighborhood and, as the car service will be special that evening, people will have no trouble in attending. The prizes are many and very beautiful and will be on exhibition that evening at the hotel.

CROPS ARE THRIVING.

WEEKLY CROP AND CLIMATE REPORT IS VERY ENCOURAGING.

Week Characterized by Local Thunder Storms Destructive in a Small Area — Rainfall Unevenly Divided.

New Brunswick, August 8.—The weekly crop and climate report of Director E. W. McGann at the State Central office of the United States Weather Bureau here, is as follows:

"The week ending Monday, August 7th, was characterized by severe local thunderstorms, that on the 2d being unusually destructive in a small area of Union, Burlington and Salem counties—in the former by high wind, and in the two latter by heavy hail. In the vicinity of Lower Penns Neck, Salem county, nearly the entire tomato crop was destroyed. Also in the vicinity of Beverly, where the hailstones measured 2½ by 2¾ inches, the greenhouses on three farms suffered damage to the extent of $1,000.

"The growing and maturing crops are reported to be in a most thriving condition. Fall plowing has commenced, the rains of the week having put the ground in fine condition. The reports received from the cranberry growers indicate that the berries have obtained a fair set in some bogs, while in others it is not as good.

"The temperature and sunshine during the week have been above the normal in all sections. The rainfall was unevenly distributed, a small portion of each section receiving amounts slightly above, and others considerably below the normal, but sufficient in all sections for present needs."

Nearby correspondents report as to local conditions:

"Piscataway town—Very fine growing weather; potato blight very bad; corn very fine; cabbage worms numerous. Wm. T. Woerner."

"South Bound Brook—Two heavy showers on the 2d; no damage done, except blowing some fruit from the trees; melons ripening and rotting badly; corn and late cabbage growing rapidly. A. F. Randolph."

"Somerville—Showers on the 2d were very beneficial; ground in fine condition for plowing; corn, buckwheat and all vegetables are very promising; rainfall, 1.97 inches. "H. V. N. Garretson."

HENRY T. SMITH IS DEAD

Passed Away Yesterday After Long Illness in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. Henry T. Smith, of Westervelt avenue, received a telegram Tuesday day telling of the death of her husband at a little village in the Adirondacks Tuesday. He has been very ill for some time. The telegram gave no details of the death but stated that the body had been shipped to his former home at Glen Cove, L. I. Mr. Smith leaves a widow and two daughters.

Thomas U. Smith, the eldest son, went to Glen Cove yesterday to learn more of the details if possible and lookout for the care of the remains.

Has Appealed Case

Attorney Angleman has given notice of appeal in the case of Victor D. Schomp against John Mair, which Justice Mosher Tuesday decided in favor of the plaintiff Takes Striker's Place.

It is reported that Mr. Kellar, of Plainfield avenue, a printer by trade, has secured a position in The New York Sun office, made possible by the recent strike.

ARROWSMITH SAID THAT HE WAS GUILTY.

Justice Storms Fined Him $10 For Cruelty to Horse.

EXPECTED TRIAL NOT HELD.

CASE WAS PUSHED BY AGENT PANGBORN OF S. P. C. A.

Arrowsmith Was Charged With Cruelly Beating His Horse When Animal Was Almost Exhausted—Complaint Preferred by William B Stewart, Prominent Citizen of South Plainfield—Pleaded Guilty.

New Market, August 9—Many of the good folks of South Plainfield journeyed here yesterday afternoon to attend the cruelty to animals trial of George Arrowsmith which was to come before Justice Storms. They were disappointed, however, for there wasn't any trial, Arrowsmith making up his mind at the last moment to enter a plea of guilty.

Arrowsmith, it will be remembered, was arrested on complaint of William B. Stewart, a prominent citizen of South Plainfield. It was alleged by the complainant that Arrowsmith had been beating his horse one day most cruelly when the horse was so exhausted as to be hardly able to drag the wagon.

The case was pressed by William N. Pangborn, local agent for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It came for trial before Justice Storms. Arrowsmith changed his plea to guilty and it was accepted.

Justice Storms sentenced him to pay a fine of $10, and also gave him a severe reprimand. If he ever was convicted on a similar charge, the Justice said, he would show no hesitancy in punishing him to the full extent of the law, which is a fine of $100.

The South Plainfielders who came over to hear the trial were rather disgusted at the lack of excitement, but were well pleased with the sentence. The case aroused universal indignation.

COPY NEVER GOT THERE.

Why the Westfield Republican Failed to Make its Appearance Last Week.

Editor Morse, of the Westfield Republican, has been the maddest man in the county for three days. Saturday night he stroked his moustache in vexation; Sunday he forgot to curl it, and Monday he pulled it viciously.

The Republican is printed out of town, and Thursday after sending in his copy, the editor took a vacation. On returning home Saturday he found that his customary package of papers was not in evidence, and then his madness began to develope. The only trouble was that he did not know who to get mad at for he wasn't sure whether some one had swiped his edition or his copy. Monday, however, he found that the copy had never reached the printer, and the consequence is that The Republican is an issue short, and Morse is now looking for a press of his own.

BEAT BROTHER WITH UMBRELLA.

Warm Time at Westfield Station Sunday Evening.

A colored man from Plainfield went to Westfield to see one of the dusky belles Sunday evening and, while promenading with her, met his sister, who took him to task for being out with another woman while his wife was at home. The couple wrangled for awhile and the Westfield lady left. Then when the other two had reached the Westfield depot the man called his sister some "pet name" and there was a fight. She took an umbrella which she was carrying and broke it in a dozen places over the brother's head, and the arrival of the Plainfielder's train was all that saved him from being seriously hurt, for he could do nothing against the terrific rushes of the angry woman.

Fishing for Salmon.

Charles S. Lee, general passenger agent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, accompanied by Mrs. Lee and her two daughters, and Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Herring, have just returned from a delightful two weeks' trip to St. John's Lake, Canada, about 190 miles north of Quebec. One of the pleasures of the trip was the fishing for the gamey little leaping salmon, called quananiche by the Indians.

Working for The Sun Now.

Arthur Heath, of this city, who for sometime past has been the foreman in the composing department at the News, has secured a lucrative position in the composing department at The New York Sun office. Mr. Heath's position is that of a make-up. His many friends in this city will be pleased to learn of his success.

SPIDER AT MEETING.

CAUSED EXCITEMENT AT SERVICE IN CAMP WOOLFE.

Christian Endeavorers of Park Avenue Baptist Church Conducted Services at the Westfield Fresh-Air Camp.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church conducted the evening gospel service at Camp Woolfe, the headquarters of the Union Fresh-Air Association, at Westfield, Tuesday. A large number of the Endeavorers and their friends went by stage, and several by wheel. The meeting was led by Miss Annie Wyckoff, of Putnam avenue. Her subject was "Christ Our Friend," and the leader treated it in a very practical and helpful manner.

A number of the Plainfielders and also of the guests at the camp took part by prayer or testimony. A quartette from the Endeavor Society, composed of Miss Adelaide Runyon, soprano; Miss Adelia Runyon, contralto; Wheaton S. Lowry, tenor, and Thomas Adams Cuming, bass, led the singing, and sang two selections. Miss M. G. Morse, of the Congregational Endeavor Society, sang two solos, with autoharp accompaniment.

The drive down and back was enlivened by the singing of hymns and college songs. The evening was a somewhat cold one for a service held practically in the open air, but the bright meeting and the visit to the well-conducted camp and its happy inhabitants was enjoyed by all.

Mosquitoes, usually very much in evidence, did not disturb the visitors, but the solemnity of the meeting was suddenly marred for a few moments by the appearance of a huge spider, which wandered about between leader, choir and congregation, chased by a kitten, until Thos. A. Cuming bravely made away with his spidership, and a small child in the front row captured the kitten, holding it fast for the remainder of the evening. During this excitement singing was going on, and afterward quiet fell over the auditorium and the service of sentence prayers proceeded.

MRS. CHASE SEEKS DIVORCE.

Papers Were Served on Frederick F. Chase Today—Co-respondent Named.

Mrs. Hattie T. B. Chase, of Fanwood, has begun proceedings in the Court of Chancery for a divorce from her husband, Frederick F. Chase, formerly of this city. Papers were served today. The divorce is asked for on statutory grounds. Miss Hattie Castleton, of New York, is named in the bill as co-respondent.

There will probably be no answer to the charges by Chase. Mrs. Chase is at present staying at Asbury Park. She is the daughter of Theodore B. Ten Broeck, of Rutherford, and was one of the leading belles of that place when she met Chase.

PICNIC AT BOYNTON BEACH.

Sunday-school of New Market Baptist Church Enjoying Annual Outing.

New Market, Aug. 9—Four large stages, besides a number of private vehicles, carried the members of the Sunday-school of the Baptist church of New Market and a number of their friends to the annual picnic to Boynton Beach this morning. The prospect of a delightful weather tempted a large number to go and the picnic was consequently a great success. A delightful time is anticipated.

BECKER FINED $50.

Convicted of Cruelty to Animals Before Justice Storms.

George Becker, who was charged with cruelty to animals some weeks ago by William N. Pangborn, local agent for the S. P. C. A., was Tuesday fined $50 by Justice Storms, of New Market.

CRAMPS NOT BUILDING HERE.

Shooters Island in the Kills Being Improved. But Not By Them.

Elizabeth, Aug. 9—A report that the Cramps, shipbuilders, of Philadelphia, had purchased Shooters Island, opposite the Singer Sewing Machine factory, and near Stapleton, Staten Island, is refuted by the Seaboard Lumber Company, the owners of the Island, and the idea of converting this small patch of land into a ship yard or any other extensive manufacturing place is considered absurd. Some improvements are being made on the island by the Seaboard Lumber Company, which stores lumber there and does some box making.

CARRIE WAS SCOLDED SO SHE RAN AWAY.

All Union Village Turned Out to Find Her.

FOUL PLAY WAS FEARED.

SHE FELL ASLEEP IN HIGH GRASS IN PASTURE.

Farmer Gulick Stumbled Over Little Nine-Year-Old Carrie Burnett After Hunting Until Midnight—Is Daughter of Henry Burnett and Lives With Her Grandmother—Ran Away Because She Was Scolded.

Half the population of Union Village and the countryside thereabouts turned out Tuesday in quest of little Carrie Burnett, the nine-year-old daughter of Henry Burnett, who had disappeared mysteriously shortly after noon. Burnett is a widower and he and his child have been living with his mother on a farm close to Union Village.

Little Carrie was naughty Tuesday morning and teased her grandmother. At last the old lady could bear it no longer and lectured the child long and well. Dire punishment was threatened if the offence was repeated. Then Carrie walked away from the house sobbing. She did not appear during the afternoon and the supper hour failed to find her in her accustomed place. Her father became alarmed, fearing that she had run away.

At 8 o'clock there was no sign of the little girl, and Mr. Burnett hurried to his neighbors for aid in finding the child. The farmers turned out afoot and in wagons. Some journeyed to neighboring towns, while others searched the woods and fields, calling aloud the name of the missing one. Torches were procured. It was feared that the child had met with foul play for several tramps had been noticed in the vicinity.

Abram Gulick, whose farm is near by, was one of the most energetic in the hunt. At midnight he was searching the pasture near the house, when he stumbled upon something half hidden in a bunch of long grass.

"Bless me, what's this?" he exclaimed.

"I'm sleepy," a tiny voice replied out of the grass.

It proved to be the missing child, who had fallen asleep there. She was speedily taken home and the searchers called in.

FEELING GROWING STRONG.

The Much Mooted Industrial School Question—A Rare Political Opportunity.

Trenton, August 9.—There seems to be good prospects at this time for a a new investigation of the State Industrial School for Girls. The criticisms against the institution seem to have increased rather than diminished since the end of the three-day inquiry by the Governor and one or two of the trustees. The State today is aroused over the institution as never before.

It seems generally agreed among all the parties that the discipline has been too strict. In the Governor's inquiry the witnesses were not sworn to tell the truth, and thereby the record of that investigation is not considered as weighty as it might have been. The demand for a legislative investigation grows in all parts of the State.

It came to light today that the House of Assembly and State Senate committee on the school is the proper tribunal to look after the charges that have been made and that are constantly being made.

The joint legislative committee last year visited the school in a formal way, following the usual custom. Senator Evans, of Atlantic, is the chairman of the committee, and the other members are Senators Pitney, of Morris, and Packer, of Burlington, and Assemblyman Murray, of Union; Marshall, of Cape May; Stryeker, of Passaic; Welsh, of Morris, and Martens, of Hunterdon.

LOWER RATE FOR HOBOKEN.

Tax Rate This Year Will Show Reduction of Five Points.

Hoboken, August 9—The tax rate in Hoboken for the year 1899 1900 was struck by the commissioners of assessment of taxes yesterday afternoon, and shows a reduction of five cents on $100 of ratables from the rate of last year.

Hoboken has two rates, one for the old city and the rate for the annexed or Weehawken district. The former is $2.43 on $100, and the latter is $2.22. The total increase in the assessed valuations this year amounts to $807,666, which accounts for the decrease in the rate.

Household Talks

Simplicity in Decoration.

The best decorators are preaching simplicity and chasteness of style. You are told that what you want is a really restful room, and to acquire this colonial furnishings are highly recommended. Hence it is, that quaint, high-backed chairs and seats are now easily obtainable, as well as those more imposing wing chairs covered with rep, velret or kretonne. Colonial yellow is the color par excellence for the walls, whether painted or papered, of a room to be furnished in colonial style. The frieze should be narrow, and is usually stenciled in browns. In some of the modern built houses in the city it is easy to find a room with a colonial mantel, recognized by the columns for supports and a simple shelf.

What to do with the floors of country house chalets is often a troublesome problem, where one objects to carpets, even mattings, and can hardly afford hard wood. An artist has settled the question for himself by painting them with the colored enamels used on metal bedsteads. The dull shades harmonize beautifully with the walls. For a room in Dutch blue there is a blue enamel which is perfect for the floor. Moss green and dull copper are very effective with white woodwork. The enameled floor should be varnished and beeswaxed to gain the best results.

An Attachment for Sewing Machines.

A new device which will be appreciated by the seamstress is a work-holding attachment for sewing machines, which has been recently patented. This consists merely of a large network basket, which may be either of wire or cord net, stretched over a frame, and means are provided for clamping this to the edge of the sewing machine, which is farthest from the operator. By this idea the seamstress is able to handle delicate work much more quickly, as she is not hampered by being compelled to look constantly to the core of the fabric, for as soon as it has passed under the needle it falls into the basket, where it is entirely safe from contamination.

Hanging Pictures.

A few words may not be amiss concerning the proper hanging of pictures, which is, in truth, an art in itself. The old fashion of hanging the suspending cord in an acute angle from one hook is now considered in bad taste. Every picture should hang by means of two cords and the rings should be placed so that the picture will not lean forward from the walls. Oil paintings, water colors and etchings should not be mixed up indiscriminately. Try a couple of water colors by themselves in one wall space and a group of photographs or carbon prints by themselves and note the effect. Pictures should not hang too close, neither too high nor too low for inspection. Disregard of these points spoils many a fine picture.

Chairs With Pneumatic Tires.

The latest proposal in regard to dining room chairs is full of interesting possibilities. The idea is to apply to these chairs the principle of the pneumatic tire. Before a long dinner the seat of each chair will be pumped up and the happy guest will finish the most protracted session in comfort. That is the theory, of course. Whether the practice will bear it out no one can prophesy. Families including small boys would do well to proceed cautiously. A judicious distribution of tacks would make the sitting down of a dinner party like a volley of musketry.

Royal Pancakes.

The royal pancakes for Queen Victoria's table are made as follows: "To each egg allow one ounce of flour, half a gill of milk and one-eighth of a saltspoonful of salt. Whisk them well in a basin, beating the whole into a perfectly smooth batter, which, when ready for frying, should be like thick cream. Cover a pan thinly with butter. Grate a little lemon rind over the cakes and send sifted sugar and cut lemons to the table with them." The younger members of the family have currents and sultanas in their pancakes.

Copper Kitchen Utensils.

A French cooking teacher is advocating the use of copper cooking utensils and has a word of warning against putting them or any other dishes used in cooking away in dark closets. Keep them where there is a fresh circulation of pure air, she says, and give no chance for germs to find a lodgment. Copper saucepans are expensive at the first place, but they never scorch, are easily cleaned and polished every day with an extra cleaning once a week, will last twenty-five years without need of renewal.

Fine nainsook embroideries with medallions of lace introduced here and there add pretty variety to the season's trimmings. Irish point and venice point effects are also prettily reproduced in the cotton embroideries for trimming summer gowns.

THE SUMMER WARDROBE.

New Poplins—How Traveling Gowns Are Made.

Poplin is one of the best of the season's materials. It is used for all sorts of gowns, from simple ones to those of great elaborateness, and is seen in black and all the new colors—several blues and violets, a number of greens, grays and beiges and poppy and venetian red. There is a lovely shade of pastel green, another of light hortensia blue and a beautiful silvery gray. Poplin is employed for little girls as well as women.

Traveling gowns are very simply made, the tailor made style being preferred, and all elaborations of fastening and troublesome adjustments are avoided. A pocket is a necessity, but it is difficult to put it anywhere except in the back seam and yet keep it out of evidence. Where there are no plaits at all in the back of the skirt it cannot be kept out of sight even there. In such a case it is best to trim the two sides of the front and conceal the opening of the pocket under the trimming. The skirt should be short, so that it need not be held up in the hand during walking. The bodice, which is most convenient is the jacket or bolero, which may be open or closed, according to circumstances. It should be worn over a tear shirt waist of percale or wash silk.

The cut shows a gown of flax blue linen. The upper part of the skirt is adorned with heavy white embroidered motifs, and the bodice, which forms a slight blouse in front, is similarly trimmed. The upper part of the bodice is cut away in a fanciful form to show the neck, and the edge is finished with a plaiting of white mousseline de soie. The half length sleeves and the epaulets are finished in the same way. JUDIC CHOLLET.

FASHION HINTS.

Items of Interest Concerning the Wardrobe.

Capes are still worn for the carriage, for evening and as traveling wraps, and their utility will keep them in fashion for a long time yet, but the bolero or short jacket is now preferred for general use.

The fashionable wedding costume includes something beside the gown, veil and accessories. The bride must have special garments all through, beginning with underwear of fine linen trimmed with real valenciennes lace. Then come the short petticoat of white liberty silk, the long petticoat of white moire or satin, elaborately trimmed with lace, mousseline de soie and ribbon, and the corset of white satin or opal broche silk. These concealed decorations are quite as costly as the gown itself and are of the finest quality and workmanship.

The bodice differing from the skirt is still worn both by girls and women. Corsages are no longer made with a blouse effect at the back, the front only being allowed to overhang the belt. Bodices of taffeta or of mousseline de soie over silk are in as much favor as ever.

The cut shows a costume of poppy red taffeta. The skirt is covered with an application of yellow guipure and has a tunic of plain taffeta with a stitched edge. The little coat is cut to match and has a stitched edge also and opens over a plastron of the guipure over taffeta. The sleeves are plain, the epaulets being cut in one with the bodice. Fancy buttons decorate the corsage, and there is a neck frill of yellow chiffon. The hat of yellow straw is trimmed with red poppies and red tulle. JUDIC CHOLLET.

KAISER'S MOUNTED AMAZONS.

Cavalry Regiment of Lithuanian Girls to Guard Him During Hunting Season.

By Gertrude Hall Forbes

When Emperor William goes to enjoy the hunting season in Prussia, which he will do as soon as the yachting season closes, he will be received by a regiment of 500 cavalry women. They are Lithuanian girls and are now organizing to receive the kaiser. The regiment will be known as the Imperial Mounted Women volunteers, and of a more unique body of troops no sovereign in the world can boast.

The homes of these cavalry amazons are in the district which lies far in the north of the empire, between the Baltic, Russia and Poland. They are of the race that became famous under the Jagellons.

The idea of forming a regiment is one which the Lithuanian girls originated themselves. When they made their proposition to the officials of their province, they said:

"We make one condition—our duke (meaning the kaiser) must have no other bodyguard. During the time of his stay in our country we want to be his soldiers. We will garrison his castle, will 'beat' the game for him, will attend him on his trips around the country and see him safely home when he decides to return."

Count Bismarck communicated with the emperor's court marshal to find out whether the offer would prove acceptable. The court marshal wrote:

"It all depends on the girls. Go and look them over."

So his excellency invited his fair petitioners to meet him at Trakehnen, the celebrated horse farm, and at the same time arranged with the governor of the place for the use of a hall. But if the hall had been as big as Madison Square Garden it couldn't have accommodated the assembly, for every one of the 500 volunteers came on horseback, many bringing led horses, and all insisted upon attending the council seated on their chargers.

TWO OF THE KAISER'S MOUNTED WOMEN VOLUNTEERS.

There was an open air meeting then, and Count Bismarck, who is already a little stiff in his joints, had to mount a blooded horse, despite his rheumatism, and make a speech from the saddle. President Hegel of the Gumbinnen district translated the address into the old Prussian tongue, for the Lithuanians do not understand German, and an exchange of views followed, with this result:

"The provincial government accepts the services of the Lithuanian women, with a view of selecting from them 500 to make up a regiment. The regiment is to be uniformed in the national dress of the country and select its own officers, subject to the approval of the president of the district. Members of the regiment furnish their own horses, and each officer or subofficer is entitled to have a led horse. The horse may be put out to grass on the royal estates, but oats must be provided by its owner.

"The name and style of the regiment is Imperial Mounted Women volunteers. Its members are entitled to the ordinary soldier's mess, but receive no pay."

Then the native women gave an impromptu exhibition of their horsemanship, and, after a drink of "mead," a strong fermented liquor made of honey and water, richly spiced, scampered off.

They have been drilling under their betmen twice a week ever since; and as these betmen have invariably seen military service either as privates or noncommissioned officers, they are well able to teach the girls their business. Of late Count Bismarck ordered reviews of the different squadrons to be held under the guidance of officers of the cavalry reserves. The reviewing officers agree that they never met with recruits exhibiting so much intelligence and skill in the handling of horses and in obeying signals. Every one of the women would make an efficient "dugelman," they cried enthusiastically.

These Lithuanian women scramble upon a pony as soon as their legs are long enough to hold on; they learn to tend large herds of cattle before they know their prayers, and they can wield a three yard whip sooner than a cooking spoon. They wouldn't think of mounting a horse save to straddle it.

PICTURES ALL IN BLACK

The Fad For Silhouette Portraits Is Being Revived.

By Annette Crawford.

Society is ever on the alert for some new form of diversion and entertainment, and in seeking for the new it is sometimes led to turn back and revive the old.

There is now a revival of the art of silhouette cutting, which was so much in vogue in the old days before the sun turned portrait painter, and it promises to speedily become the popular fad. The artist of the scissors is likely to be quite as much in evidence as the artist of the kodak has heretofore been, and the victims of the "black art" will doubtless become as numerous as have been those of the snap shot.

We may now look to see silhouette parties become the fashion, in which bright young women, with scissors and paper, will compete for prizes, while patient young men pose as the subjects. There will doubtless be no end of silhouette exhibitions.

It is not a bad source of fad. There are in it the possibilities of much wholesome and intelligent entertainment as well as the means of improving the artistic taste and accomplishments of its devotees.

While silhouetting is one of the oldest forms of picture making, there are always about it a freshness and charm. Exhibits of this class of work are always novel and interesting. The origin of the art is lost in antiquity, though it has been designated by the name silhouette only since 1759.

At that time the name was applied to profile portraits in black or any uniform tint, being so called after Etienne de Silhouette, minister of finance during the closing years of the reign of Louis XV, whose rigid economy, intended to avert national bankruptcy, caused his name to be applied to things cheap.

Following out the idea of mock economy, folks gave up sitting to the fashionable portrait painters and had likenesses taken by "a la Silhouette." The political nickname has clung to the profile portraits with which the nobles of King Louis' court tried to belittle his majesty.

Despite the ridicule attached to the name, silhouettes became quite popular throughout France, and there are many fine collections of these simple but often artistic old portraits still extant.

A few years before the beginning of the war of the Revolution silhouettes became very popular in this country, and this form of portraits were seen everywhere. Some of these have been preserved and are valuable relics of that period. In those days we were very kindly disposed toward the French and adopted with alacrity French customs and fads, and no doubt the penchant for silhouettes came from our early love of France.

The greatest genius of the "black art in portraiture" was doubtless Etienne Edouart, a Frenchman who had served as a soldier under Napoleon and who became famous as a profilist in England as well as in France. One day when in England he was shown some silhouettes. His friends, who proudly exhibited these pictures of themselves, were vexed with the scorn he expressed of them. Edouart took a pair of scissors and declared that he could do better, and the result proved that he could. This was the beginning of his career as a profile artist. He possessed the true instinct of likeness, and his silhouettes, elaborate, minute and full of character, rise almost to the dignity of fine art.

Among the silhouettists who have attained celebrity was Mrs. Leigh Hunt, wife of the English poet, essayist and editor, who diligently cut profiles of the portraits of her husband's most intimate friends—Byron, Moore, Lamb, Shelley and Keats. Some of these portraits are still preserved.

The art of silhouette cutting is not extremely difficult to acquire, though it takes patience and some skill. The primitive process was to trace the outline of the subject from a shadow cast by a candle on a sheet of white paper. This shadow outline is then reduced or enlarged to the use of a pantograph or any size the operator desires. From the model thus acquired the silhouette is cut from black paper or paper of any uniform dark tint and mounted on white cardboard or cut from white paper and placed on a black surface. The true silhouettist, however, does not resort to these devices, but depends only on an artistic eye and deft fingers.

DANCED BEFORE WATERLOO.

Lady Tighe, Who Was at the Famous Brussels Ball, Still Lives.

By Jeanette Devoe

There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gathered then
Her beauty and her chivalry, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A thousand hearts beat happily, and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell
Soft eyes looked love to eyes which spake again,
And all went merrily as a marriage bell.
But hush! Hark! A deep sound strikes like a rising knell!

Probably the only living woman who danced at the famous Brussels ball and heard the "cannon's opening roar" which ushered in the battle of Waterloo and rudely disturbed the revelry is now living in County Kilkenny, Ireland. She is Lady Louisa Madelina Tighe. She is 96 years of age now, but she remembers the scene as distinctly as if it had been yesterday and does not need to refer to Byron's lines to refresh her memory.

Lady Tighe was only 12 years old at the time of this tragically interrupted ball. Probably she would not have been there at all had it not been that it was her own father, the Duke of Richmond, who gave the ball. Thus it happened that, although only a schoolgirl, she was present. She danced, too, and with some of the very officers who, responding to "the war note of Lochiel," rushed out to meet death "where the thickest of war's tempest lowered." But while the ball lasted she was in a glow of excitement and tremendously interested in the brilliant affair.

Although not Irish, Lady Louisa has many ties that bind her to Ireland. Her father became lord lieutenant and is one of three of his 12 children still alive, for all her brothers—seven valiant youths they were—have vanished, while but two of her sisters, now bearing the historic names of Pitt and Cecil, remain.

She was born in 1803 and thus has seen four sovereigns of the British throne. George III died when she was 17. Instead of being merely her king, he might have been her kinsman, for he had been madly in love with her greatnaunt, Lady Sarah Lennox. She, however, would have none of him.

Early in 1815 Lady Louisa's father took his family to reside in Brussels, in the Rue de la Blanchisserie, and on LADY LOUISA MADELINA TIGHE.

June 15 he gave the famous ball which has immortalized her and placed her in the position of being the only woman of modern times whose name is indissolubly connected with a British battle.

Two hundred guests were invited, including 50 ladies, and they assembled in the big room where Lady Louisa and her sister learned their lessons and played battledoor and shuttlecock. Lady Louisa, then a schoolgirl of 12, was present at that historic festival, which her kinsman, Lord Byron, has rendered doubly famous in "Childe Harold." Her sister (her senior by eight years), the late Lady de Ros, who died in 1891, at the age of over 96, wrote a very interesting account of the ball ten years ago.

The story is too familiar to be retold. Two of Lady Louisa's brothers fought in the battle, while she and her sisters and their mother waited eagerly for the news of victory and were nursed the sick and dying who were brought into Brussels.

In 1825 she married the Right Hon. William Frederick Fownes Tighe of Woodstock. "One Who Has Kept a Diary" told us last year that her mother remarked of the match, "Poor Louisa is going to make a shocking marriage—a man called Tiggy, my dear—a saint and a radical." Mr. Tighe died in 1878, so that Lady Louisa has been one and twenty years a widow. One by one her brethren have slipped away, so that she almost alone remains from among those who were at the Brussels ball.

And still Lady Louisa lives in her quiet Irish home. She is a wonderful reminiscence—a relic of a past that has long since been merged into faraway history.

TAILOR MADE GOWNS.

Two Bodices Often Made For One Skirt.

Tailor made gowns of thin wool, cloth, pique or duck are very much worn. In having one of these costumes made it is not at all unusual to have two bodices instead of one, as it permits of more variety. One bodice is a neat jacket, the other a bolero, and they may be worn interchangeably with the same skirt as occasion demands. The bolero is the more "up to date," but the jacket is sometimes the more useful.

Blouses to be worn under the jacket or bolero are often marvels of fine needlework. White being in great favor this season, wash materials are largely employed, and chemisettes are often a mass of valenciennes lace, embroidery and tucks. The finest batiste and nainsook are used. These materials come by the yard, also in all over designs of tucking, puffing, frilling and insertion, and usually have much openwork, which renders them cool.

For women who do not care for wash fabrics there are blouses of liberty silk, net or mousseline de soie over silk. These are worn with a soft cravat of the same material or of lace.

The cut shows a tailor made gown of beige cloth. The seamless skirt is closed at the side and is finished with rows of stitching. The bolero jacket has rounded basques, with large tabs in front, and a collar and revers of white faille. Gold buttons and silk cords trim the bodice and the wrists of the plain sleeves, and all the edges are stitched. The collar and cravat are of white embroidered tulle, the chemisette of blue mousseline de soie. The hat, of beige straw, is trimmed with blue flowers and loops of blue taffeta. JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE FASHIONABLE FIGURE.

It Is Formed Upon the Model of a Stove Pipe.

The general style of gowns is now very attractive, clinging attire and flowing draperies being far more pleasing to the artistic eye than the stiff, rigid forms which prevailed a few years ago. Not satisfied, however, with expanding all artificial distension of the figure, such as bustles, haircloth, balloon sleeves and pads, fashion has decreed that the natural contour of the figure should be suppressed and flattened to the utmost degree possible. Of course it is only the blindest followers of fashion who carry out this idea and contrive to destroy or straighten all natural curves, but such is the theory at present prevailing. New corsets are constructed with the single purpose of narrowing the hips and converting the back and front profile into a straight vertical line, but as the most effective of these instruments are very expensive there is every prospect that nature will not be entirely subdued and will still be visible in the human form divine.

The accompanying cut shows to what an extent the fashionable ideal of the figure has changed within a short time. The model illustrated is the latest and is immensely long, the front steels being entirely straight, while those at the sides are curved as little as possible. The hips are closely bound by a tight yoke of strong webbing, while the fullness at the top in front is almost entirely omitted. This straight jacket is worn immediately under the gown, except for a little corset cover. JUDIC CHOLLET.

Dish-Drainer.

A dish drainer of the style shown in illustration will be found a labor-saving device in the kitchen. It can be made very plain or ornamental, as desired. The bottom is formed of lattice work; the sides and front may be of the same if desired. A piece of oilcloth should be tacked under the drainer and extend to the top of the back of the sink, to protect the wall. A dish-drainer will save many weary steps to the average housekeeper and many valuable minutes as well, and what is of importance, also, if dishes are properly washed and rinsed when placed to drain, they will be found to possess a lustre equal if not superior to that produced by polishing. The ordinary wiping and polishing of table ware consumes not less than ten minutes for each operation, in a commonsized family; by using a drainer a saving of three and one-half hours can be affected in one week.—Practical.

From a Housewife's Note Book.

Old boot tops, cut into shape and lined, make excellent iron holders. The lather keeps the heat from the hand most effectually.

To prevent kerosene lamps from smelling, as they sometimes will do, even when perfectly clean, put a tablespoonful of salt into the oil.

To stop a leaking pipe until the arrival of the plumber, mix together yellow soap and whiting with a little water to a thick paste. Place this thickly over the leak and the water will stop flowing at once.

To keep kerosene burners clean, they should occasionally be boiled in a strong solution of soda. This will remove all dust and dirt, and not only will the lamps produce a better light, but they will be prevented from smelling rusty.

To Wash Soiled Swansdown.—Baste the strips on a piece of muslin and dip and wash in a solution of warm water and Castile soap. Then rinse and hang in the wind to dry. Remove the strips from the muslin and brush them carefully with the fingers to soften the leather.

Linoleum should never be scrubbed, but may be washed with soap and water and then dried with a cloth. It is a good plan to polish it with equal parts of oil and vinegar applied with a flannel. This should be rubbed off carefully with a cloth so that not the least stickiness remains.

A good plate cleaning mixture, which is also excellent for polishing brass, is made as follows: Take a cup and half fill it with whiting, then fill to the brim with cold water. Pour this into a bowl and add to it one ounce of ammonia. Shake well before using. Wet a flannel cloth with this and rub it on the metal afterwards polishing it with a soft cloth or leather.

To use up the candle ends.—Candle ends should always be saved, and when a little collection has been made they should be melted, and as much turpentine should be added as there is candle grease. Let this cool and then use for polishing boots, oilcloth, etc. It will be found to make an even better polish than beeswax and turpentine.

When a new sewing machine is heavy to work, rub out the cotton and thoroughly oil every part of the machine with paraffin. Work it briskly for a few minutes that the oil may penetrate thoroughly, then wipe all dirt and grit, and then wipe every part of the machine carefully with a soft old duster. When the paraffin has been removed, oil the machine with the proper lubricating oil. Paraffin should never be allowed to remain on the machine, for it heats the bearings and causes them to wear out.—Home Notes.

To Break a Child of Biting the Nails.

This is often a difficult matter, but I have known of one little girl on whom usual remedies of painting the fingers with bitter aloes, dipping them in mustard and even corporal punishment, were all tried in vain, and was finally cured by an appeal to her vanity.

It was pointed out to her how ugly biting the nails made them look, and how it hindered and spoiled the shape of the tips of the fingers. Then the mother showed the half-moons in her own finger nails and told her little girl that she had the same, but that they were hidden up by the overgrowth of skin.

Of course, the little girl wanted to find them, and then came the mother's opportunity. She told the child to fetch her own manicure box, and then and there she trimmed the little nails and polished them with some pink powder. The child was interested, and when her mother promised to do it again whenever she saw if she would use it she was glad to promise to do so.

The result was that the little girl began to take an interest in keeping her hands nice, and, as her mother encouraged her, the interest was kept up, and the habit of nail biting was soon forgotten. The appeal to her vanity —or, rather should I not say, to her self-respect—answered when every other remedy was found unavailing.—Home News.

Tissue paper got its name from the fact that when it was first made it was used to lay between gold or silver tissue cloth to keep the fine cloth from turning black.

FARMERS' COLLEGES

SCIENTIFIC METHODS TAUGHT THE AMBITIOUS AGRICULTURISTS.

Uncle Sam Is Backing Science and Nearly Every State In the Union Has Some Schools Devoted More or Less to the Farmers' Interest.

It used to be the rule that when a man wasn't fit for anything else he was considered good enough to be a farmer, that if he hadn't brains enough to master military tactics or the intricacies of the law or of medicine or of theology, and was utterly lacking in creative ability, then his proper sphere of usefulness was the farm. And in those days even the "gentleman" farmer was a man of inferior standing, and he was made to feel his insignificance whenever he came in contact with the superior persons who ruled the state and made or expounded its laws. Society spoke of him as a "gawk," and his sons and daughters were "country bumpkins." But all this has changed, and is destined to still further change. Science, which has done so much for the world at large, has taken the farmer in hand and is investing the man and his work with the dignity and standing that are his of right. The masses are being made to realize what they have known dimly all along but never fully appreciated—that it is the farmer who feeds them, and that he is more necessary to them than they are to him; that without him works green and small would come to a stop and the people of all the earth be reduced to a state of savagery and cannibalism.

Science is bringing not only the public to the realization of the importance of the farmer, but the farmer himself to an appreciation of the importance of his work and of the necessity of fitting himself for it by studying nature and inducing her by scientific means rather than by haphazard to yield her store. Formerly the farmer would tell you "when" without knowing "why." Experiment showed him that rotation in crops made his land produce better and last longer, but he couldn't tell nature's reason for it, nor explain the thousand other seeming mysteries of the soil. Science has done and is doing that for him. It is experimenting for him day in and day out the year around, and teaching him the why and the wherefore. Uncle Sam is backing science in this matter, and the farmer is getting the benefit without cost. The farmer learns from the bulletins that are sent out by the Department of Agriculture and all over the land the farmer's sons and daughters are taking courses in agriculture and horticulture, farm gardening and dairying, and stock breeding and stock raising in colleges supported jointly by the State and Federal governments.

Their instruction is practical, too; for the colleges have farms under cultivation and herds and droves of cattle and swine and dairies and truck farms and orchards. The instructors are men who are entitled to write "Bachelors of Science" after their names. They know all about the soils and the seasons, and what crops are adaptable and what are not, and their science goes so far as to include conditions in foreign countries and to be able to judge from them whether corn, or wheat, or barley, or whatever product of the farm will be most in demand for export and so command the readiest market and the best price. They have reduced farming to a science, and are teaching it as a science. The course in agriculture includes history and government, French and German, English and the higher mathematics and music, so that our farmers of the next generation will not only know how to get the best and the most out of the ground, but will be able to hold their own for general information and other accomplishments with the elect of any land.

Colleges of agriculture are maintained in universities, with the aid of national funds, in Arizona, Arkansas, California, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Louisiana, Maine, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming. In Massachusetts Harvard University has a school of agriculture and the Lawrence Institution. Beside these, agricultural and mechanical colleges have been organized in Alabama, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, Virginia and Washington. Separate institutions of this sort are maintained for colored students in Alabama, Delaware, Florida, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Virginia. Massachusetts has the only college whose curriculum is wholly devoted to agriculture.

STEVENS MEETS A RAJAH.

His Experience in a Stucco Royal Palace.

At the door of the stucco palace a dishevelled sentry presented arms with even more than the usual fervor. Then I understood—and perceived coming slowly, slowly, and quite noiselessly toward me down a corridor a small human figure. It wore a white turban, a tabard of lilac silk lined with salmon satin, a long muslin scarf about the neck, snow-white linen drawers, tight, yet shapeless, and white cotton socks. It came on, I was quite noiselessly, appearing to be moved rather than to move; I saw a brown face, melting black eyes, a long-haired, fine-haired, oiled, black head.

The figure took my hand in a hand that seemed made of soufflet, and with the same mysterious, unmoving motion led me across a high-roofed hall, with chandeliers like forest-trees and the paint peeling off the skirting-board, into a verandah that overlooked a reeling chasm of torrent bed and a lowering heave of mountain beyond. He sat me in a chair beside him, the interpreter opposite, then turned and fixed his eyes on me. If the movements were inhuman the eyes were unearthly. Eyes weary beyond satiety—eyes utterly passionless and purposeless, as if their owner neither desired anything nor intended anything, had neither ever had interest in the world or had quite finished with it. Looking into those black pools of sheer emptiness, you wondered whether he were a newborn baby or a million years old; you almost wondered if he were alive or dead.

That was the Rajah. And then, in a voice that seemed to fall among from nowhere, he told the fat-cheeked, gold-spectacled babu to tell me he trusted I was in the enjoyment of good health!

Awhile the conversation floated at this level, and I began to think that this Nirvana-eyed Rajah was—if one may so speak of princes—a fool. But presently the babu's circumambient periods began to call themselves round a definite subject, and the Rajah was instructing me on the political question of the hour. It does not matter to you what the question was; it did not matter to me. It is enough to say its comparing what the Rajah suggested with what I knew to be true. In black and white he said nothing, but he hinted words. The suggestions were so subtly nebulous that you could hardly be sure they meant anything at all; the subject seemed to be in the air rather than in his conversation. I found it quite impossible to speak a language so evasive, and had to fly to brutal plain speech. He accepted my remarks, though with deprecation of their bluntness; so that at least I had the satisfaction of knowing we were both talking about the same thing.

But the astonishing and inhuman feature of his talk was that he continually conveyed to me views of the questions of the hour which I knew to be false, which he knew me to know to be false. At least, he knew that I came with the Resident, and might have known that I would ask him about things and believe what he said. Yet, without the least encouragement, he insinuated and insinuated and insinuated away, till I felt almost a traitor to sit and listen to him. He could not have thought I should take his side, or that I could be of any service to him if I did; but that appeared no matter nothing. Intrigue was his nature, and in default of a better confederate he kept his hand in by trying to intrigue with me.

And then suddenly, without a flicker in the eyes of either Rajah or interpreter—

"His Highness hopes that on your return to your country you will write to him from time to time, and give him your advice on affairs of State."

I gasped. "His Highness has heard much of your good name and high reputation," pursued the bland, relentless voice—he had first heard and forgotten, my name three hours before—"and he is sure that your opinion on the government of his country would be very valuable to him."

And while I still gasped, His Highness mellowly rose, handed me out of the chair with the British touch, and quietly said, in English, "Do not forget me."—London Mail.

The British Cook and Rice Pudding.

The British cook, writes W. L. Alden in Pearson's, when he wishes to make rice pudding will take some flour, a few eggs and as much milk as she can spare from the mistress's tea, and all the rice that is left in the rice jar. She mixes these ingredients, and after putting the composition in the oven wonders what it will turn out to be. Sometimes the result is a rice cake. At another time it is a suet pudding, and at another a beefsteak pie. Statistics prove that it becomes a rice pudding only once in four hundred and seventeen times.

There is all the charm of a lottery, or of gold seeking, in British cookery. It is purely a matter of chance that it is probable that rigid application of the gambling laws would land every British cook in jail. The cook strains her flour and butter and eggs, in the hope that they will emerge from the oven in some sort of a pudding. It says so, her employer regards her as an admirable cook. If she loses, and the oven returns to her a dish which is absolutely unsalable, her employer wonders why she can never learn to cook. So long as the British cook prefers chance to science, and trusts to luck rather than to "some" of various ingredients instead of taking a definite and unalterable number of grams of each, so long will British cookery remain among the mysteries of life.

She Came Back.

A sturdy old Boer farmer living in the Orange Free States had a shrewd wife, but had long pondered his wife anything but a couch of roses.

One day not long ago she, in a fit of pique packed up her goods and left him, vowing to come back. The news went around among the neighbors, and at night several of them came to condole with him. He sat on his front post puffing away at his pipe.

"Hans," remarked one of his neighbors, "I pity you."

"My poy," replied the honest Dutchman, as he pachedly knocked the ashes out of his pipe, "you vos right, she iss almost come back."—Spare Moments.

WOMAN LEGISLATOR.

INCIDENTS IN THE CAREER OF "MRS. SPEAKER" LEE OF COLORADO.

Her Amiable Qualities and Great Popularity With Her School Companions—Bright and Witty Sayings That Made Her the Life of Her Class—An Exemplary Mother.

Since "the Woman Legislator" of Colorado has occupied so admirably the centre of the stage, winning applause from an audience that included spectators in every State, she has become intensely interesting to her schoolmates—who were, and all remain, her friends.

Fannie Brandt Lee was in those school days Fannie Brandt. Her rise to such an eminence in politics has surprised us; not because there was any idea among us that she was not capable of great things, but because we did not imagine that her abilities would lead her in that direction. In her school days she gave no promise of budding into "Mrs. Speaker" simply because she did not then discuss political issues. She was always an excellent parliamentarian.

She was always very bright and was the wit of her class; and her wit was pleasant. Her girlhood ambitions were for intellectual and educational equipment that would enable her to attain prominence, and to support herself after leaving school. The last, indeed, was necessary, for her father's family was large and he was not in affluent circumstances.

She graduated June 13th in the class of '84; the first class to graduate from the West Denver High School. There were only six members. The class "Chronicles and Prophecies," by Francis S. Brandt, were very witty, written in classical language and diction, and especially interesting to those mentioned; but the prophecies failed to foretell her own political honors and successes.

MRS. LEE AS SHE APPEARED WHEN SHE WAS GRADUATED.

About two years before she left school the "Brandt twins" arrived to the sisters in her. From that day on, no matter what happened that was unaccountable, or what went wrong at school or at home—if she was late, failed in her lessons or forgot anything—she always gave "The Twins" as the cause, and they became a byword. Her schoolmates, following her example, the mischiefs, mishaps and burdens of the whole school were laid on the four little shoulders of the "Brandt twins."

Everybody liked her and enjoyed her sunny nature and disposition. Her family depended upon her advice for almost everything; and she was counselor for all her schoolmates. A wise one, too. Her husband says now that the family continues to come to her for advice before making a purchase of anything, whether a dress or a house and lot.

She was quick and witty in repartee, but never malicious or caustic.

A party of girls took lunch one day at a restaurant where the style was "help yourself," the fare poor, and the prices high. "All that you get for your money here is niggers and napkins," one of the party quoted. "I don't like watered milk," she added. When they stopped at the cashier's desk to pay for this lunch the obsequious functionary inquired if they were well served, and Fannie answered:

"The oranges were too dry and the milk too wet."

As they reached the sidewalk a boy darted around the corner and right among them, giving a terrific boyish yell that startled every one of them. One of the girls said to him:

"You little beast! What do you scream like that for? Frightening folks out of their wits?"

"Let the blame alone, I'm this a holler day for him as well as it is for us?" said Fannie.

When discussing arrangements for a complimentary party there was a divergence of opinion as to which room should be devoted to refreshment purposes, and Fannie was asked:

"Which do you think the best room for supper?"

"Mushroom!" she answered.

She was married to Frank Lee in January, 1885, early one freezing morning; and as it was a very impromptu affair they walked from the church to his home. Through some unforeseen circumstance no one was yet out of bed there; so the bridal couple had to go in and light the fires and cook their own wedding breakfast. Seemingly she did well, too, as she did everything, well.

"I invented a cake yesterday and baked it last night; now I have to invent a name for it or it will be wasted," she once remarked in the chemistry class.

The Lees now have a nice home of their own and six children, to whom she is an exemplary mother. They do not suffer because she is in politics. Her natural ability and aptitude, combined with her husband's ambitions aspirations and experience, have conspired to place her in her present position. Undoubtedly it was her marriage that led to development of her abilities as a parliamentarian and a political leader. Mr. Lee was always an ardent political agitator and her natural force, abilities and aptitude combined to elevate her to that active prominence that made her the conspicuous fly available, one for the Speaker's chair to which she was called in the Colorado House of Representatives.

the pronounced flare of the skirt shown above. The style is eminently of the French.

Styles For the Fall.

According to the latest advices from abroad the principal and almost fashionable color for fall wear will be light and will include many pastel shades. Despite a great many arguments to the contrary we still wear what Europe says we must, and take our cue to colors according to the standard set up by European fashion leaders, regardless of the fact that a great many of these colors are altogether unsuitable for the American climate or the average condition of things. The Parisian, London or Viennese woman of fashion who has always a carriage at her disposal can dress in as light a color as she prefers on her shopping expeditions, which she never undertaken in the same manner that we do ours. But the average American woman uses the cars and the streets on her shopping tours and could not possibly go in for light colors without soiling her gown hopelessly the very first time she wore it.

There are several new shades of gray, and among these there is a pearl gray that is particularly desirable, because it is neither too delicate nor the one we have known not is it too deep to be classified among the pearl tints. There is also an ash gray which, in my opinion, will be very popular, because it is not so light as to soil easily nor too dark to show the dust. It is really the color of the ashes of white ash coal. Then there is another shade which is almost a beige, a second which verges on the castor and three shades of bluish gray.

There are three new shades of violet and of these violettes de champes is the most delicate being an intermediate tint not too light and not too trying. In order to suit all tastes there are two brilliant tints known as Solferino and Cardinal, which would be used to advantage as trimmings.

The pastel colors show about fifteen new shades, and of these a delicate lilac is a Marian favorite. Then there are two pretty bluish-gray tints and a handsome pink which has been named Nigeon after the manufacturer. A color of positive beauty is a very light, delicate robin's-egg blue which would make up handsomely for street gowns.

The tan shades are of course always popular and fashionable as well as conservative. We never seem to tire of them, and no doubt the many new shades each season offers we always go in for all of them. The popular French blue runs to tans this fall under the name of Hussard blue, and besides there are two beautiful new shades on the same color line known as St. Sebastian and Carnegie. A very brilliant color that is almost a violet is called Victoria, but beware of it, it will not do at all for general wear, and can be adopted only for the most favored women who have unlimited means to spend on dress.

There is also a new shade of blue and Phedre, a purple shade, is also very handsome.

Several reddish-brown shades and also automobile red are all holding their places abroad and can be had in six new shades, of which the two lightest are the most desirable.

Those who are looking for violet has not abated, and it seems that our women have gone violet mad. Violets are more stylish than the rose and violet perfume is the reigning fad.

It is said that the fall season of 1899 will be one of the best plaid seasons that we have had for several years. There seems to be a demand on the part of our women in general for extremes in materials. They want a taller-made suit which is simplicity itself and then they want something striking by way of change, and of course nothing can be shown but the plaid skirt, and the larger the plaid the better they like it.

Homespun and all mixed suitings will be worn a great deal, and black as well as a deep rich blue come first in the list of favorite colors for general wear.—Toilettes.

Her Gown as Man Sees It.

"Dorothy, I saw a beautiful gown in one of the shop windows to-day."

to the throne has reached this country. It is a souvenir effigy turned in rare wood. The wood was brought from India at enormous cost, and its exquisite shades and markings are all worthy the attention of a queen. The design is very clever and the workmanship extraordinary delicate.

A plain bevelled piece of wood is the foundation for the wooden portrait. To this background is fastened a piece of carving of a semi-cylindrical shape, bearing a series of ridges which at first sight seem fantastically devised. It will be seen, however, that the outer line of wood, when held in any position, is the counterpart of the young Queen's profile. The likeness to Her Majesty is so cleverly suggested that Wilhelmina herself is said to have been highly pleased with the fanciful tribute.

A compliment which the inventor intended to convey had reference to the symmetry of Her Majesty's face and the beautiful simple and harmonious lines of her profile. Though Wilhelmina has never been considered a beauty she promises to develop into one. The strength of character which gives the Dutch people such confidence in her as their ruler is shown in her firm chin and well-balanced head. Her eyes are blue and honest, and her skin is perfect that she has no carry out any promise she makes to them.

Dublin Bootblacks, 1780.

Among the populace of Dublin in 1780, says The University Magazine, the shoeblacks were a numerous and formidable body. The polish they used was lamplblack and eggs, for which they purchased all that were rotten in the neighborhood. Their implements consisted of a three-legged stool a basket containing a blunt knife, called a spud, a few rags and an old wig. A gentleman usually went out in the morning with dirty boots or shoes, sure to find a shoeblack sitting on his stool at the corner of the street. The gentleman put his foot in the lap of the shoeblack without ceremony, and the artist scraped it with his spud, wiped it with his wig, and then laid on his composition as thick as black paint with his painter's brush.

The stuff dried to a rich polish, requiring no friction, and little inferior to the elaborated modern fluids, save only that the blacking was drained from eggs in a high state of putridity, and which filled any house which was entered before the composition was quite dry. The shoeblacks were a privileged air of fashionable drawing rooms. Polished shoes, we should mention, was at this time a fashionable almost confined to cities, people in the country being generally satisfied with grease.

Light From the Wind.

An odd-looking plant is has just been installed in West Ardsley, England, which is to be run by wind power. A large windmill drives the dynamo, and there are storage cells which will contain eight days' supply of electricity in winter and more than a fortnight in summer, in case the wind does not blow. As a good windmill can be bought for $200 or less, this system seems a feasible one for small, isolated country places.

THE USEFUL SHIRT WAIST.

Diversified Forms of the Ever Popular Garment and Its Adornment.

Is it possible to ever grow prosy over the shirt waist? is a question that any reader of fashion notes would stoutly deny, at least so long as there is anything new to tell of these useful garments. Many of them are being made in form of sailor blouses. The wide, square collar falling over the shoulder may be of white embroidery on an otherwise sober, solid blue or red gingham shirt, else the body and collar may be of gingham and the sailor vest in front will be a V of fine needlework. The sailor type of waist does not preclude the wearing of a stiff linen collar and one of the new shoestring ties, literally no wider than a silk lacer, drawn in a long, narrow bow in front, and the ends fast to the collar by very small pearl-headed pins such as the men affect. Now, it is an indisputable fact that some sensible women are going to wear these ties at all with their summer shirt waists, provided the shirt's collar is a high band with a deep rolling outer flap. Some of the new shirt waists with the rolling collars have buttonholes worked, and through these slip a gold or silver linked affair, or a stiff gold bow of the same, and there are the cuff buttons, the head ornamented with deep sunk cabochen jewels. A neater, prettier finish for a collar would be hard to imagine, and this will appeal to women who have no knack for putting a perfect bow in a refractory necktie. Sometimes two handsome pearls ornament the ends of this new collar stud, but the stud is oftenest worn as an exact match for the cuff buttons. Women are going to take kindly to the taffeta ties called the Lady Algy, that have been recently introduced as a companion to the new shirt waist. It takes just seven-eighths of a yard of silk to make a tie, or you can purchase this detail ready made in the shops. Strict adherence to the rule of fashion demands that ties be made not of ribbon, but of piece taffeta, and all edges narrowly hemmed by machine. A Lady Algy consists of a buckram stock covered smoothly with silk and having ever widening sashlike ends drawn forward from the back of the neck joined to an ample knot under the chin and letting fall to the waist the two ends cut in dart points. In the matter of neck finishing the mood now seems to set away from anything like imitation of the mannish made, such as we have known and followed slavishly for the past two seasons.

A New Spring Jacket.

In jackets there is much to choose from this spring. Never were there wraps more ornamental nor more varied. The illustration shows a spring coat such, as we may expect to see many of, and such as must inevitably pall upon us after the novelty of the first few specimens have passed. While they are fresh, they are pretty enough, but let any woman beware of expecting them to be useful beyond the first length of time. It is a case of making the most of them while they last. Lawn cloth, cut out and appliqued upon white taffeta in ornamented with embossed and embroidered flowers, is used for this modish little jacket. The spade front appears, and the basque at the sides and back is so short as to barely reach below the waist line—a distinguishing characteristic of all the spring coats. Without doubt, brevity in jackets has come to stay. The wearers of this coat are small and sharply pointed. Like the jacket, basque and sleeves, they are covered with applique and embroidery. This coat is lined with blue and white silk. With it is worn a toque in bright blue straw crushed into an anomalous shape and heavy with white roses and foliage.

An Idea for a Silk Gown.

If you possess a fine, large, beautiful old embroidered Chinese crepe shawl with a rich silk fringe, a heritage from anancestress, who wore the shawl tenderly and well, it will be turned to good account if you have a gown of a delicate shade of old ivory and is fragrant with the spicy sachets amid which it has lain for years, bring it forth and turn it into a gown. Let the silk gown with an overskirt made of such a shawl is the most modish and sumptuous dinner toilet possible at present. The design of the shawl is the richest treasure you possess in your shawl, just go to a dressmaker and price a costume with such a drapery. She will tell you from $200 to $300 for the toilet, the price dependent upon the size and ripe beauty of the shawl drapery. About a skirt of pale cloth or silk the shawl is invariably hung in a series of points, and the fringe and beautiful embroidery suffice for decoration. The most perfectly gowned brides of the present season are those who stand at the altar in dresses made from their mother's or grandmother's shawls, and the bodices are skillfully worked up from small fringed shoulder shawls.

Fawn and dull colored laces generally are one of the desirable dress trimmings. Fawn colored lace on a silk waist worn with a fawn cloth suit is the smart thing.

GIRL SEED PACKERS

MARVELOUS RAPIDITY THEY DISPLAY IN PUTTING UP SEEDS.

Hundreds of Them Employed in the Wholesale Seed Houses of the Large Cities—Somewhat Different Stamp From Ordinary Factory Girls.

Unless it be a lightning-speed stenographer or a bicyclist pedalling for a wager, no human beings in New York work faster than the girls putting up seed packets in the wholesale flower houses.

"How many of those can you fill a day?" was asked of a girl manipulating ounce and quarter-ounces and nasturtium packages of seed in a downtown store.

"Forty-eight a minute," came the prompt answer, with never a pause in the dipping and scooping and pouring in, and before the visitor could even take in the idea of how many this might mean in an hour, the little flowered paper squares, all sealed and ready for shipment, had mounted up in sufficient quantities to make a newly emptied basket necessary to hold them.

"I have been filling seed packets here for six years," said the expert girl, with not a momentary lull made conversation possible. "Oh, of course, when I first came I couldn't begin to do what I can now. My fingers couldn't move fast enough, and these little measures seemed too small to take hold of readily, but with a little practice I got on to them, and after a time, in a season or two, I could turn round sharp and be of use. By three of us working together, one opening the bag, one filling, and one sealing, we can turn out a quantity.

The firm takes on new girls to help, but experience and practice are needed in the seed business, and in working with high-grade seeds or with the finest of papers a filler has to be exact and trustworthy or she would do damage.

"What are the most expensive seeds we work with?" repeated the busy, newly-grafted kind, and calceolaria.

"The finest petunia seed is worth $25 an ounce," the seed measurers went on, "and a packet of it would furnish ever so many plants, as we put up very small quantities, and the seed is so fine that a little goes a long way, so it must be worked with very carefully to avoid waste. Certain extra grades of calceolaria and petunias seed come as high as $120 an ounce. I know that $400 a pound for petunias sounds like a fairy tale but the greatest pains have been taken to rear those plants. Of course, nobody ever buys a whole pound, so the proportionate value is great. In vegetable seeds the most expensive we have to do with consider is the cauliflower. That is worth $40 a pound and is put up in very small measurements, but the cost of the vegetable seed however, is the easy to work with."

There are hundreds of girls in the wholesale seed houses. Most of them are taken in November and work steadily until February, but in the spring season, along about May, intermediate girls are put on by the dozen, who, like the 48-package-a-minute expert, have learned the business and are not out of work long. Skilled people are kept on the payroll all the year and regarded as valuable adjuncts to the business. A leading seed house has from 200 to 300 girls in the spring (rush season), and keeps two dozen or so employed regularly. The girl department is worked on a wage earner from compulsion, because there is no help for it, as is the case with the factory girl. the girl seamstress, or the department store or shop girls. The seed business is too irregular to be considered as a legitimate trade for girls looking for living wages, and so the seed girls are drawn from those having homes and parents to support them, but who work for pin money, and because the business is light, clean and pleasant, and the pay in fair proportion to the work. Most of the girls live out of town in little suburban homes, near Jersey City and Brooklyn, and a man who engages batch after batch of them from the Irish colleens seems to succeed best and stick to the business longest. Working among the seeds and becoming familiar with the nature and needs of plants and flowers generally leads the workers to experiment on their own account with growing flowers in their homes, and this makes them additionally valuable to the business.

"Some of our girls have remarkable memories and can carry more seed knowledge in their heads for use, offhand, than any man in the trade," said the manager, proudly, when he was been extolling his woman head worker. "They can recall how many inches across a flower is when grown from a packet of seeds, and tell about when the shadings and markings of the blossoms, and whether this one is streaked or that one is mottled or mottled: what seeds give the best results, whether this variety or the other was best liked by customers, and so on. Such a girl as that a man would use a notebook to keep track of. No woman is really at the head of or in the most responsible position in any seed house as big as $120 an ounce. The florists and farmers seem to like best to treat men regarding their business and there is a feeling in the trade that men are more thorough and well grounded in the florist's knowledge and are the natural leaders, but there are women who are thorough and doing good work everywhere in this line and several that I know of would be sauly missed if they should give up.

Just Praise.

Although every Plainfielder who has ever taken the trouble to investigate the status of the Plainfield public schools knows that they stand very high in comparison with the other educational institutions of this and other states, it is gratifying at times to hear a word of praise for them come unsolicited from some prominent educational authority. Shortly before the close of the Plainfield schools for the summer vacation, A. E. Winship, editor of the Journal of Education, Boston, visited them and addressed the teachers. As a result of his visit here he writes as follows in the columns of the Journal of Education:

Plainfield has the honor, probably, of being the first to establish genuinely free common schools and promoting their general adoption by the State. She has been highly favored by having many public-spirited citizens interested in education who were eminent men. Bishop J. H. Vincent and Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, of Chautauqua fame, are samples merely of men who have been greatly interested in the schools of Plainfield.

At present the schools are in the forefront in every respect. Supt. Henry M. Maxson is one of the most faithful and efficient school men in the country, and he has rallied about him an able and capable corps of teachers, and is inspired by a high-minded Board of Education in whom the public has confidence.

I was fortunate in seeing much of the everyday work of the Plainfield schools, and it was uniformly of a high order. Principals and teachers are doing it in very way. They have high professional standards, and are constantly improving themselves for the good of their schools. There is an educational atmosphere in Plainfield that does one's soul good. I brought away with me samples of language work in all grades that I have never seen excelled, and hope later to present some choice bits to my readers.

A Joint Sewer.

Anything relating to successful sewage disposal is of much interest to Plainfield as it is only a question of time before this city will be compelled to deal with that important question. It is a known fact that the sewer beds, now located on Rock avenue, are not a success as now conducted. There must be either a change in the method of disposal or in the policy now in vogue at the beds. A joint sewer to tidewater from Plainfield, North Plainfield, Westfield and other adjoining towns has been suggested as a solution of the disposal problem.

Newark, Vailsburg, Irvington, West Orange, South Orange, Summit and Milburn are discussing a like project which seems quite likely to be adopted. Its progress will be watched with particular interest by the people of Plainfield. It is proposed to have this joint sewer empty into the Staten Island Sound at Bayway, Elizabeth. Of course, permission will have to be obtained from the city of Elizabeth and it is a question whether that municipality will ever grant the necessary right. The sewer is expected to cost at least $300,000.

The Unheard Merchant.

Experience have shown that if a bell be rung in an absolute vacuum it will make no sound. The air, therefore, is the vehicle by which the noise of the vibrations is carried to the ear. A merchant who does not advertise is much like a bell in a vacuum; nobody can learn much about him or his business, and he therefore receives scant patronage. He requires a medium by which to attract the notice of the public, and the one great agency for the successful attainment of that purpose is judicious, interesting advertising in a newspaper which enters the home of all the people.—Philadelphia Record.

An Ideal Spot.

The recent tornado that swept the neighboring city of Elizabeth brings to mind the fact that topographical formations most favorably protect Plainfield from these disastrous visitations. Our mountain range on the north and west, the short hills in the east, place our fair city of the plain in a delightfully sheltered position; we are never affected by winds or storms of great force. The mountain range in the south also protect us from fierce winter blasts—the short hills on the east protect us from the saline effects of ocean. All this conspires to make Plainfield an ideal spot for homes.

With so many of Jersey's leading statesmen learning to play golf, it will soon be necessary to establish a State course at the State House.

DOES COFFEE AGREE WITH YOU?

If not, drink Grain-O—made from pure grains. A lady writes: "The first time I made Grain-O I did not like it but after using it for one week nothing would induce me to go back to coffee." It nourishes and feeds the system. The children can drink it freely with great benefit. It is the strengthening substance of pure grains. Get a package today from your grocer, follow the directions in making it and you will have a delicious and healthful table beverage for old and young. 15 and 25c.

Dangerous Steps.

In view of the recent order of Judge Fitzgerald adjudging the councilmen of New York in contempt and imposing a fine of $100 and imprisonment, for refusing to vote for a certain bond issue, which His Honor thinks they should, prompts the average layman to ask of what use are juries and common councilmen if they are to be automitons and subject to the dictation of judges. Councilmen derive their power from a source and spring quite as high and pure as do the judges, since both get authority from the people. The layman cannot repress the thought that such steps on the part of judges are fraught with grave danger and may be the cause of much mischief.

To the average mind Judge Fitzgerald is exercising not only judicial functions but legislative also. It would generally seem that it was safer to trust the judgment and wisdom of a body of councilmen (in this case some fourteen) than the judgment of one, no matter how learned he may be. The argument that the councilmen are only acting in a ministerial capacity is ridiculous—that the legislature should pass a law making the body of councilmen of the great city of New York mere automatons and tools is too absurd to be even entertained.

Orange's Water Supply.

There have been many comparisons of the relative advantages offered by Plainfield and the other suburban towns to prospective residents. One of Plainfield's strong advantages is the pure and apparently inexhaustable water supply. There are few, indeed, of the other suburban places that can boast of one anywhere near the equal of ours. Orange, just at present, is suffering in that direction. The water has gotten low in the Orange reservoir and there is now a strong and rather unpleasant odor to it as it flows from the faucets in the Orange homes. The water company declares that it is chlorine gas and not dangerous, but some of the citizens are emphatic in their statement that the eels in the reservoir have been driven by the low water to seek better quarters in the system of pipes that furnishes the city with its water supply. Plainfield is fortunate in not having to receive its supply of water and fishes by the same pipes.

The Most Effective Agency.

A well known writer, referring to the illimitable progress of mankind, says: "Progress is the end for which man was destined. To this end, then, it is his duty to direct all his inquires, all the productions of his genius and taste—in short, all the modes of his activity." To no class of people are these truths more applicable than to business men. Progress is necessarily their watchword, and in order to go forward they must utilize all the available and proper means at their command. There are many agencies which make for the merchant's success, but experience has shown that a regular use of the advertising columns of a sound and popular newspaper is the most effective of them all. —Philadelphia Record.

More Promises.

When McKinley was elected on the Republican ticket three years ago, it was with the distinct promise that legislation on the currency question would be taken at once. So far nothing has been done. Now the monetary convention at Atlantic City promises action by Congress this year. H. H. Hanna, chairman of the executive committee of that convention, declares that a law will be passed this winter establishing a gold standard, with such supplementary legislation as is necessary to maintain a parity of all forms of money.

Trolley Accidents.

The serious trolley accident which is told in yesterday's dispatches, demonstrate the necessity of better construction and better surveillance of these trainways. Trolley companies only seek a franchise and occupancy of public streets, with but little regard for public interests or personal safety of patrons. Trolley roads should be subject to inspection by a competent engineer, and companies held to a strict accountability.

Westfield is one of the very few Jersey towns that can show a reduction in their tax rate. This year Westfield's tax rate has been reduced two points despite the fact that the county and school tax are larger this year than heretofore. According to all reports, Westfield isn't suffering for the lack of anything, either.

LASTED TEN MINUTES.

MONTHLY MEETING OF BOARD OF EDUCATION DIDN'T LAST LONG.

Paid Bills, Heard Report of The Collector and the Building Committee—Repairs at Whittier School to be Finished Soon.

The Board of Education held one of the shortest sessions in the history of the School Board last Monday. President Probasco and Messrs. Lounsbury and Abbott were the only members present. In the absence of Mr. A. Clark, the clerk, Mr. Lounsbury acted in that capacity. The session lasted just ten minutes. During that time the Board audited and ordered paid bills to the amount of about $600. The report of the tax collector for July showed that school taxes to the amount of $826.37 had been collected and credited to the school funds.

Before the Board adjourned, sub ject to the call of the chair, Mr. Lounebury stated that the repairs being made to the Whittier School building were progressing finely. The building is expected to be finished by the 20th of the month.

HORSES DO FAST WORK

Three Match Races at Gentlemen's Driving Park Track Saturday.

A large crowd was attracted to the Gentlemen's Driving Park track Saturday afternoon, when a good programme was offiered. There were three match races, all very interesting. The first race was between horses owned by Harry Gwynett and Mr. Hayes, and the latter won the two heats in excellent time. The second race was between horses owned by N. B. Smalley, J. M. Smalley and Chas. Brower. Mr. Brower won two straight heats in the race. The time was very good, the last race was by horses owned by J. W. Johnson, Thomas Brantingham and C. L. Wright. Mr. Brantingham won the race by taking two heats. The best time was 2:26. After the match races there were several good exhibition races which were greatly enjoyed by the crowd. All the horses on the track are in training for the race meet to be held soon at New Brunswick, and they all showed up in remarkably good form. If predictions come true some of the Plainfield horses should capture some of the money at New Brunswick.

TRINITY CHURCH IMPROVEMENT.

Vacant Space in Front of Church is to Be Paved at Member's Expense.

Ever since the remodeling of Trinity Reformed church it has been the wish and desire of the congregation and people who worship there that the entire large space in front of the church could be paved with bluestone in place of the crushed stone that was spread in three different places, and which was always scattered about by the scuffling of the feet of children and passersby. And now the wish of that people is about to be gratified and the long wished for improvement consummated. A. Kane, the contractor, has agreed to furnish the stone and do the work at a slight advance over cost of material and labor, and a member of the church, who has the interests of the church at heart, has agreed to pay the entire cost. This will be a decided improvement to the church property, as well as a convenience to the public.

WOULDN'T MAKE COMPLAINT.

So Constable Walpole Could Do Nothing But Release His Prisoner.

Shortly after midnight Saturday night, when the crowd was waiting at the Scotch Plains terminus for the last trolley, the screams of a woman were heard. They came from the direction of the Episcopal church. The crowd rushed to see what was the matter. They found a young Plainfield woman who claimed that a young man had assaulted her. The crowd captured the man.

Somebody roused Constable Walpole who hurried to the scene of the trouble. He asked the young woman to make a complaint but she refused, not caring for the publicity. There was nothing for the constable to do but release the man who said he was from Elizabethport.

Thousands Upon Thousands of people in both Europe and America are being restored to health and strength by the use of Speer's Port Wine.

This Wine is a little higher in price but worth five times as much as others for invalids on account of the iron derived from the soil of the expensive vineyards in which the Oporto Grapes wines from Portugal are grown in New Jersey. Speer's Port Wine has been adopted by the most scientific and experienced physicians.

Miss Mildred Tyrrell, of Manning avenue, has been visiting in Somerville.

ROOM IN CARPET MAKING

VANDEVENTER CARPET CO. BUILDING NEW FACTORY AT GREENSBORO.

Plainfield Factory Will Not Be Given up—Will Soon Have to Run Overtime to Supply the Demand—Sixty Employed.

That a wave of prosperity seems to be rolling about is evidenced by the fact that the VanDeventer Carpet Company, of this city, is now building a new factory, much larger than their present one at Greenboro, N. C. The engine department and dyeing establishment are now about completed and work is being pushed rapidly on the main structure. It is likely that the new mill will require nearly one hundred hands to run it. There are advantages in the location of a carpet mill at the above place for the reason that it will be near to the cotton market and they intend to make a higher grade of goods.

The mill in this city is running full time, and will not be given up as reported. In a short while the mill will be run overtime to meet the increasing demands for goods, and, according to those in charge of the mill, business is now on the boom. There are about sixty people employed at the Plainfield mill. .

The new mill at Greensboro will be a two-story building, 50x100 feet, and the product will consist of ingrains and art squares. It is reported that in all parts of the country the carpet business is better, and the mills are in better condition than for many years past.

LIFE LONG RESIDENT GONE.

Death of Miss Margaret Sanford, Aged Sixty Years, at Westfield Saturday.

Westfield, August 7—During the heavy thunder storm Saturday afternoon Miss Margaret Sanford, aged sixty years, died at the home of her brother, Edward C. Sanford, on First street. Miss Sanford was a lifelong resident of this town and had many friends. She has been suffering for several years with what the doctors called leakage of the heart. The funeral services will be held from the residence of her brother Tuesday afternoon at 2:30, the services being conducted by Rev. Dr. Charles M. Anderson, pastor of the Methodist church, of which she was a member.

This is the second death that has occurred in the Sanford home during the past week, Mr. Sanford's mother, Mrs. Thomas Falyn, of Cranford, having died there while on a visit last Sunday. Her funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, just one week before.

MARRIED VETERAN OF LATE WAR.

Miss Ruth Moore and Richard Davis Were Married Saturday Night.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Ruth Moore, daughter of Mrs. Samuel Terry, Sr., of East Third street, to Richard Davis, also of this city. The event took place last Saturday evening at the home of Rev. H. W. McKane, of West Second street, who performed the ceremony in the presence of Mrs. Terry, who gave her daughter away. The groom is a carpenter by trade and is 38 years of age. He enlisted in the war against Spain and served in Cuba, returning home at the close of the conflict. His wife is 18 years of age. The couple will reside at the home of the groom in this city.

The Vacant Chair.

A touching act in memory of the late Lemuel Wright Serrell, was performed Sunday morning at the communion service at the First Baptist church when the vacant chair of the departed senior deacon was decorated with a wreath of choice flowers. Mr. Serrell occupied his customary seat for many years, and his absence Sunday was an occasion for the deepest feelings of sorrow on the part of everyone present.

PREVENTED A WRECK.

Carelessness of Night Operator Benson Rewarded.

Night Operator Benson at the North Avenue station, by his alertness probably prevented a serious accident on the Central Railroad a few mornings ago. It was about 4 o'clock and a freight train had just passed on track No. 4. The cars were loaded with large pipe, one of which slipped from its fastenings and fell across track No. 1. Benson knew that a fast freight was due about that hour. Securing the services of Night Baggageman Henry Hanson the men hastened to the tracks and after considerable effort they succeeded in removing the pipe, which was done with difficulty, as it had become wedged between the rails and was no easy matter to do. The pipe was thrown to one side in the nick of time, as the fast freight shot by the station but a moment later. Mr. Benson immediately notified headquarters and was complimented for his watchfulness.

CAME JUST TOO LATE

George Serrell Arrived on the Transport Buruside Saturday Morning.

George Serrell arrived at his home in this city Saturday morning on the transport Burnside, on which boat he is commissary clerk. He did not receive the cablegram sent to him at Santiago telling him of the death of his father last week. The reason for this was that he had left Santiago before the receipt of the cablegram and no word could be sent to him until he reached this port, Sunday he went to Hillside cemetery and visited the grave of his father. On Wednesday last Mr. Serrell sailed on the Burnside for San Juan, and he does not know how long he will be away.

BANG ALARM BY HAND.

Westfield Fire Alarm System Would't Work Saturday Night For Fire.

Westfield, Aug.7—During the heavy storm which visited this town Saturday afternoon, the handsome residence of H. H. Brown at the corner of Dudley avenue and Clarke street was struck by lightning at the top of the cupalo. The house took fire, but the rain which came down in torrents extinguished the flames, although the fire department responded promptly to the alarm which was sent in. The fire alarm refused to work, and Chief W. H. Chamberlain was compel ed to climb to the top of the fire tower and ring the bell by hand.

George J. Tobin's Daughter Baptized.

An interesting service was witnessed at St. Mary's church Sunday afternoon when the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George J. Tobin, of Grant avenue, was baptized. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Roger McGinley, of Jersey City, who is a personal friend of the family. The given name is Marie E., and Mrs. Joseph H. Tobin, of New York, was the godmother, while Andrew Mac Cardell, of, this city, was the godfather. The young daughter was the recipient of many presents. After the service a dinner was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tobin, at which time there were present a few friends, including Rev. Roger McGinley.

Thrown From His Horse.

A young man named Armstrong, of Brooklyn, while riding a horse on East Sixth street late Saturday afternoon accidentally slipped from the animals back while endeavoring to lead another horse. One of the horses stepped upon Mr. Armstrong's foot, bruising it somewhat but fortunately did not break any bones. Young Mr. Armstrong had previously been horseback riding with a young lady, and was returning to the stable with the horses when the accident happened.

"The Word Of The Lord is Precious,"

Was the subject of a most excellent sermon by Rev. Peter Stryker, D. D., of Asbury Park, in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning. A large congregation was present and the grand old divine gave them one of his best sermons, taking his text from 1st Samuel, last clause of the first verse, third chapter.

Home From Europe.

C. Maynard Evans arrived home this morning from a five weeks' trip to Europe, coming on the S. S. Menominee, of the Atlantic Transport Line from London, leaving there July 27th. Mr. Evans reports a glorious time and a particularly charming trip home.

HOW DARLING LEFT AFTER THE MURDER

Passed By Scene of Shooting on Freight Train.

THEN WENT WEST AWHILE.

IS NOW TREATED WELL AT MIDDLESEX COUNTY JAIL.

Strict Guard Kept Over Him and He is Not Allowed to See Any of the Other Prisoners—Takes Outing in Corridor of Jail Accompanied by Deputies—He Told How He Escaped

New Brunswick, August 7—The life of William Darling, the young Plainfield man accused of the murder of Harry Dunham, and now confined in the Middlesex county jail here, continues without incident. There are still many visitors at the jail, but they are not allowed to see Darling. He is very quiet and orderly and has not given a bit of trouble so far.

The prisoner is well looked after and has part of his meals from the sheriff's table, which are all paid for by the prisoner and his family. When the other prisoners are locked up in the afternoon Darling is allowed to walk up and down the corridor and take a little exercise. He is always accompanied by two of the deputies on these little airings. He is not permitted to mingle with the other prisoners.

Since his imprisonment here Darling has had very little to say. He reads part of the time and spends the rest in reflection.

While he was locked up in the Fulton county jail at McConnellsburg, Pa., he there told where he went the night after the murder. The story was repeated to the officers that went after him and by them related here. After shooting Dunham, Darling says he sprang on his wheel and rode over to New Brunswick. Turning about he came back to Plainfield by the way of Metuchen, and stopped a few moments at his home on Prospect avenue. Then he wheeled over to South Plainfield where he dumped his bicycle into the pond and boarded a westbound freight train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad. The train passed through New Market, and from his place of observation Darling could see the crowd of people about Dentz's saloon, only a short distance from the railroad. They were looking for him then, but had no idea that he was quite as close as that. Darling then went west, and after traveling about for a time, finally made his way into the mountains of southern Pennsylvania, close to the Maryland line, where he thought he could easily cross into the other state should his pursuers ever come close to him. He felt quite secure, however, there.

LOWER TAX RATE FOR WESTFIELD

Rate This Year Will be $2.56, Two Cents Lower Than Last Year.

Westfield, August 7.—The tax rate in Westfield township for this year is $2.56 on a hundred. This is two cents lower thad 1898, although the county tax was increased $20,000, and there was an increase of $1,250 in the township on the special school tax. The valuations this year are the same, but new properties have kept the rates down. The rates were made up as follows: County tax, 58 cents; State school tax, 28 cents; roads, 34 cents; street lights, 18 cents; poor, 5 cents; fire, 5 cents; hydrants, 4 cents; county roads, 4 cents; sewer maintance, 18 cents; special school tax, 82 cents, making a total of $2.56.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

TROLLEY ROAD WANTS ANOTHER FRANCHISE.

Petitioned City Fathers for Arlington Avenue Extension.

PUBLIC HEARING SEPT. 5TH.

HOT DISCUSSION OVER WHO WAS TO BE CUSTODIAN OF CITY MAPS.

Some Wanted H. C. VanEmburgh, Others Wanted Frank J. Hubbard, and They Finally Decided to Make the Street Commissioner Custodian—One Full Paid and Call Man Added to the Fire Department.

It was a long and rather lively regular meeting that the City Fathers held last Monday. All the members were present except Messrs. Liefke and Smith. There was a considerable amount of routine business transacted, and an unexpected discussion arose over the acceptance of the new official city maps which have just been completed, and were presented at the meeting through the proper committee.

Mr. Mellick, chairman of the committee on the collection and assessment of taxes, reported on the maps, and offered a combined set of resolutions which provided that they be accepted, that H. C. VanEmburgh be made custodian of the maps, and that the fees to be received be paid to him by persons desiring location of property, transfer of deeds, etc., and that at some future time an ordinance be introduced embodying all of the above resolutions.

A communication was received from Frank J. Hubbard, the maker of the maps, in which he offered to keep the same for one year and do the work of a custodian free of charge.

There was objection to this on the ground that a city official should have charge of the maps, and this precipitated a discussion, as did also the question as to whether the resolutions had to be adopted as a whole or whether they could be taken up separately. The members became slightly mixed on points of law and at one time it looked as though they would never get matters straightened out. Mr. Hetfield secured a recess of fifteen minutes while he went to his office and examined his law books on the subject. This investigation did not satisfy the other members. Mr. Buckle thought the maps should be accepted; that Mr. Hubbard's offer for one year should be accepted. He was opposed to creating any more offices. Mr. Barrows agreed with Mr. Buckle and thought the city should have as few offices as possible and good salaries should be paid to the office-holders. He did not believe any taxpayer would object to that, but certainly would if the Council created new offices.

Mr. Coriell maintained that the resolutions could be taken up separately and finally won his point. On the question of adopting the map, Messrs. Buckle and Hetfield voted no, but the other members carried the motion. Then appeared the question as to who should be custodian. Some wanted Mr. Hubbard, some wanted Mr. VanEmburgh, while others thought the street commissioner should be the custodian. It was finally voted that the street commissioner should keep the maps and do the work connected with the office. The other resolutions were adopted without opposition.

However, Mr. Coriell thought it was an insult to Mr. Hubbard to reject his offer, and he felt as though the Council had made a mistake, although he *voted with the majority. Other mem*bers thought that Mr. Hubbard would not feel grieved if he did not have the work to do.

The fees for work connected with the office will be fixed by ordinance later when Corporation Counsel Marsh returns, but it appears that when the maps are accepted a custodian has to be appointed, hence the selection of a person last evening.

A petition was received from Phoebe Sprague and Stella Butler, executors of the estate of the late Isaac Stelle, of Piscataway township, objecting to an 1897 tax imposed on property located in this city, claiming that the amount was paid and they have receipts therefore. They asked the Council to cancel the amount and desist advertising the property for sale September 14th next. The matter was referred to the proper committee.

John Goff, former owner of a saloon on Park avenue, petitioned the Council to transfer his license to Charles Shanz, who has purchased the business. This matter was referred to the license committee and was granted. The Plainfield Real Estate Company petitioned for four electric lights on West Sixth street, and N. H. Randolph and others asked for electric lights along the lower part of Park avenue. An invitation was received from the League of American Municipalities inviting the Council to be represented at the third annual convention to be held at Syracuse, N. Y., September 19th to 21st. The same was received and filed.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company petitioned the Council for a franchise to locate and operate a trolley through Arlington avenue. The same was received and according to a resolution offered by Mr. Barrows, Tuesday evening, September 5th, was fixed as the time when the application will be considered and a public hearing be granted.

Residents in the West End asked for a hydrant to be located at the corner of Spooner avenue and Essex street, and the same was granted, as was also a petition for one on Nethermood avenue, near East Front street.

In accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Coriell, asking for another full-paid man and a call man for the fire department, Mayor Rockfellow appointed Edward Vail as a full paid man and A. I. Littell as a call man, and the appointments were confirmed. Mr. Coriell explained his request by saying that at present there are nine full paid men in the department, and it is necessary for efficiency that this number of men be on duty continually, which can not be done by having another regular man, as one man has a day off every week.

Building Inspector Doane reported the granting of eighteen building permits during July. Overseer of Poor Hanson reported that during the past month there were fifteen applicants for aid, six of which were granted. Five deaths were reported, and twenty-one as the total number of beneficiaries.

Street Commissioner Gavett reported that thirteen sewer permits were granted during July. City Physician Carman reported that he had furnished medicine to the city poor during the past month.

Mr. VanHerwerden at this time offered three resolutions. The first one provided for the negotiation of $2,500 on account of the fire fund and $2,000 on account of the general fund, to renew old notes. The next resolution provided that in anticipation of collection of taxes the sum of $3,000 be borrowed for the general fund and $2,000 for the fire fund. The last resolution provided for the transfer of $3,887.93 and $108 62 from the Martin Act fund to the general fund on account of money paid in 1898 and 1899 during the progress of the adoption of the act.

Mr. Barrows offered resolutions that the bids for macadamizing West Third and Fourth streets be rejected, and that Monday evening, Sept 5th, be fixed as the time when other bids will be received. Mr. Barrows also offered a resolution awarding O. M. Meeker the contract for macadamizing Richmond street, and Patsy Christmas the contract for macadamizing East Second street, the work to be done by the Plainfield Street Railway Company.

Mr. Coriell called up the petition asking for fire hydrants in the West End and on his motion he had the matter referred with power, although the committee was not ready to report at that time.

Regarding the proposed visit of the assessors to various cities and towns in the county for the purpose of investigating the basis of assessments made, Chairman Hubbard of the Board of Assessors, reported that owing to illness he had been unable to visit any of the places, and other members of the Board did not feel disposed to do so without him. He understood, however, that other places had assessed on a basis of about 25 per cent. value.

On a motion offered by Mr. Mellick the resolution adopted at the meeting of July 20th, in regard to authorizing the correction of various errors found in matter of assessment for taxes was reconsidered. He then offered a resolution *authorizing the collector to re*turn the various amounts found to be in error.

Mr. Hetfield called up the communication from the New Jersey Naval Reserves in which they asked the Council to take such action which would convey to Governor Voorhees the wish that the Council does not want a portion of the Reserves disbanded. He then moved that his resolution to the effect that such action be taken be adopted.

When the vote was taken Messrs. Buckle, Coriell and Tolles voted in the negative, while Messrs. Barrows, Mellick, VanHerwerden, Homan, Hetfield and Andrews supported the resolution. The reason given by the opposition was that they did not fully understand the matter and they had faith in Governor Voorhees that he would do the right thing. This concluded the business of the evening and the Council adjourned.

Two more recent graduates of Plainfield Business College have obtained good positions—Miss Maggie Myers, in the Graphite Works at Bound Brook, and Miss Elizabeth H. Voorhees, with Lawyer Hugh K. Gaston, of Somerville.

DRINK GRAIN-O

after you have concluded that you ought not to drink coffee. It is not a medicine but doctors order it, because it is healthful, invigorating and appetizing. It is made from pure grains and has the rich seal brown color and tastes like the finest grades of coffee and costs about 1-4 as much. Children like it and thrive on it because it is a genuine food drink containing nothing but nourishment. Ask your grocer for Grain-O, the new food drink. 15 and 25c.

CUSTODIAN OF CITY MAPS.

Was Promised by Committee but Council Wouldn't Agree to It.

Regarding the acceptance of the new city maps recently completed by Frank J. Hubbard, civil engineer, and the appointment of a custodian for the same, a word of explanation should be given. H. C. VanEmburgh and Frank J. Hubbard were bidders for the work of making the maps. Mr. Hubbard a bid was higher than the one offered by Mr VanEmburgh, but he withdrew it and made his bid the same. It was agreed by the committee in charge that Mr. Hubbard should do the work and when completed Mr. VanEmburgh should be the custodian. This is the early history of the map question. Last evening when the matter came before the majority of the Council did not favor adhering to any promises or agreements made by the committee and the street commissioner was appointed custodian, he being a city official, and in the eyes of a majority of the Councilmen, the right person to look after the maps.

Will Not be a Candidate.

The story that the popular boroughite, Hon. Elston M. French, will be a candidate for Senatorial honors before the convention, is without foundation. Mr. French appreciates the honor and is a Democrat, he will only be a candidate in the interests of harmony in his party ranks.

MANY WERE PRESENT TO HONOR DEPARTED.

Impressive Funeral Ceremonies of Lemuel Wright Serrell.

SERVICES HELD FRIDAY.

THEY WERE CONDUCTED BY REV. DRS. YERKES AND LOWRY.

Funeral Was Held From First Baptist Church at 3 o'Clock—Beautiful Flowers and Music—The Clergymen Told of the Christian Character of Mr. Serrell and of His Many Good Acts.

The First Baptist church was filled Friday afternoon with relatives, friends and associates of Lemuel Wright Serrell, who gathered to pay a last tribute to one who had filled an important and successful position in life, but who now has passed to his heavenly home. About the pulpit platform there was a simple but beautiful decoration of flowers, greens, etc., all blending in perfect harmony with the unpretentious life of the departed.

The service was held at 3 o'clock, and as six colored bearers carried the remains into the edifice and up the aisle a funeral march was rendered on the organ by Howard Case, organist of the church. Preceding the funeral cortege there were Rev. Drs. D J. Yerkes and Robert Lowry, while following were the honorary bearers, Edwin L. Bonny, J. B. Probasco, Geo. H. Batchelor, George F. Brown, L. W. Randolph and H. E. Needham, all of whom are deacons of the church except Mr. Needham, and he took the place left vacant by Mr. Serrell. Then came the relatives and friends, who occupied seats reserved for them.

A quartette, consisting of Mrs. H. E. Rider, soprano; Mrs. F. M. Ward, contralto; Morris C. VanArsdale, tenor, and B. T. Barnes, basso, rendered effectively "The Homeland," after which appropriate selections from the Scriptures were read by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. This was followed by a beautiful solo, "God Shall Wipe Away All Tears," by Mrs. Ward. Dr. Yerkes then introduced Dr. Lowry, as one who had known Mr. Serrell when he was a member of his church in Brooklyn many years ago.

Dr. Lowry's remarks were very impressive and to the point. He stated that it was forty years ago when he and Mr. Serrell met and there was never a time when he did not always have the highest regard for him. He said it was strange, but true, that nowadays one seldom finds a man in the church who has common sense, modesty and aggressiveness, and yet Mr. Serrell possessed these traits. In his opinion a man who came short of being a "divinity" in this respect, was not a full man. The speaker told the audience that Mr. Serrell was well known as a citizen and as a church man. He had a missionary spirit that was far-reaching. He belonged to a church in Brooklyn that was the issue of a missionary spirit. It was originally a warehouse on Flatbush avenue, and Mr. Serrell started a mission there. It is now the Sixth Avenue Baptist church, of Brooklyn, and to Mr. Serrell more than anyone else, is due the credit of erecting that church. It stands as a glorious monument to his memory. Dr. Lowry also spoke of Mr. Serrell's efforts at the East Third Street mission. He spoke of his beautiful character, and remarked that he could say something of the departed that he had never been able to say of anyone else at a funeral and that was he could not remember that he had a single fault.

The last word uttered, so far as known, by Mr. Serrell, was "Mother," and the speaker felt sure that he felt a consciousness of her and that he must have seen her as in a vision.

Dr. Yerkes followed Dr. Lowry and spoke of the deep loss occasioned by the death of Mr. Serrell. He felt a personal bereavement. He then likened him to Paul the Apostle, who had fought a good fight, finished the course and kept the faith. Dr. Yerkes remarked that Mr. Serrell was a thorough Christian man, he was always serving the Lord, he could always think of him as a servant of the Lord. He was not a selfish man, but always doing for others, having a profound sense of duty and fidelity, and he did not believe that he ever did anything contrary to his convictions. His life was a complete and rounded one, and his Christ-like spirit made him an exceptional officer in the church. He was a Christian man everywhere, at home and in business, and he leaves an example for all. In conclusion Dr. Yerkes spoke a few words of comfort to the bereaved children and relatives, and told them that they bore a name never to be ashamed of.

After the remarks Dr. Lowry offered an affecting prayer in which he remembered most earnestly the bereaved ones. Before those present were given an opportunity of viewing the remains the quartette sang "Rock of Ages."

Interment took place in the family plot at Hillside.

BRAVED BIG STORM IN OPEN CATBOAT.

Thrilling Experience of Party of Plainfielders.

SAILING IN NEW YORK BAY.

STORM CAME UP BEFORE THEY COULD REACH SHELTER.

Spent the Day on the Water—Anchored Near Bedloes Island When Squall Came —Flag Pole Struck by Lightning—Were Compelled to Jump Out and Swim Ashore—They Reached Island Safely.

Five young men, three of them from this city, gathered in the shelter of a little shed on Bedloes Island, under the shadow of the Statue of Liberty, late Saturday afternoon, and congratulated each other on their miraculous escape and watched their trim little craft drift away to probable destruction. They had been out sailing in New York Bay and were caught in the terrible storm that swept over New York, just escaping with their lives.

The party, which consisted of Edward Maxwell Honeyman, of Grove street, his cousin, Dr. Fred B. Zandt, of Jamesburg, N. J., Henry Baldwin Drake, of Duer street, George A. Horne, of Willow avenue, and his guest, Edward H. Hammond, of Boston, Mass., started out early on Saturday morning in the catboat "Adelaide," from Communipaw. The morning and most of the afternoon was spent very enjoyably in sailing about New York Bay. In the afternoon, they started to go into the lower bay and had reached the Narrows when they saw a great storm approaching. Coming about, they started back without delay. The boat rode the waves well but when they were abreast of Bedloes Island, the squall was upon them. They came to anchor between Bedloes Island and Oyster Island hoping that the islands would break the violence of the storm.

The wind, rain and hail came altogether and the waves rose rapidly until they dashed over the boat. Everything was swept overboard except what the young men wore. The anchor dragged and the yacht approached dangerously near a line of rocks jutting out from the island. Seeing that a wreck seemed inevitable, they all sprang into the water and tried to keep their craft off the reef. Relieved of their weight the boat swept off while the force of the waves compelled them to swim for their lives. They finally reached the shore much exhausted, and took shelter in a little shed there.

Vivid lightning played about the mast before the young men left the yacht, and Horne was slightly shocked by the electricity. They saw the flag staff on the island nearby shivered by a bolt. The lightning struck the great statue repeatedly, but it seemed to glance off.

An old sailor, who witnessed their efforts to reach the shore, told them that it was a miracle that they escaped. When he saw them drifting, he declared he thought that they were surely fated, for the waves were so high that it would have been impossible to rescue them had they capsized.

They remained on Bedloes Island until the storm passed away and visited the lighthouse there. When the rain and wind ceased, some of the Government employes on the island assisted them in getting their yacht off. It had drifted into shoal water near Oyster Island, where the anchor held, and was not much damaged by the storm. It was half-full of water, however. The young men sailed back to Communipaw and took the train for home, reaching here about 8 o'clock.

LIGHTNING HIT HOUSE.

PETER RUSS WAS THROWN FROM HIS CHAIR UNCONSCIOUS.

Was Sitting in the Room Saturday Night When Bolt Came Down the Chimney—All Family Felt the Shock.

Peter Russ, a machinest employed at the Potter Press Works, received a severe shock of lightning last Saturday evening. Mr. Russ was at his home, 540 West Fifth street, at the time the storm came up. He was in the sitting room with his family when there was a sharp flash of lightning. Instantly Mr. Russ was thrown to the floor and was rendered unconscious. The bolt of lightning came down the chimney and passed directly through the sitting room. Mrs. Russ was terribly frightened as were the other members of the family, who also felt the shock. Mr. Russ was not seriously injured and soon was brought back to consciousness. The chimney was damaged a trifle, several bricks being knocked loose.

This is the second time this house has been struck by lightning, the first damage being done about a year ago. Mrs. Russ is so frightened that she declared her intention of procuring other quarters.

WILL SELL PROPERTY TO PAY ASSESSMENTS

Borough Council Acts Regarding Unpaid Assessments.

JOHN SCHENCK RESIGNED.

BOROUGH WILL PAY FOR IMPROVEMENTS ON FRANKLIN AVENUE.

Assessments on Property for Improvement and Widening of Watchung Avenue Must be Paid or Property Will be Sold—Warrant Empowering Collector to Sell Property Issued by Council Friday.

There was a full attendance at the regular August meeting of the Borough Council last Friday and despite the very warm weather the members showed no disposition to conclude the work, but on the contrary wanted to remain and discuss various topics of interest. After transacting a great amount of routine business the members finally decided to adjourn to Friday evening of next week when they will go over the books of the assessor.

Collector George F. Brown presented his monthly report which gives the following summaries: Taxes and interest, $453 29; special school, $69.13; Board of Health, $2.18; Watchung avenue assessment, $1,327.13; rent, property owned by the borough, $87.85; City National Bank rebate on interest, $8 06; bills payable, note, $1,000; total receipts, $3,089.11; cash on hand July 1st, 1899, $6,969.29; disbursements, $7,496 67; cash on hand August 1st, 1899, $1,862.73; borough fund, $799.84 Watchung avenue fund, $1,062.89.

Clerk Rowley presented his report as follows: Licenses, $5; fines, $17; sale of stone and labor, $6.05; macadamizing Orchard place, $115.

Caroline Wise, who purchased a lot on Fairview avenue some time ago, petitioned the Council to deduct an amount assessed against her, as the amount was standing against the property when she purchased it from A. D. Thompson, and she claims that she did not know it until recently. The matter was referred to the proper committee. Marshal J. H. Schenck tendered his resignation, and the same was accepted. Secretary Julius Stahl, of Warren Engine Company, reported that R. M. Clark and Otto Smith had been elected to membership, and the resignation of J. F. Buckle had been accepted. He asked the Council to confirm the action which was done.

Clerk Rowley read the legal notice notifying all persons affected by the opening and improvement of Watchung avenue that their property will be sold, where the assessments remain unpaid. In connection with the publication of this Mr. Swackhamer offered a resolution providing for the issuance of a warrant on the tax collector empowering him to sell the property affected. It was also stated by the Mayor and Council that it is their desire that all persons affected know that the matter is now out of their hands, and that they are desirous that the law take its course.

Mayor Smalley appointed P. J. Beagan a marshal chiefly for the purpose of doing special duty as night watchman. The appointment was confirmed.

Mr. Clark, chairman of the committee on streets, presented his report which showed that $950 had been expended for cleaning Somerset street, $15.90 for placing pipe on Brook avenue, and $32.85 for macadamizing Orchard place, and $380 for macadamizing for Mr. Fawcett. There was used during the month over 114 tons of stone, costing $102 92. The total cost of labor was $64 05.

Mr. Valiant offered resolutions providing for the drawing of warrants to pay $2,000 certificates and interest on same in connection with the opening and improvement of Watchung avenue.

Mr. Coddington brought up the old question of making improvements on Brook and Franklin avenue in front of property owned by J. D. Mills. The latter wanted the Council to pay for cost of the material used in providing a proper drain to the property in the gutter and Mr. Coddington's resolution provided that a warrant for $18 be drawn in favor of Mr. Mills to pay for the material.

The resolution was strongly opposed by most of the members for they thought that if the gutters were in a bad condition and needed attention it should be a matter for the Council to look after, and if it was of a private nature Mr. Mills should make his own improvement. The question was discussed at great length, and finally Mr. Coddington's resolution was sidetracked, and one was substituted by Mr. Valiant which provided that the borough should do the work. Messrs. Burtis and Clark opposed the resolution, while Messrs. Coddington, Rogers, Swackhamer and Valiant supported it.

Mr. Valiant offered another resolution providing for the borrowing of $1,000 for four months, and still another that the sum of $6.65 be remitted from the tax bill of J. Bremen for 1897, as it had been shown that he does not owe that amount for the fact that in that year he was allowed $500 exemption for being a fireman, and since then the property has been in his wife's name.

An amended ordinance regulating and licensing auctioneers was called up and adopted on the third reading The ordinance reduces the fee from $25 to $15 per year.

At this time Mr. Rogers moved that the Council examine the books of the assessors, but Mr. Swackhamer thought it was pretty late, and on his motion the examination was deferred till tomorrow evening.

After the Council passed a little time in discussing the question of putting a marshal on in place of Mr. Schenck, who resigned, and it was decided that at present a man was not needed, the Council adjourned.

REV. MR. SHOTT STILL CONTINUES CRUSADE.

Bitter Arraignment of 'Plains for Licensing Saloons.

EIGHT DRINKING PLACES.

PREACHED SERMON ON THE SUBJECT SUNDAY MORNING.

Doubted Right of Man Who Signed License Application to Christian Citizenship—Too Many Think Church Work Falls on Pastor and Women—Denouncement of Great Influence on Election Day.

Scotch Plains, August 7.—Rev. Mr. Shott continued his moral agitation yesterday in the interests of the Citizens' League. At the morning service he took his text from Jeremiah, 1; 7 and 8 verses—"But the Lord said unto me, 'Say not that I am a child; for thou shall go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee shalt speak. Be not afraid of their faces for I am with thee to deliver thee.'"

The sermon was a scathing arraignment of the licensing of eight drinking places in the township and borough. He pointed out the fact that it took ninety-six Freeholders out of a voting population of a little over 300 to sign eight applications for licenses. Mr. Shott said in part:

"If a man—a member of a church—signs an application for a license, saying he believes such a place a necessity to the community. I doubt that man's right to Christian citizenship. If such a man is here, I say 'thou art the man!' You go on granting licenses to deal out damnation to your boys. If Jesus Christ was in Scotch Plains, what would be His attitude? Would He go up to a court and say that He believed a place to deal out damnation in the town was a necessity, and that the Sunday-selling of rum was advancing the moral interest of the town? You say no. Then if we are here representing Jesus, we must endeavor to do as He would do. There are too many men who think the work of the church falls upon the pastor and the women of the church. How many of you men present will be at the church prayer meeting Friday evening? Don't make your excuses to me; make them to God. If I did not believe God's call my coming here, I would not stay twenty-four hours. The popular masses of the day are dropping the church. What influence has this little church of one hundred and fifty years? The man with influence at the polls today is the man who is filled with beer or its influence. You cannot elect lawbreakers and expect them to arrest themselves. But the day will come when I hope some other influence will be felt at the polls election day. I believe the tendency in the church of today is man's feast of man, more than his feast of God. There are some things in our town that must be thrown down, and then upon the debris let us begin to plant and build anew."

In the evening Rev. Mr. Shott gave the first of a series of very interesting talks upon the life and work of A. J. Diaz, known as the Baptist apostle to Cuba.

PLAINFIELDERS AT OLD FORGE.

Took Part in the Opening of the Racquette Lake Railroad in Adirondacks.

News from Old Forge, N. Y., in Saturday's issue of the Mail and Express gives the opening of the Racquette Lake Railroad in the Adirondacks with the following item of interest to Plainfielders: "A colony of New York business men, whose homes are in Plainfield, are with their families at the Bald Mountain House. In the party are Mr. and Mrs. William L. Patten, Miss Winifred Patten, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Haven, Winifred Haven, Elvise Haven, Alice Haven, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Miss Huntington, Josiah Brown and family, W. H. Brown and family, Miss Charlotte Brown and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Miller."

—Sexton Maynard, of the First Baptist church, is now thoroughly cleaning the church, according to the usual custom during the summer months.

RIKER TROLLEY LINES FURTHER EXTENDED.

Freeholders Give Permission for Rahway-Westfield Line.

MEETING HELD THURSDAY.

FREEHOLDERS ROBISON AND SWAIN VOTED AGAINST IT.

Agreement Reached With the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company for a Trolley Road Between Westfield and Rahway—Company Grants a Number of Concessions for the Franchise.

The Riker trolley syndicate is steadily advancing its lines through the length and breadth of Union county. Now the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company, which is owned and controlled by the Riker syndicate, has secured permission from the Union County Board of Freeholders to build a branch line from Westfield to Rahway. The necessary permission was secured at a meeting of the Freeholders held Thursday afternoon.

After transacting the usual amount of business not of interest to Plainfield and consisting of routine matters, a resolution was introduced recommending that the agreement presented to this Board by the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company be accepted. This resolution was adopted, Freeholders Robison and Swain voting in the negative.

This agreement recites that the Westfield and Elizabeth Railway Company having applied to construct, maintain and operate a double track street railway on Westfield avenue, between Broad street and South avenue in the township of Westfield; on Westfield avenue in the city of Rahway, from the easterly side of St. George avenue to a point 1,753.6 feet from the beginning; and on Central avenue, in Westfield, from Grove street to Westfield avenue, permission was granted to them. This permission was granted on condition that the rails be of standard size and laid at a certain distance from the centre of the street, except at curves and under bridges; that the company pay its proportionate share of the expense of paving the streets, and that it repair the same properly; that all work be done under county inspection and supervision, and that the company construct a sewer to drain the street where its tracks pass under the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Also that this company should forfeit its right to object to or oppose the construction of any parallel line of railway within two block, and that it permit other roads to cross its tracks.

The agreement was signed by Chandler A. Riker as president of the company.

The agreement concerning permission given to the railway company to use the county bridge over the Rahway river in Cranford township caused a good deal of discussion. Freeholder Roll wanted the agreement changed, and finally Freeholder King's resolution was adopted. This resolution empowered the director to sign the agreement when it was so changed that the necessity of the construction of a new bridge could be determined by the joint authority of the Board and the railway company, and that the agreement be made to read "the railway company, its assigns or successors." The agreement must also be approved by the county attorney.

Freeholder Robison offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the county collector to report to the Board the expense the county had incurred to date in the plan to widen Westfield avenue, or what is known as the county boulevard. The collector was also directed to report what amount, if any, has been paid to the county by the Elizabeth Street Railway Company on account of the boulevard.

SUBSCRIPTION EUCHRE PARTY.

Will Be Given at Hotel Hunterston Thursday Evening.

The subscription euchre party, to be given by the guests of the Hotel Hunterston Thursday evening, bids fair to be a great success both socially and financially. The proceeds will be used for the purchase of reading matter to be sent to the soldier boys in the Philippines who are away from home and many of whom are without friends to write them a line.

Tickets have been sent to many prominent people in the city who have responded liberally. Persons who have not received tickets can find them at the principal drug stores or at the hotel on the evening of the entertainment.

Aside from the benefit to the soldiers a delightful evening will be spent. The game will be called at 8:15 o'clock sharp and will continue until 10:30, when a number of handsome prizes will be awarded to the successful players. Dancing will begin at close of the game and continue until 2 o'clock. For the benefit of persons attending the party and dance, special trolley cars will be run from Netherwood until 1:30 o'clock.

G. W. COOLEY LEADS FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP.

Official Standing of Contestants Given Out by the Committee.

FEW PLAY LAST SATURDAY.

DULL SEASON NOW AT THE PARK GOLF CLUB.

G. W. Cooley and Chas. E. Faber Were the Only Contestants Out for the Cup Saturday—They Made High Scores—Had to Play in the Rain—Cooley's Play Landed Him First for the Cup.

Between the hot weather, the prospect of showers and the summer vacations of the golfers, Saturday afternoon saw very few players on the links of the Park Golf Club. It was the smallest attendance since the course was opened for play in the spring. Considering all the conditions, however, it is rather wonderful that any turned out at all.

Somehow it didn't seem the right kind of a day to play golf and those who did brave sun and shower and ventured out found that playing came mighty near being very hard work. There were only two competitors for points for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup and so they had everything their own way. They had to play right through a brisk shower so their scores ran far above the usual number of strokes.

Gifford W. Cooley and Charles E. Faber were the only ones to hand in their cards for the cup. The day was not conducive to low scores and they didn't make any. There really wasn't any need of any for they had no one to beat. There scores follow:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Charles E. Faber	127	34	93
Gifford W. Cooley	141	9	132

The point they added to their little collections were just as good, however, as if they had both done the eighteen holes in less than the seven hundred. There were a few other players out, principally new but wildly enthusiastic players whom nothing outside of a genuine tornado could persuade to keep away. They gave the few caddies that turned up something to do. No records were broken, however.

The most important happening of the day was the official announcement of the greens committee of the standing of the various competitors for the McCutchen cup. There were several changes from the standing heretofore published in The Press and compiled from the reports of each week's play. Several scores, entered after the reports were furnished, introduced several new candidates in the contest and reduced the lead of others. A. C. Crowe's high score for one week was not counted. The result, after including the points scored Saturday, showed that G. W. Cooley was in the lead, with Charles E. Faber second and Meredith Dryden third.

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

Gifford W. Cooley	8
Charles E. Faber	7
Meredith Dryden	6½
G. Faber	6
W. de la K. Anderson	4½
Samuel Tunnell	4½
F. V. Douglass	3½
E. D. Hubbard	3½
Arthur Peck	3
Fred P. Townsend	2½
S. S. Squires	2½
Fred P. Townsend	2½
A. B. Lake	2
Fred S. Overton	1½
Charles S. Boone	1½
C. W. McCutchen	1

WHEELED INTO BROOK.

STORM CAUGHT J. H. SCRIVEN AND HE COULDN'T STOP.

Was Wheeling Back of Scotch Plains Saturday Night—Lost Control of Bicycle and Took Header Into Brook.

Isaac J. Scriven, janitor of the Babcock building, had a thrilling experience Saturday evening. He was up to Scotch Plains and Feltville on his wheel. When coming down the long hill at the "back pond" he found the wind rather strong. It was about 7 o'clock and a storm was coming up. Scriven thought he could get to a place of shelter before the threatening rain came. In this he was mistaken. Before he realized his predicament the storm had burst upon him. At that time he was coming down the hill. The breeze became a gale and in a jiffy he was literally sailing along. His speed increased. Then he attempted to check the speed of his machine by putting on the brake. But that did little good and he came down that hill at a mile a minute clip.

Before Scriven was aware of it he had lost control of his wheel. It took but a few seconds to reach the bottom of the hill. Then Scriven took a header over the bushes into the brook. He picked himself up and took an inventory of his injuries, which consisted of scratches on his face and hands. The rain was pouring in torrents and Scriven took to a neighboring farm house for shelter. Fortunately his wheel was not damaged and he was able to ride home after the storm abated.

Effects Still Felt.

The storm of Saturday night caused a suspension of business with some of the local telephones, and on account of yesterday being Sunday repairs were not made until today.

HOW FARMER ORATOR PLAYED AT GOLF

Made His Debut in the Game at Forest Hill.

THAT HAPPENED LAST FALL.

JAMES E. MARTINE, OF THIS CITY, ASTONISHED THEM ALL.

Was Looking for a Friend and Found Him on the Golf Links—Golfers Insisted that Mr. Martine Play —Although His Form Was Not Equal to Mr. Douglass, He Surprised All.

The appearance of James E. Martine, the well-known Democratic politician and "Farmer Orator," of Union county, at the North Avenue station the other day with a caddy bag of golf clubs in his hand was made the occasion for much laughter on the part of many of his friends. The "Farmer Orator," they declared, was going to try to win votes for the Democracy this fall from among the golfers, and had therefore taken up the sport.

In their belief that Mr. Martine was new to the game of golf, they were greatly in error. He made his debut on a golf course last fall. On this occasion, however, the Democratic leader was not preparing to play, but with his characteristic courtesy was carrying the golf clubs for a friend who was about to take the train.

Concerning Mr. Martine's first participation in the ancient and honorable game, however, it was a most auspicious one and brought forth the opinion of one of the crack golfers of Newark that the "Farmer Orator" might become champion of Union county if he would devote a little time to the game.

Mr. Martine was called to visit a friend at Forest Hill, a suburb of Newark. On arriving at the residence of the friend he was told that the latter could be found on the neighboring golf links. Thither he went to find his friend deep in the mysteries of the game in company with a bevy of young women.

After the usual introductions one of the young women remarked:

"Of course, Mr. Martine, you know how to make a golf tee."

The Plainfielder was compelled to say that he didn't. His only idea of a golf tee, he explained, was a gathering of fair young women and a cup of tea. They laughed, and all declared that he must learn to play. Now Mr. Martine has faced many an unruly mob in the course of his career as a public speaker and he has stood unflinching at his post. But it was an entirely different thing to face this laughing, smiling assemblage of beauty and try to show his skill in a game he did not know. Mr. Martine is a brave man, however. When he found that his protestations were in vain, he declared his willingness to exhibit his prowess.

Two caddies were sent out some fifty yards in front of the teeing ground.

"That isn't far enough, I can send it farther than that," declared the Union county politician. The caddies were ordered out to the flag, a hundred yards away.

"That isn't far enough," persisted Mr. Martine, and his friends laughed and told him to go ahead.

Shutting his eyes the "Farmer Orator" made a terrific swing at the little white sphere, teed in front of him on a tiny mound of sand. He didn't stop to "address" the ball or "sole" his club, or do any of the other little stunts that the expert golfer considers positively necessary. He just struck at the ball. Wonderful to relate, he caught the ball squarely on the face of the club With a whistle of surprise the ball shot forth into space while a prolonged "oh-h-h" burst forth from the party. On it went, straight for the hole and far above the caddies' heads. At last it came to the ground, nearly 200 yards away, within easy distance of the putting green.

"Who said you could'nt play golf?" exclaimed Mr. Martine's friend, who was the first to recover his speech. But the "Farmer Orator" refused to play out the hole, and journeyed homeward with his friend soon after.

SECOND CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Has Been Organized and Officers Chosen—Meetings Held at Members' Homes, Now.

The Second Christian church, of Plainfield, has been organized as a regular church, and the following officers have been chosen to guide its affairs: Pastor, Elder J. A. Foster; deacons, H. A. Mears, Henry Van Middlesworth, W. H. Keoyer, E. E. Sisson; deaconess, Miss Carrie Wright; treasurer, W. H. Keoyer; secretary, Henry Van Middlesworth. At the next regular meeting of the church trustees will be elected. The church is now in a healthy and prosperous condition, and new members are being constantly taken in. There is an average attendance at all services of about thirty persons, and there are chances that at some future date commodious meeting quarters will be secured. Services are now held at the homes of the members.

RUIN AND DISASTER IN TORNADO'S WAKE.

Churches, Houses and Trees Fell Before the Fierce Wind Storm of August 2nd.

CITY OF ELIZABETH WAS THE GREATEST SUFFERER.

Storm Wrought Much Havoc in Plainfield—Trees and Wires Suffered Much—Local Trolley System Paralyzed—Houses Injured by Falling Trees—Great Destruction of Property Reported in Elizabeth—South Plainfield Suffered Severely—House Blown Down in Dunellen—Many Narrow Escapes—Boy Killed Near Dover—Berkeley Heights School House Struck by Lightning—Fruit Orchards Were Nearly Ruined—"Count" VanNess' Horse Under a Fallen Tree—Many Other Incidents of the Tornado.

Out of the northwest August 2nd there came a wind storm of exceptional violence that became a full fledged tornado in some places. It swept though this section of New Jersey carrying destruction in its wake. From every side come reports of the damage done. The storm was only of short duration but of great fierceness and was accompanied by a very heavy rainfall and a sharp electrical display. Plainfield suffered much in uprooted trees and the disarrangement of overhead wires. The local trolley system was brought to a standstill for three hours. Communication with neighboring towns was in many cases shut off by fallen trees.

It wasn't the kind of a day to expect such a visitation by wind and storm. The morning was delightfully cool and few if any clouds were visible. It grew warmer as the day advanced but the humidity was low and it showed no sign of showers. At noon a long ridge of dark clouds swept over the mountain and advanced on the city. A dim haze proceeded it. The line of clouds drew nearer and assumed a more portentious aspect. Light grey clouds, blown into shreds by the violence of the wind, scudded ahead of the vast heaps of whirling, churning black clouds. Last of all, the dull grey told of the approaching rain.

It was only a few minutes of 3 o'clock when the first drops began to fall. Then came a puff of wind that sent the stray scraps of paper flying and caused a general hustle for shelter. A moment later the clouds seemed to open and the rain came down in sheets while the wind seized upon it and bore it in mighty sheets. For the moment the wind assumed a remarkably high velocity. Branches were torn from the trees, even the trees themselves in many cases fell before the fury of the gale. Stray window shutters, signs and a host of other things were hurled through the air. The rain and wind were blinding. It only lasted a few moments or else the city must have suffered terribly. As it was, there was damage done on every side.

The wind lessened and then the rain ceased. In half an hour from the time when the forerunner drops of the storm spocked the sidewalks, there was a belt of bright blue sky visible over the mountain while rain and wind had ceased entirely. It was quite noticeably cool.

During that half hour the local street car system was totally disabled for the time being. The cars were stalled all along the line. Breaks on East and West Front street and at Dunellen were responsible.

All over the city there was a general stripping of limbs, large and small, from the trees. Some were large enough to be dangerous and stop traffic for a time. On the outskirts of the city and borough the damage was more severe. Some of the pedestrians who were hurrying along had narrow escape from falling branches. The streets were scattered with the debris blown about by the storm.

Accompanying the wind was a very heavy fall of rain. Street were flooded all over the city. The Park avenue storm sewer again showed that it was able to carry away all the rain that fell there. The street was unusually clear of water and there was no necessity of swimming under the railroad bridge. Some of the other streets, however, had large sized puddles that even overflowed the sidewalks under the railroad bridges.

Just as the storm burst out car No. 20 of the Plainfield Street Railway Company was coming eastward on West Front street under the charge of Motorman Wm. Brown and Conductor Philip Maguire. The car had just passed Washington avenue and Motorman Brown shut off the power. Right in front of the home of George Servias, 440 West Front street, there stood a large maple tree. Already one branch had been twisted off by the wind. As the car passed there was a crash and the tree fell directly over the car. The car passed out from under the branches, which brushed against it and nearly swept the conductor from his place. One of the iron poles that supports the trolley wires was snapped by the falling tree, which carried the trolley wires to the ground. Telephone and electric light wires were also snapped. Among the passengers in the car was Charles W. Bunyon, manager of the N. Y. and N. J. Telephone Company.

Neal Compton, of West Front street, was riding his wheel, and he had just reached the spot when the tree fell almost upon him. By jumping from his wheel and dragging it back he escaped injury.

The snapping of the trolley wire caused a general stopping of all the cars. As soon as the company was notified of the accident they sent a large gang of men to the scene. The tree was speedily cut up and removed and the wires put back into shape.

A falling limb wrought general havoc among the trolley and guard wires at the curve from East Front street into Watchung avenue. The guard wires were dragging on the ground for some distance. Electric light and power wires were also broken there. Linemen repaired the damage before night.

A great maple tree, standing in front of the property, corner of West Second street and Central avenue, owned by M. F. Marclay, was uprooted and fell on the residence of Ben Eddy, 321 West Second street, next door. The chimney of the house was knocked sadly out of true, and the roof damaged to a considerable extent.

One of the poplar trees in the rear of the First Baptist church on West Front street was split by a gust. A large limb was torn from one of the trees in front of Trinity Reformed church on West Second street. Another falling limb nearly blocked East Fifth street, near Park avenue. A small tree was blown down on East Fourth street, opposite A. Hedden's stable.

A maple tree on East Second street was split and fell against the house occupied jointly by Mrs. Miller and William Townley. No damage was done.

The brick chimney on the barn in the rear of Frank Shattle's place at 318 East Sixth street, was blown over by the wind. The Beaumont was in the barn at the time and departed in haste amid a shower of falling bricks.

A tree on West Fourth street, near Liberty street, fell blocking Fourth street for several hours.

The local exchange of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company suffered severely from the storm. Out of the four hundred odd lines, fully two hundred were out of order after the storm. In some cases the wind had blown down the lines and in others, the lightning burned out fuses.

Weather Observer Neagle reports that it was the worst storm of the season. During the shower of the afternoon, .50 of an inch of water fell. During the evening shower, the rainfall was .73 of an inch, making a total rainfall August 2d of 1.23 inches.

Patrick Kiely, a well-known resident of the borough, while engaged in trimming a peach tree at his home on Steiner place August 2d during the prevalence of the storm, sustained a severe shock from a sharp flash of lightning. Mr. Kiely was rendered nearly unconscious by the shock and it was some moments before he was again himself.

ELIZABETH SUFFERS.

Churches and Houses Demolished by a Tornado—Damage Estimated Over $100,000.

For just four minutes Elizabeth was swept by a tonado. It appeared August 2d shortly after 3 o'clock and spread ruin on every side. There was, however, no casualties reported. It came from the southwest and passed through the centre of the city in a track a thousand feet wide.

The damage in the city from the tornado is estimated at from $100,000 to $200,000. The path of the tornado included many churches and other prominent buildings, and it could not have picked out any other path through the city where the possibilities of damage would have been so great.

One of the first buildings to be hit by the blast was the tower of the historic First Presbyterian church. This towering column was snapped off just above the clock and crashed down to the ground. Immediately after the steeple fell the big trees in the churchyard began to yield to the wind, and several of them fell, their roots being torn from the ground, and the bones of men and women buried many years ago being dragged to the surface.

The next place struck was the Lyceum Theatre, on the south side of Broad street. The roof was torn off and the Beerbower pottery was also unroofed.

The whirling, funnel shaped cloud next passed to East Jersey street and struck the spire of the Central Baptist church, demolishing it and part of the church roof. The big bell was hurled nearly across the street.

The top of the spire of the Third Presbyterian church was blown off, and the side of Dr. Moulfort's house was crushed in by a huge tree falling against it.

City Hall Park, at the entrance to Madison avenue, and opposite the Third Presbyterian church, was swept by the tornado and nearly all the fine trees in it were uprooted.

The front of the Home for Aged Women, in East Jersey street, was wrecked by a great sycamore tree over one hundred years old being torn up and thrown against it.

The tornado then swept through Madison avenue and Catharine street to William street, and down this street to Spring street, where its fury ceased and it passed away to the northeast. It was on William street, however, from Catherine street to Spring street, and for the same distance on one side of East Grand street, which runs parallel to William street, that its greatest damage was done, there not being a house on these two blocks that was not more or less injured, and some were completely wrecked.

Charles Keiber's two-and-a-half-story house in William street was lifted from its foundation, twisted completely around in the air, and dropped to the ground a complete wreck. Fortunately all the family were away on the Elizabeth Orphan Asylum excursion to Asbury Park and so escaped death or injury.

The roof of the nave of Christ Episcopal church, in Scott place, was torn off and the interior of the church was much damaged by rain.

Broad street, the chief business thoroughfare, suffered much from the tornado, many awnings being wrecked and plate-glass windows broken. The goods in the front parts of many stores were badly damaged.

Henry Gavin, a delivery clerk for J. Potts & Sons, was in a wagon when it was overturned and he and the horse buried beneath it. He was not injured and the horse ran away.

The Elizabeth Journal was temporarily disabled by the stopping of the electric power. The steam plant was finally put in operation and the Journal's extra was soon on the streets.

A train on the Jersey Central Railroad was just passing Spring street and was nearly lifted from the tracks. The passengers were badly frightened. Congressman Fowler was on the train.

The local weather bureau reports that only three-eighths of an inch of rain fell while the wind blew eighty miles an hour.

DUNELLEN STORM-SWEPT.

New House Wrecked and Many Trees Uprooted by the Wind.

The storm at Dunellen was the most severe one of the season. It began about 3 o'clock and for fully half an hour it raged with terrific force. Great black clouds were noticeable in the western sky a few moments before. Then came a stiff wind that blew in gusts clouds of dust promiscuously about. The wind increased in fury until a small sized hurricane prevailed. It was fearful in its velocity, blowing a gale of nearly sixty miles an hour.

The gale swept everything before it. Trees were dismantled and in some instances their branches were scattered far and wide. Gardens and field crops were greatly damaged and shrubbery of all kinds suffered to a more or less extent. Insecure roofs, fragile fences and chimneys with loose fastenings received the full effects of the high wind.

Following the wind came the rain, which fell in torrents, flooding the streets to the depth of several inches. With the rain came the lightning, which precipitated terrific crashes of thunder, startling in their frequency and thoroughly frightening timid citizens.

As the rain increased the heavy wind became less severe and finally stopped altogether. But the rain continued unabated for the space of fifteen minutes after the dying of the wind. When the storm had cleared away and the citizens of the borough went forth to ascertain the extent of the damage they were not surprised at the discoveries made.

In the depot park the handsome trees had felt the effect of the severe storm. Large branches were lying about and the lawn was strewn with leaves and rubbish.

The frame work of Mrs. Louise Terry's new house opposite the station was completely demolished. It had just been raised and workmen were engaged securing the timbers when the severe storm burst upon them. The wind came up so suddenly and fiercely that the carpenters were compelled to beat a hasty retreat to escape the falling timbers, which were toppled over as easily as if they had been ten-pins. In a bowling alley. Some of the timbers were broken by the fall. A portion of the brick superstructure was also dislodged and will have to be rebuilt.

At Jefferson avenue the wind was very severe and at one time Harry Milligan was afraid that the Avoca Villa would feel the effects of the storm. But like a good ship the villa "rode the waves" and when the storm had subsided it was found to be not in the least damaged. Harry told a Press reporter that pieces of paper, old shoes, tin cans, hats, etc., came sailing through the pavilion in an endless procession. He couldn't say where they all came from.

While the storm was at its height a horse and carriage was seen coming from the direction of Plainfield. The conveyance contained a man and woman. When it reached the Avoca Villa opposite Jefferson avenue the man jumped out and ran into the villa to escape the storm, leaving his frail companion to look after the frightened horse. The woman had all she could do to hold the animal, which did its best to run away. The man said they were from Connecticut and that they were going to Princeton. The woman got a thorough drenching.

A large soft maple tree, which stands on the west side of the street near Jefferson avenue, was struck by lightning during the storm and one of its largest branches was torn off. It fell across the trolley wire and smashed it from the iron supports, which were badly bent. The big branch fell directly across the tracks of the Plainfield Street Railway. Car No. 16, in charge of Conductor John Deady, was standing a few feet from the tree, and the large branch came within a few feet of striking the car. Conductor Deady and his motorman had considerable difficulty in clearing the tracks. It was necessary to procure an axe and cut the big branches to pieces and then haul them to one side of the road. By the time the track was cleared the discovery was made that the power was off owing to an accident at Plainfield. For about three hours the car was at a standstill, no cars running to Plainfield. No trouble was experienced on the line of the Brunswick Traction Company.

ROADS WERE BLOCKED.

South Plainfield Felt the Force of a Young Tornado.

A young tornado swept over South Plainfield and vicinity August 2d, doing considerable damage. Trees all through the town were uprooted, blocking the roads. The fruit orchards in the neighborhood suffered severely, many of the trees being blown down and the fruit from others shaken to the ground.

A great willow tree fell on the barn of E. B. Smith on the Plainfield road, partially wrecking the building. One of Compton Vail's apple trees was blown clear out into the road. Constable Mundy was just driving into town when the storm struck. The top to his buggy was removed with much suddenness, and he was nearly lifted from his seat.

Overseer of Roads Jesse Drayton was out as soon as the storm was over with a gang of men and teams making the roads passable. The road from South Plainfield to Avon Park was the worst. It was completely blocked in a dozen places.

OLAF SANGSTAD WEDDED

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE OF HIS MARRIAGE TO VIRGINIA BELLE.

Ceremony Took Place at Bride-'s Home, Falls Church, Va., June 20th—It is a General Surprise to His Many Friends.

In the issue of the Falls Church (Va.) Monitor for June 24th, the following notice of the marriage of Olaf Sangstad, of this city, appeared. It was received at The Press office this morning. The announcement will be a general surprise:

"At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. N. F. Graham, last Tuesday morning, June 20th, at 10 o'clock, Miss Elizabeth Graham and Mr. Olaf Sangstad, of Plainfield, N. J., were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, by Rev. Dr. McGill. So quietly had the arrangements proceeded that the most intimate friends of the contracting pair were taken by surprise.

"Mr. and Mrs. Sangstad took the 12 o'clock car for Washington, thence to Deer Island, Me., where they will spend a couple of months. They will make their future home either in New York or New Jersey. Miss "Bessie," as she is known here, is a young lady of rare accomplishments. We congratulate Mr. Sangstad on his good fortune in winning her.

"Falls Church will mourn her loss, and she will be greatly missed in the home circle.

"The Monitor wishes her much happiness in her new life."

BURNED BY MOLTEN IRON

KETTLE OF METAL OVERFLOWED ON JOHN NEWMAN.

Covered His Left Leg and Foot, Inflicting Terrible Burns—At Pond Tool Works—Was Taken Home.

John Newman, of Liberty street, an employe in the foundry at Pond's was terribly burned about the the left foot and leg while at work Friday morning.

He, being a helper, was assisting another man in making a casting, and the large quantity of red hot iron overflowed the large kettle used. Newman was standing close by and a quantity of the molten iron coursed over and covered his leg and foot. The excruciating pain caused him to give heartrending shrieks, which brought a gang of men to his assistance. It was noticed that Newman's burns were of a serious nature, and he was hastily taken home and a physician was called.

The patient was made as comfortable as possible, and the physician does not now fear any danger. Newman will be confined to the house for several weeks.

CROP OUTLOOK IN JERSEY.

Apples and Pears Will be of Unusually Good Flavor This Year.

Although the apple crop in New Jersey will not be above the average this year as far as quantity is concerned, farmers all over the State say the fruit will be much better than usual; that it will be larger and finer in appearance than it has been for several years and that the crop will bring good prices. In the region near Freehold the crop will be very much larger than usual, and the farmers there say that the fruit will also be of superior quality.

The Keifer pear crop will be an average crop, judging from the prospects. The pears will be of fine appearance and quality.

The drought in Southern Jersey has been more severe than in the northern part of the State; yet the farmers are getting good prices, and expect an average year as to net receipts.

Will Rebuild Pier.

The Board of Freeholders of Middlesex county have taken steps to erect a trestle and shoring under the west end of the Albany street bridge at New Brunswick. The pier, abutment and retaining wall of the elevated approach are in a dangerous condition. The pier will have to be entirely rebuilt, and will cost about $70,000.

Victors at Quoits.

Notwithstanding the hot weather the members of Columbia lodge, A. O. U. W., last Friday enjoyed themselves in pitching quoits. Messrs. Louis Burg and Mosher were pitted against Messrs. Waldron and Pearson. The first two won two games out of three. Refreshments, consisting of cake and ice cream, were served and a pleasant time enjoyed.

Has a Kissing Bug on Exhibition.

What is claimed to be a real "kissing bug" is now on exhibition at the pharmacy of Edward S. P. Randolph, corner of West Fourth and Liberty streets. Mr. Randolph captured it the other evening and now has it on exhibition. It is a black insect of quite goodly proportions, with an ugly pair of horns sticking out of its head.

Walked on a Wheel.

Hackman Kennedy's horse became somewhat fractious Friday afternoon in front of the Hotel Kensington and walked upon the sidewalk stepping on a wheel owned by Wm. Hedden. The result was a number of spokes were broken.

HOW FULTON LIKES IT.

M'CONNELLSBURG PAPERS DISCUSS CONTEST OVER DARLING.

The Fulton Democrat Tells of the General Feeling at Sheriff Sheets' Action—Says He Was a Quiet Prisoner.

McConnellsburg, Pa., has had lots of excitement over the capture and subsequent contest over Will Darling. The newspapers of that town are filled with the details of the case. In reference to it, the Fulton Democrat, of McConnellsville, says in its issue of Thursday:

"The arrest, detention and contest over Darling have given Fulton county a prominence it might not otherwise have gained in a long time. Whether this was desirable we leave our readers to judge. The city papers, east and west, were filled with accounts of the case, some of them exaggerated. Our officers were criticised, more or less, fun poked at us because our county has no railroad, just as if that fact had any bearing on the case. Our own people manifested much interest in the proceedings, but the report in the Philadelphia Inquirer that business places closed, and our merchants, with others, stood about all day long in groups on the corners discussing it was simply the imagination of the reporter, who expected pay for the space filled.

A difference in opinion existed as to Sheriff Sheet's persistence in holding on for his pay. About everybody thought he should be paid before he surrendered the man, many thought his charge of $275 too high while some thought it none too much for the risk in making the arrest. Others feared that a result of the case would be heavy expenses for the county to foot. For the information of such we can say that it has not cost the county one dollar.

The sheriff has $45, the New Jersey authorities have the prisoner. Besides, the sheriff has the promise of further pay from Middlesex county. He may or he may not get it. We advise him not to spend what's promised until he gets it.

What will be done with Darling no one now knows. New Jersey is noted for its sure and swift justice to offenders. We promise our readers to give them the benefit of all authenic information we can obtain until the end.

"Darling was a quiet prisoner and gave the sheriff no unnecessary trouble. That he contemplated suicide is evident from the fact that with the small piece of tin picked up in the yard, as he admitted, he attempted to bleed himself to death by cutting into his wrist. He failed to sever the artery though inflicting a small wound."

WANTED A MARSHAL.

LIVELY DISCUSSION BETWEEN MAYOR AND BOROUGH COUNCILMAN.

Mr. Rogers Thought it Would be Well to Have Another Marshal—His Reasons Why—Mayor's Reply.

Councilman George T. Rogers took occasion at the meeting of the Borough Council Friday evening to speak of the efforts of the administration to get along with one less man on the police force. He said that he would be willing to pay a little extra to have a marshal pass his property once every hour during the night. He remarked that a few nights ago he found a drunken man on his lawn and he had evidently been there long enough to sober up.

To the above the Mayor remarked that he did not know that there were such characters in Washington Park, and Mr. Rogers fully convinced the other members that the man found his way there from another part of the borough. However, Mr. Rogers commended the spirit of the Mayor in waiting until he could secure a man who would earn $60 a month, the salary paid to marshals.

JUDGE RUNYON IN DOUBT

Troubles of Durusso and Opezo Still Unsettled in Court.

City Judge Runyon is still in doubt as to the exact circumstances of the trouble between Peter Opezo and Mr. and Mrs. Patsy Durusso. Durusso, it will be remembered, keeps a candy and fruit store in the Rink building, Watchung avenue. He says that Opezo stole a $1 bill off the counter Tuesday night, and incidentally assaulted himself and wife.

Saturday, Opezo came up for trial. He brought several witnesses who swore that they saw him and that he was not in Durusso's store when they saw him but they couldn't swear that he hadn't been there at all. Durusso forgot that he was to bring a cartload of witnesses and begged the Judge to give him a chance to remember. The Judge told him to come whenever he felt inclined.

Mayor Loved Not Music.

Last Friday, prior to the meeting of the borough Council, a hand-organ appeared in front of the Council building and discoursed sweet and popular airs. It was about time for Mayor Smalley to call the meeting, but before he could do so he was obliged to send Chief Marshal Campbell on the street and request the dispenser of music to move along.

WHY THE BOROUGH GROWS BETTER DAILY.

Tough Characters Now Spend Night at 'Plains and Dunellen.

LESS LIKELIHOOD OF ARREST

SALOONS AT OUTDOOR RESORTS KEEP OPEN ALL THE TIME.

So Those Who Used to Wind Up in the Borough Lockup Now Leave Plainfield and North Plainfield Alone and Depart By Trolley to Scotch Plains and Dunellen—Lost Trade Also.

The borough marshals have at last come forward and offered a solution to the great mystery as to why so few arrests are made in their domain. The extension of the trolley is responsible for it, for instead of the disturbers invading the borough they now go to Scotch Plains and Dunellen and seek pleasure resorts where there is more freedom and less likelihood of arrest. It is an acknowledged fact that at these outside resorts everything is free and easy and plenty of attractions are offered, so there is little trouble in getting the crowd.

Heretofore, the class of people who usually wind up in the lockup, have sought the borough and remained there until the early morning hours, owing to the fact that the saloons on this side close early, while in the borough, they are open all night practically. The saloonkeepers close for a few minutes at midnight, only to open again soon after 12 o'clock, and they have succeeded in holding the crowd until late in the morning.

Things are now different and the saloonkeepers are now feeling the loss of patronage in the borough, and they have no way of inducing the crowd to come their way. At these outside resorts liquid refreshments are sold at all hours to suit the public, and then there is not so great a chance of being discovered if one happens to get a little more than is good for him, and he stands a better chance of reaching home with the assistance of friends. In the borough there is a chance of getting locked up, having one's name in the paper, and altogether much publicity is given to a little spree.

However, the borough officials are pleased, for it reduces expenses to a minimum and it does not require nearly as many men to keep peace and quite in that place. Then there is no one to be sent to Somerville and the county is relieved of a burden of keeping people in the jail.

Altogether the borough's lot is a happy one and so long as there is no serious trouble on hand everyone ought to be satisfied.

WILL SUPPLY DULUTH.

COMPANY ORGANIZED IN PLAINFIELD TO FURNISH POWER.

Northwestern Power and Transportation Company, With $500,000 Capital, is Composed of Plainfield Capitalists.

The Northwestern Power and Transportation Company has filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, the incorporators being Francis A. Cokefair, Clarence L. Murphy and Francis J. Blatz, all of this city. The total authorized capital stock is $500,000, and there has been paid in $10,000 capital. The company is organized for the purpose of furnishing water power to the city of Duluth, Minn.

The first meeting of the stockholders was held last evening at the office of Murphy & Blatz, 103 East Front street, which will be the office of the company, where the books of the company will be kept. The following were elected directors for one year: Francis A. Cokefair, Clarence L. Murphy and Francis J. Blatz. Immediately afterward there was a meeting of the directors when the following officers were elected for one year: President, Clarence L. Murphy; vice-president, Francis J. Blatz; secretary and treasurer, Francis A. Cokefair.

Francis A. Cokefair and his father, C. C. Cokefair, of Crescent avenue, left today for Duluth, Minn., to look after the interests of the company which will begin operations very soon.

Another Dynamo.

The dynamo used for the first electric cars run in Bridgewater township, was removed Friday from the power house at Finderne to Plainfield to be used at the electric light works here, for the Plainfield Street Railway Company, while their other dynamo is being repaired.

Death of Mrs. Ann Connedy.

Mrs. Ann Connedy, widow of the late John Connedy, died Friday a. m. at the home of her son-in-law, Peter McDonough, of Fourth avenue. Mrs. Connedy was nearly eighty years of age.

Martine Avenue Improved.

Street Commissioner Gavett has much improved the condition of Martine avenue through the use of the city scraper. This avenue makes a beautiful approach to the tract known as Woodland Park.

MANY VISITORS GO TO CAMP WOOLFE.

Headquarters of Union Fresh-Air Mission Association.

LOCATED NEAR WESTFIELD

A SUMMER HOME FOR NEW YORK WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

A Little Settlement Has Been Built There for the Accommodation of Three Guests—Miss Sara Curry is the Matron—Housekeeping and Cooking Taught—The Little Folks Are Not Forgotten.

Among the places of interest within reach of Plainfield by bicycle, there are few which attract more visitors than Camp Woolfe, the headquarters of the Union Fresh-Air Mission Association, of Union county. In a pretty grove, about three-quarters of a mile from the Westfield railway station, are a group of buildings erected especially for a summer home for tired, ill and and discouraged New York women of the lower classes, and their little children.

The principal building has a wooden floor and roof, but open sides, except when the canvass curtains with which it is provided are closed. This serves as dining room, general living room, and auditorium for the religious services which are held Sunday afternoons and every evening of the week except Saturday. Adjoining is the kitchen building, where the food for the camp is prepared, and where the guests are given very practical sort of cooking lessons, which they find a great help in their home life on their return to New York. Two dormitories stand at a little distance, and here not an inch of room is wasted. The bedrooms, which remind one of staterooms on a steamer, are just large enough to accommodate a large bed for the mother and a short one for the child. The room belonging to the matron, Miss Sara Curry, a successful New York city missionary, is in the larger of the dormitory buildings. The laundry and bathhouse are comparatively new additions. A most attractive little building is the nursery, where a number of very little folk, attendants at Miss Curry's New York Day Nursery, spend the entire summer, instead of only remaining at the camp for ten days, as do the older ones.

The Union Fresh-Air Mission Association was formed in 1896, and is made up of representatives of Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues and Sunday-schools of Union county. The present officers are as follows: President, George E. Woolfe, of New York; first vice president, Arthur N. Pierson, of Westfield; second vice president, Miss Florence G. Hawkins, of Plainfield; secretary, Miss Jane R. Morrow, of Westfield; treasurer, Lawrence A. Clark, of Westfield. The association is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, and appeals to all who are interested in work of this sort. Since its organization, though it has been at times very poor, it has never failed to meet an obligation. Every year the number of guests entertained has been larger than the year before, and this season promises to be a very large and successful one. The camp is supposed to accommodate about 125 mothers and children, and it is constantly filled to its utmost capacity. Last year the total number entertained was 370.

Not only is a rest and vacation provided for the mothers and children, but the former are instructed in household economy, the preparation of food and the care of children. They are also surrounded by distinctively religious influences. Morning prayers are conducted by Miss Curry, and the evening meetings are under the direction of a devotional committee of the union, and are conducted by the various societies represented in the union. The guests, especially the small folks, love to sing, and a great deal of bright music is an attractive feature of the meetings.

The free life in the open air, the peaceful Christian atmosphere, and plenty of rest and good plain food do wonders for the pale and weary New Yorkers. Delicate children go home rosy and healthy, and women coming out with selfish, depraved or even vicious natures, often return home with new aims, to take up a new life, and with a sincere trust in the Saviour, of whom they heard so much through the happy summer days.

Clothing, good literature, or goodies and playthings for the little ones are very acceptable at the camp, and there can scarcely be a pleasanter way of spending a small sum than by investing it in something that will give delight to the children who so seldom have "something nice to play with." A recent visitor at the camp was nearly mobbed by youthful applicants for the sheets of paper soldiers she carried down, and a new game or a handful of picture cards is greeted with delight.

Miss Grace Hurtt, of Manasquan, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Hobbe.

ORIGIN DATES BACK TO THE BEGINNING OF WRITTEN LANGUAGES.

The Word Said to Be a Survival of the Title "De Rebus Quae Gerantur" Series of Lampoons on Current Events Read By Clerks at Boeche.

The rebus is a representation by means of pictures, letters or figures of some word, phrase or sentence. In its origin it dates back to the beginning of written language, for the Chinese and Egyptian writings are composed of images, and the records of ancient tombs may be looked upon as a series of rebuses, says the Anti-quary. Just as primitive efforts in speech needed a great deal of accompanying gestures, so early writing required images to adequately delineate expression of ideas. There is this difference, however, between Chinese and Egyptian picture-writing and the medieval and modern rebus, viz., that whereas in the former the intention is simplification, in the latter it is mostly mystification. The ancient Greeks and Romans frequently used rebus on coins of their cities and islands. Thus the Greek colony of Selinus, in Sicily, which derives its name from the wild parsley growing there in profusion, was represented on the coins by an image of this plant. In the same way the coins of Rhodes bore a rose, those of Mothone a pomegranate, those of Phocne a seal, and the city of Ancona was represented by a bent arm, the word ankon meaning a bend. These guided types painters, or canting devices. Two Greek architects are said to have carved on their buildings the images of a mouse and a lizard, these two words in Greek being respectively identical with their names, which they were forbidden to inscribe in written language. Julius Caesar, according to Addison, used the image of an elephant on his coins, because his name happened in the Punic language to stand for that animal. This is, however, doubtful, as the elephant was commonly used as an emblem on coins. Among the seventeenth century unedited examples of the use of the rebus on Roman coins, as, e. g., those of Quintus Voconius Vitulus on which a calf is represented, and those of L. Aquilius Florus.

It is in Picardy that the rebus more especially has flourished in the past. Pierre Gringoire says that the rebus was a special product of that district, just as bayonets were associated with Bayonne and mustard with Dijon. The people of Picardy were so much pleased with this kind of wit that their use of it became almost a madness, and if all their work of this kind could have been collected it would have been enough, in the language of Des Accords, "to load ten mules." He was judged of no account who did not take part in this kind of amusement. In the time of Edward III the English began to admire these "foreign fooleries in painted Poesie." As Camden says, "and they which are trained with it express their conceit in speech did use to depaint it out (as it were) in pictures, which they called rebuses, whereof we have well finding their device. These were so liked by our English there, and sent over the streight of Calice, with full sail, were so fathered and fathered (although they were mostly ridiculous) by all degrees, by the learned and unlearned, that 'the was no body that could not hammer out of his mazzle, or deuise by his owne wit-craft, and picture it accordingly; whereupon who did not busie his brain to hammer his device out of this frege?" Sometimes, although we have supposed that the word "rebus" originated from the custom followed by the clerks of the Basoche of making every year at the time of the Carnival a number of lampoons, which were entitled "De rebus quae gerantur," or "Concerning things which have happened." These were read by the clerks, who were drawn through the streets in a cart. According to Merange this custom lasted in Dijon until almost 1630, when it was stopped by the police. The word "rebus" is accounted for as being a survival of this title, "de rebus." Littre says that a popular mind being able only to remember a portion of the expression. But it is more probable that the people used to understand the word as indicating the representation of ideas "by things."

An Earthquake In Mexico.

We have had an earthquake, says the Spectator, and I have never had a sensation like it, either physically, mentally, or spiritually. I was up here writing in my room, which opens with French doors on to a large stone balcony overlooking the court in which the fountain is. At the time there was an increasing trembling which I at first thought was the moving of furniture, though it seemed strange that it should shake a heavy stone building; but when I began to feel dizzy, I said to myself, "earthquake," and I then went out on to the balcony and sure enough, the whole building was visibly swaying and the large hanging lamps swinging like censers. There was no noise, which made it all the more weird. I ran down stairs and found every one hurrying into the street, it was in the afternoon, and in the wide streets the people poured into the Alameda (public gardens) at this point was a very impressive scene.

All the traffic had stopped still, and there were hundreds of people in little groups on their knees praying, some aloud, some to themselves, the men with their hats off. Those who were not kneeling were holding on to each other, as no one could stand steady. The lamp-posts were swinging like trees in a wind. Some people were calm, others in abject terror. I can't say that I was not afraid at all, though as soon as I was out of the building and free from the chance of any danger. The earth was not any longer trembling or shaking, but swinging which was most demoralizing. I felt something as though a solemn and disfilled nightmare had come true; or as though we had been suddenly transported to somewhere near the Pressure where the working of nature was going on. It was very strange indeed. No one was hurt in our part of the town, and I can't see how very little danger there really was, for there was plenty of time to get into the open.

Just six things are requisite
To make our home life sunny;
One is a cook of excellence,
The other five are money.

A SEA SERPENT STORY

An Instance of How Some Men Will Stretch the Truth.

A good instance of the manner in which "sea serpent myths originate is afforded by certain paragraphs which have recently appeared in the Australian papers. In its issue of February 23 the Melbourne "Argus" announced the discovery at Suwanee Island by the officers of a local steamer of the remains of a sea monster that had been stranded there some two months previously. The creature was said to be in such a bad condition that collecting its remains was a most trying task; but "two heads, the two backbones and part of the ribs" were secured, it is stated that there was "but one body, which had a double spine, and two distinct heads"; while the approximate weight of the animal was estimated at not less than seventy tons, and its length fully sixty feet! In the issue of the following day the skulls were said to be about three feet long, and to carry a pair of tusks at the tip of the lower jaw. On March 2, the same paper published an announcement that E. Waite of the Australian Museum had identified the remains as those of a "zithoid"—obviously a misprint for "ziphioid." It would thus appear that the alleged double-headed monster of seventy tons and sixty feet length was based on two carcasses of one of the species of beaked whales, which are of such comparatively frequent occurrence on the Australian coasts, and the largest of which at Meeen, the holiest spot on earth, where it was watched day and night by seven priests, each of whom kept one of the keys."

Vancouver's Prize Story.

Every newspaper office looks at every story from Vancouver if it is but one of the ordinary with a certain degree of probability. Every one suits that the art of the long bow in Vancouver, and have cultivated it well. Here is the latest, but you needn't believe it unless you want to.

Joseph Moody, once of New York, went into Alaska to hunt gold in 1891. He is now on his way home, having been recognized by a missionary at Dawson, under whose administrations he was converted years before.

Moody was carried off from his diggings by Swahner Indians eight years ago. They took him two hundred miles into the interior of Alaska. For two years he was a slave to the chief and then married the chief's daughter. On his royal father-in-law's death he became Chief. He combined four tribes under his leadership and converted them all.

His wife died a year ago, and now he is coming home laden down with gold.

This is rather above the usual flight of Vancouver imagination, but will serve as a specimen.

Appearance of Fish in Samoa.

One strange feature of this sea life of the tropics is the regular recurrence of migratory swarms of fish of very small size, that return in huge numbers year after year with such absolute regularity that the natives calculate on the event on a certain day in each year, and even within an hour or two of the day. One such swarm of fish forms the occasion of an annual holiday and feast at Samoa. The fish is not unlike the white-bait for which the English Thames has so long been celebrated, and each year it arrives at Samoa on the same day, in the month of October, remains for a day, or at the most two days, and then disappears entirely till the same day of the following year. Why it comes, or whence, no curious naturalist has yet discovered, nor had anybody traced its onward course when it leaves the Samoan group; but the fact is unquestionable that suddenly, without notice, the still waters of the lagoon which surround each island within the fringing reef become alive with millions of the panic-stricken fish, and for a single day and night, and then disappearing for a year as though they had never come.

A visit to Samoa enabled me to see this strange phenomenon for myself, and to witness the native feast by which it is celebrated year by year.—Lippincott's.

Oregon Girl Kills a Bear.

A few years ago O. D. Garrison's six-year-old boy succeeded in killing a deer, and now comes the news that a 200-pound bear was killed a few days ago by his 13-year-old daughter, Mabel, says the St. Helens Mist. Mr. Garrison lives on Scappoose Creek. There are a good many bears there. Mr. Garrison and family, accompanied by Ed Grove and Paul Bonser, left for a little hunting excursion to Bald Mountain, and it was agreed that if a bear was sighted Mabel was to have the first chance at his life. As luck would have it, they had not proceeded far when one was seen 150 yards ahead, and a rifle was immediately handed the little girl by her father, and she was told to take good aim. At the first shot old Bruin fell over dead, with a bullet in his head.

How to Develop the Voice.

"I have often thought," pursued Hoskins, "of recommending Signor Santilli to take the girls out on excursions on a locomotive and have 'em exercise their voices while the whistle was blowing. It's my belief that it would do more to develop their voices than all the exercises that he makes them sing at the piano. He makes a match between a girl and a piano, and requires the girl to conquer the piano and the piano. Now if he'd match his girls against a steam whistle and the rattling of a locomotive at high speed, he'd find that they develop twice as much voice in the course of a month as they can develop according to his way of teaching."—His Daughter, by W. L. Alden.

Lizard Orchid Found Again.

The rare lizard orchid, which has been lost to the British flora for half a century, has just been discovered on Wye Downs, near Ashford, Kent, by the professors at the Southeastern Agricultural College, Wye. The discovery is considered to be very important one, and steps will be taken to prevent the choice plant being again lost sight of.—Birmingham Post.

A VALUABLE RELIC.

A PRICELESS HAIR FROM THE GREAT MAHOMET'S BEARD.

"A Talisman That Has More Than Once Saved My Life, and Has Also Brought Me Good Fortune" Says The Owner, Mr. Tahar.

A hair from the great Mahomet's beard is now in New York.

It has been here for weeks and its occult presence may account for some of the funny things that have happened in the slums.

The hair was brought to this country by Hadji Tahar, a Moorish merchant in New York. It is several inches long, is faded gray-brown in color, and, despite its great age of 1,300 years, it is in good preservation.

Mr. Tahar keeps it in an elaborate inlaid case, which is in turn inclosed in six other cases, each separately locked by a different key.

Nobody needs to be told that Mahometans swear "by the beard of the Prophet." It is in their eyes the most potent of charms, and Mr. Tahar firmly believes that his single hair of it has brought good luck in turn to one tribe after another of desert dwellers, working many miracles, until it came into his keeping. It has saved his life. He never goes on a journey without it.

"The relic was laid away in the sixth century," said Hadiji Tahar to a newspaper man, "in a shrine of the Kaaba at Mecca, the holiest spot on earth, where it was watched day and night by seven priests, each of whom kept one of the keys."

Holding the relic carefully, Mr. Tahar showed it to the reporter. The outer box is of wood, dark and polished. The last one of the series is of platinum, and looks like a solid piece of metal. A sacrilegious hand could not break it open by hammering, but when its owner touches the secret spring it flies open at once.

"There is but one other relic like it in the world," said Hadji Tahar. "It is sung in Moslem song and celebrated in history. I would part with my life rather than lose this little case. I have made six trips to Morocco; I have often been in deadly danger—shipwrecked twice and thrown among lepers and yellow-fever patients.

"Once when I was wrecked in the Mediterranean I was one of the few who survived. It was the talisman that saved me. It has been successful in trade with its help. I am never without it."

The Bishop Under Suspicion.

A Rochester woman vouches for the following story of an experience that Bishop Potter, of New York had in Connecticut:

Some time ago, the story goes, the Bishop went on a visit to friends in Connecticut. While there he was asked to preach in a small church near Stonington. The main support of the little parish was a wealthy widow, a devout churchwoman, and a friend of the Bishop. She invited the prelate to dinner, adding that she would consider it a privilege to offer him shelter over night. As the next train out of the hamlet left at 7 o'clock Monday morning, the Bishop accepted her invitation.

A couple of hours after the Bishop had left the house of Mrs. H., who was a woman of a rather impetuous nature, discovered that a hairbrush and comb were missing from the room occupied the previous night by Bishop Potter.

Hardly realizing what she was doing, the woman hurriedly dispatched the following note to the Bishop in New York:

"Dear Bishop: Is it possible hairbrush and comb were put in your grip by mistake?"

The following day Mrs. H. received this reply by telegram: "Poor, but honest. Look in the upper drawer."

High Art In Cookery.

Scalloped Oysters.—Select firm, plump oysters, and scallop them evenly and neatly with a pair of sharp scissors. Now, with a needle threaded with pink silk, if for a pink tea, or blue if you wish Blue Points, work a buttonhole stitch around the scallop. When finished, press carefully on the wrong side with a hot iron.

Shirred Eggs.—Carefully remove the shell from a fresh egg, and hold the white and yolk firmly in the left hand. Now, with a fine needle and thread, gather the material in straight rows about half an inch apart. Draw up to the required fulness and fasten gently the ends of the thread.

Snow Pudding.—Take about four quarts, any four and a half, of fresh snow. Wash in several waters and put it to soak in hot water over night. In the morning, when it is all set to the fire to rise, add some melted glue, and set aside to cool.

Chicken Patty.—This dish is a lost art, as Patti is a chicken.

RUNAWAY GIRL WAS FOUND IN WESTFIELD.

Fled From Home to Escape Mother's Anger.

SHE LIVED AT SPRINGFIELD.

TOLD A DIFFERENT STORY TO THE WESTFIELD AUTHORITIES.

James Connolly Came to Westfield Monday Looking for His Lost Daughter—Identified Strange Girl Picked Up Saturday Evening as His Daughter—She Ran Away to Escape Punishment.

Westfield, Aug. 8.—Kate Connolly, the twelve-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Connolly, of Westfield avenue, Springfield, who disappeared from home Saturday, has been found in Westfield. Saturday night she was found at the depot here by Officer Todd and taken to the home of John Tobin on North avenue. The girl was well dressed and spoke like a girl who had attended school regularly.

To the overseer of the poor she told a wonderful story of wandering about the country. According to her story she lived at South Orange with her mother up to about nine months ago when the latter died and she was taken to Philadelphia and lived there with an aunt until recently when she was brought to New York and placed to live with another aunt, who last week sent her to Summit to work as a nurse girl. Saturday she was discharged, so her story goes, and she walked to Westfield.

James Connolly came to Westfield last night on his way to Fanwood, where a band of gypsies are encamped, thinking that she may have been taken by them, and heard while here of a girl having been found. Officer John M. C. Marsh went to the home of the Tobins and asked the girl if she wanted to see her father, and she said she had no father, but that she was willing to see the man who said he was her father. When Mr. Connolly arrived the girl said that she had run away from home because her mother had threatened to kill her.

It seems that the girl had borrowed her sister's bicycle, and gone to Summit, and getting caught in the shower Saturday had gotten the wheel wet, and that when the mother is alleged to have said she would kill her, the girl's father promised the police here that the girl should not be punished. In reference to her mother having said that she would kill her he stated that she didn't mean it, but, he said "that's the Irish of it."

TANDEM AND CARRIAGE COLLIDED.

Came Together Accidentally on North Avenue Monday Evening

S. C. Crane, of East Secon t street, and J. Harry Green, of Verdon avenue, were riding a tandem wheel on North avenue Monday afternoon about 6 o'clock. In turning into Park avenue they accidentally collided with a carriage in charge of A. D. Thompson. The young men were thrown from their wheel and had a narrow escape from being run down and seriously injured. Their wheel was somewhat damaged, and Mr. Crane sustained a few injuries about the legs, and his trousers were torn at the knee. The accident was said to be unavoidable. Mr. Thompson's rig was not damaged to any extent.

Charles Perrine Discharged.

Charles Perrine appeared before City Judge Runyon Tuesday morning, charged by Miss Carrie Conger, of 305 East Fourth street, with assaulting her and scratching her neck There was a fight. Perrine pleaded not guilty and explained that the scratches were made by her son. Some rather strong statements were made by both sides. Isaac P. Runyon appeared for the prisoner. The Judge declared that Miss Conger failed to make any case and discharged the prisoner.

Saw Dewey Do It.

On board the Bingo, Bangalore, which has just reached New York, is a steward from Plainfield. His name is Horton and he formerly resided in the borough. He has a curious history to relate. He shipped on a German collier, bound for the Philippines. He saw Dewey destroy the Spanish fleet and afterwards bombard the city of Manila. The Germans on the ship were very strong in their feelings against the Americans.

E. M. French Represented Somerset.

Hon. Elston M. French, of the borough, was present at the conference of the Democratic State committee held at Asbury Park Monday. He represented the county of Somerset, he was the only member from Somerset present.

Sold at Constable's Sale.

Constable Weaver Monday sold at constable's sale a stump puller, chains and pulley, the property of Robt. McNabb, of Oakwood avenue. The property was bought by Chas. McNabb for $50. Judgment was secured by Joshua Loizeaux.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a benificent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent package and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the indifferential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are bought I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, believe me, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

A NEW STYLE package containing the RIPANS TABULES packed in the paper covers of five cent packages, instead of the bottles containing FIVE GRAINS, is now for sale at druggists. This is more economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (12 tabules) can be had by mail by sending fifty cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL CO., No. 10 Spruce street, New York. Ten cartons for fifty cents. THE TABULES will be sent for five cents. RIPANS TABULES may also be had of some druggists, who sell the bottles containing seventy-two tabules at seventy-two cents, and of others at seventy-five cents.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I always employed a physician and did so the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to get them from a druggist. I found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $25 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar. At the time of this interview there were present two daughters of the speaker, who objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued, it may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. Of course about my case in the papers enabled some other person similarly affected to be as equally benefited as I have been. I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

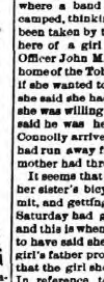
4 US
AFTERBATH



It makes the skin white and soft, removes blotches and dandruff and all eruptions from the person.

For the Head and Hair and Body.

The body and limbs of every child should be rubbed with 4 Us after every bath. Just enough dropped in the palm of the hand to rub over every part of the surface of a child, once a day will keep the skin soft and white, the pores free from getting clogged with impurity passing out from the system. A teaspoon full is sufficient to moisten the cuticle (skin covering) of a grown person. The effect is wonderful: pimples on the body and face are entirely removed by a few applications of the 4 Us. Druggists sell it.

BOWLING LEAGUE WILL BE REVIVED.

Although Journal Trophy Has Been Won.

NOW ROSELLE'S PROPERTY.

SAME CLUBS WITH EXCEPTION OF ELIZABETH ARE EXPECTED.

No Move Taken as Yet But Park Club and Roselle Casinos are Anxious to Continue Good Times of Last Season and Will Soon Start Ball Rolling—Elizabeth Lost Interest in the League During Last Season.

It is rather early to think about bowling yet but the enthusiasts in the game in Union county are already beginning to wonder what the prospects are for an active season during the coming winter. The situation this winter will differ considerably from that of past seasons. The handsome trophy, presented by the Elizabeth Daily Journal, which has been battled for during the last three seasons, is no more a factor in bowling circles. Last winter the Roselle Casino team won the trophy for the third consecutive time, thereby becoming the permanent owners of the handsome cup.

During the competition for the cup the teams of this section, including the one from the Park Club, of this city, have been organized under the name of the Central Journal Bowling League. To the victor in the league tournament went the cup. The Elizabeth Journal has done much to encourage honest amateur sport in the county. The offering of the trophy was one of its many acts to advance legitimate sport. Last year The Journal seemed to take but little interest in the tournament, and there seems little chance of a new cup being offered by that paper.

The success of the last winter's contest and the good time furnished the contestants will probably result in the league being continued, if for only such a prize as the members are able to put up. The Park Club will be undoubtedly represented, as will the Westfield Club, the Roselle Casino and the Cranford Country Club. Elizabeth has been defeated so much, and interest has waned since the dissolution of the old Elizabeth A. C., that it is hardly probable that the county seat will be represented. Bayonne may possibly decide to remain in the league. The Park Club, Westfield, Cranford and Roselle are surely fixtures, and, even if the four teams are all there is in the league, an exciting contest is assured.

No move has yet been made toward the organizing of the league for the new season. It is too early yet. The Park Club and Roselle are both particularly anxious to see the organization continued, and will probably take the initiatory move that will start the ball rolling.

OUTING FOR CAMERA CLUB.

Kodak Fiends Arranging for a Pleasant Time Labor Day.

The outing committee of the Plainfield Camera Club is arranging an all day outing for the members and their friends on Labor Day, September 4th. The site chosen is Stanley, a little hamlet on the Passaic river just below New Providence. It is a delightful spot and offers many attractions, including boating and fishing, in addition to the opportunity to the owner of the camera.

The expedition will start from the Babcock building at 8:30 o'clock. If a sufficient number express a desire to go, arrangements will be made to have a stage. The road to Stanley are in excellent condition for wheeling or driving and the day offered will surely be a very enjoyable one.

FAMILY IS QUARANTINED

SAD PLIGHT OF LUTHER MORRIS, WIFE AND LITTLE GIRL.

Diphtheria Breaks Out After it was Supposed That the House Had Been Fumigated to Kill Germs of Disease.

Once more a quarantine has been placed on the home of Luther Morris, West Front street, due to the fact that contagious disease has seized Mr. and Mrs. Morris and their little girl. It was only a short time ago that the parents lost their nine-year-old son with diphtheria, as a result of the use of milk furnished by a man who had the disease in his home. After the death of the boy every precaution was taken to exterminate all germs of the disease, and the house was thoroughly fumigated by the Board of Health. Notwithstanding this the children were kept in the country for some time afterward, and not allowed to return home until it was thought to be perfectly safe for them.

On Monday last they returned. In a very short time symptoms of contagious disease appeared and at once an examination was made by physicians, and it was soon learned that the members of the family should be sent quop sum sqll, 'pequinsuvmh day. The family has the heartfelt sympathy of the community and no doubt sufficient aid and assistance will be given to them.

AFTER HEALTH OFFICERS

WILLIAM ADDIS TO COMPLAIN OF NEW YORK STATE AUTHORITIES.

His Claims That They Have Acted In a Very Low Manner With Scarlet Fever Epidemic at Kenoza Lake, Sullivan County.

On as soon as certain facts can be established, and there seem to be good reason to think that they will be, Health Inspector William Addis will bring action against the health authorities at Kenoza Lake, N. Y., where his son's daughter was taken ill with scarlet fever and died. It appears that Mr. Addis and wife and daughter went to Kenoza Lake to spend their vacation. While there Mr. Addis was taken ill with what afterward proved to be scarlet fever. The physicians at that place seemed unable to determine exactly what the disease was and finally pronounced it gastro-enteritis, but they affirmed that there was nothing contagious about it and they allowed him to leave Kenoza Lake and come home, while ill with scarlet fever.

Mr. Addis mingled with various people in his work and slept at Fire Headquarters. His continued illness led to an examination by local physicians and it was decided at once what he had and he was taken to his home and quarantined.

Soon afterward Mr. Addis received a telegram that his daughter was very ill with the same disease, gastro-enteritis, but there is every reason to believe she had scarlet fever. Before the telegram reached this city the little girl died and her remains were sent to this city in an ordinary casket, not hermetically sealed.

The son of W. J. Lukey, of Second street, is at the same place ill with the same disease. Mr. Addis has called the attention of the local and State health authorities to the matter and it is expected action will be brought against the authorities in Sullivan county, New York.

COLORED PEOPLE'S EXCURSION.

Sunday-Schools of Churches Spent the Day at Boynton Beach.

Seven cars simply heaped with dusky humanity rolled away from the North Avenue station at 8:10 o'clock yesterday, bound for Boynton Beach. It was the annual outing of the Sunday-schools of the Calvary Baptist, the Fillmore Baptist and the Mt. Zion A. M. E. churches. What a time there was before the excursion train started. In variagated costumes they swarmed about the platform in all the excitement and anticipation of the trip. When it was suggested that the train was about to start, there was a wild rush for the cars and the excursionists fell over each other in their anxiety not to get left.

POST TO ATTEND ENCAMPMENT.

Winfield Scott Members Will Probably Go in a Body.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., is making preparations to go to Philadelphia next month to attend the annual National encampment of the organization. It is likely that the post will go in a body and there is some talk of taking a band of music along. The annual encampment of the Woman's Relief Corps will be held at the same time and the local members will probably go in a body. The encampments will be called on September 4th and continue for a few days.

EYLERISM CONDEMNED TO THE GOVERNOR.

State Charities Aid Association Takes Stand Against It.

HAS PROOF OF CRUELTY.

COMMUNICATION FROM D. P. HALL, CHAIRMAN OF REFORMATORY.

Denounces the Methods in Vogue at State Industrial School for Girls—Recommends Investigation and Change of Trustees—Has Sworn Testimony in Three Cases of Cruelty—Does Not Censure Governor.

The methods in vogue at the State Industrial School for Girls at Trenton have aroused much criticism. The press all over the State has been almost universal in condemning the methods of Mrs. Myrtle B. Eyler, the present superintendent. Now the State Charities Aid Association, through its committee on reformatories, has denounced the Eyler regime and asked the Governor that steps be taken to do away with the present government of the school. Tuesday David Prescott Hall, of Madison avenue, as chairman of the committee on reformatories, presented a communication of that effect to the Governor.

A local paper reporter called at the home of Mr. Hall last Tuesday and interviewed him regarding the substance of the communication and the stand the State Charities Aid Association had taken in the matter.

The board of managers of the association, Mr. Hall said, had heard of the severe methods used in the Industrial School several months ago, and through its general secretary, Miss Emily E. Williamson, of Elizabeth, quietly called the attention of Governor Voorhees to the situation there. The Governor visited the school and made some inquiries that it was hoped would prove effective. Then came the announcement of the injury of one of the girls so severe that she had to be taken to a hospital, which was immediately followed by a personal investigation by the Governor himself.

The board, Mr. Hall continued, had looked into the matter and in three distinct cases now held sworn affidavits regarding the cruelty of the superintendent. These cases were those that were exposed at the Governor's investigation.

There was no doubt in the minds of the members of the reformatories committee, he remarked, that the disciplinary methods of the superintendent were not the proper ones for the beneficial management of the school. As it was the duty of the association to call the attention of the Governor and proper authorities to any improper conditions in the State institutions, the communication to the Governor had been prepared to state how the association stood on the subject.

There was no intention, as some of the papers tried to make out, to censure the Governor. It was a moderate statement of facts, said Mr. Hall, every part of which could be backed up by sworn testimony that would hold good in a court of law. The State Charities' Aid Association had too much at stake to enter into any such affair without being fully aware of the complete details to which it referred. The members of Mr. Hall's committee are Thomas M. Gopsill, of Jersey City; Mrs. Isaac Weatherby, of Trenton, Dr. Laura H. Satterthwaite, of Trenton; D. M. Sawyer, of Montclair, and E. A. S. Lewis, of Hoboken. Dr. Satterthwaite was one of the physicians who examined the girls in the school and saw personally as to their condition. The other members of the committee have made no personal investigation.

The object of the communication, Mr. Hall explained, was to state exactly how the association stood and inform the Governor and the people of the State that the association believed in the charges brought against the management of the school and was prepared to sustain them with sworn affidavits in three particular cases at least.

Personally Mr. Hall said that he believed that the evil would soon be remedied. All the trustees but one have resigned, or have expressed a willingness to offer their resignation. This, he believed, would be the solution of the trouble. The Governor would then appoint a new board of trustees, and he didn't believe that it would be very long after that before Mrs. Eyler would lose her position as superintendent.

Regarding the object of the association in such cases an its belief and recommendations in this particular case, the communication to the Governor states.

"The New Jersey State Charities Association believe in the gravity of the charges which have been brought against the school, and is prepared to take part, if desired, in bringing about a thorough investigation, the results of which they trust will be the prevention in the future of the acts which to the minds of our members have brought discredit upon the charitable and reformatory methods in vogue in New Jersey as well as upon the fair name of our State. We may add that no investigation which shall not have this result will be satisfactory to our association, or consistent with its honorable record in the past.

"Our association is of the opinion, founded upon evidence satisfactory to its members, that the condition of affairs which now exists and has existed for some time past in the State Industrial School for Girls, is one which calls for the resignation or removal of the trustees of that institution and the appointment of the new board, in which there shall not exist, to phrase it mildly, the present division of sentiment between the members of the board. Such a pulling apart of itself alone in our opinion is a sufficient reason why the present members should resign and give place to a new board in which united counsels may prevail."

CLAMBAKE ON MOUNT.

ADVANCEMENT ASSOCIATION'S OUTING TO BE ON THE DRIVE.

Gov. Voorhees and Prominent Citizens From Other Cities Will be Invited—Object is to Boom Progressive Plainfield.

The principal business transacted by the Plainfield Advancement Association at Tuesday's meeting was with respect to a clambake to be held Wednesday afternoon, August 30th. Mayor Smalley was present together with a number of representative citizens who are members of the association.

It has been decided to hold the clambake on Johnston's Drive near the spring. This is a delightful place for an affair of this kind. Mayor Smalley said that he expected that fully 150 invitations would be sent to prominent citizens in this city and North Plainfield, and he trusted that a number of out-of town gentlemen would be invited. The purpose of the clambake, he said, was something more than to have a good time—it was the purpose of bringing before the public, and particularly the non-residents, the advantages of Plainfield as a business and residential city. He suggested that the members invite as many representative people from other cities as they choose—the more the better.

Secretary Martine suggested that the members of the press from other cities be invited. The suggestion to invite the members of the press of other cities was received with much favor.

Mr. Martine said that he should send an invitation to Gov. Voorhees and there was a strong possibility that he would grace the occasion by his presence. The Mayor impressed it upon the members the importance of securing the attendance of as many gentlemen from outside the city as possible, that they may be impressed with the advantages offered by Plainfield as a place of residence.

Tickets for the clambake will be on sale by the members of the association, and they can also be found at the drug store of Frank Rowley, on West Front street. Those who wish to become members can find the book enrollment there.

The bake is to be no inferior affair. There will be hundreds of clams and other refreshments with which to regale the inner man. As Mr. Martine very facetiously remarked, "the way to reach a man's heart was through his stomach."

Send in Your Old Mag zines.

The committee in charge of the euchre party held at the Hotel Hunterston on August 10th, would be glad to receive donations of magazines or other reading matter to be sent in their box to the soldiers at Manila. Contributions will be received at the hotel until Monday next. Mark packages "Book Committee."

A Public Baptism.

For the first time in many years public baptism in a stream of water in this city will take place next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, in Green brook, near Water street, when Rev. Mr. Foster, of the Second Christian church, will immerse four candidates.

MORTIMER NEED NOT PAY HIS CREDITORS

Court Decides Collections Cannot Be Made From Trust Fund.

DEBTS AS PROOF OF NEED.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK CANNOT ENFORCE ITS CLAIM.

Mortimer's Creditors Got the Former to Make a Note for $5,000, Which They All Indorsed, the Proceeds Being Used to Wipe Out His Debts—The Bank Had Power of Attorney.

New York, August 16—Judge Russell, of the Supreme Court of New York, has refused to interfere with the trust fund of $50,000 set apart for John Mortimer, formerly of Plainfield, under the will of his mother, Frances Russell Mortimer, or with the income derived from it, although some of the young man's creditors contended that the income was more than sufficient for his needs, and that the surplus, or a portion of the principal, should be used in payment of his debts.

Mr. Mortimer is at present a resident of Brooklyn. He has a wife and three children. His mother died in April, 1894, leaving a large estate, divided into four parts, one being placed in the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, the income to be applied to the benefit of her son John, and upon his death the principal to be conveyed to his issue unless he otherwise directed by will. The income of the fund is $2,400 a year. Some of his creditors insisted that he was living extravagantly, and should curtail his expenses so that there might be a surplus of his income to be devoted to the payment of his debts.

Among his creditors is the First National Bank, of Plainfield, for about $5,000 on notes for money advanced to Mortimer. He at one time hoped to reduce the amount of his debts by giving the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company a power of attorney to apply $1,500 annually towards these claims, thinking he might be able to live on $900 a year. He soon discovered that this was impossible, and when he was in actual want for the necessities of life for himself and his family was compelled to apply to the court for redress, and cancelled the agreement.

The First National Bank, of Plainfield, brought suit to have its claim made a lien upon the trust fund or its income, but Judge Russell dismisses the complaint. Speaking of Mrs. Mortimer's disposition of her property, Judge Russell says the statutory law has recognized the wisdom of allowing a father or mother to provide for a son or daughter so that they shall get an assured income during life, and that old rule of common law that this is subject to the claims of creditors is now abolished.

He says $2,400 a year is a very limited income for one brought up to luxury, and perhaps expensive habits, and, considering the exigencies of life, the requirements of social obligations, the right to consider the claims of charity and benevolence, in addition to expenses necessarily incurred to clothe the body and feed it and afford a narrow education to the children, it is utterly impossible for a court to draw with any degree of accuracy a line of the limit of the proper expenditures for living which shall place any portion of this income beyond the boundary.

That, without evidence of extravagant expenditures, debts have incurred beyond the income, he says, well illustrates the difficulty of a decision by the Court that the income of the trust fund is so large as to justify placing its forcible hand upon the surplus and handing it to creditors who have trusted the recipient of the income with proper opportunity of knowing what his legal claims to property were.

The compact entered into between Mortimer and the First National Bank was one of the most unusual methods for collecting money ever devised in New Jersey.

For several years Mortimer resided in this city, where he became heavily involved in debt with local merchants. Unable to collect their bills from Mortimer, a number of his creditors prevailed upon Mortimer to raise a note for $5,000. The creditors then endorsed the note and the bank agreed to discount it if given the power of attorney to collect $1,500 of his annual income until note was paid. Mortimer agreed to do this when pressed by his creditors, and the bank advanced the money, which was divided among the interested creditors.

Subsequently Mortimer moved to

BIG TOOL COMPANY ELECT

AN $8,000,000 COMBINATION HAVE CHOSEN THEIR OFFICERS.

E. C. McKinney, of Hamilton, Ohio, Chosen President of the Concern—A. C. Stebbins is a Vice-president.

The Niles-Bement-Pond Company organized at Trenton, Monday, at which time articles of incorporation were filed which consolidates the interests of the biggest tool manufacturers in this country at a meeting Tuesday afternoon and elected officers as follows: President, E. C. McKinney, Hamilton, O.; first vice-president, James K. Cullen, Hamilton, O.; second vice-president, A. C. Stebbins, Plainfield; third vice-president, Walter L. Clark; treasurer, Charles L. Cornell; secretary, E. M. C. Davis, all of New York.

The Pond Tool Company, of this city, is in the combination which, it is stated at their office, is no new thing. They say that the present regime has been in force for a year, and that the consolidation is simply to bring together the interests of all these concerns. There will be one agency for the big concern probably at 136 Broadway, New York, and all other agencies will be abolished and a saving of a great deal of money will result.

CARRIAGE OVERTURNED

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON BLAMES L. M. FRENCH'S COACHMAN.

Says the Latter Was Careless in His Driving—Mr. Coddington Was Thrown Under Vehicle and Somewhat Bruised.

Lewis B. Coddington, accompanied by his wife, was driving into town about 8 o'clock yesterday a.m., when he came into collision with a business wagon belonging to L. M. French and in charge of the latter's coachman. Mr. Coddington was riding in a surrey. He claims that when on Leland avenue, between the railroad and North avenue, the driver of Mr. French's conveyance ran into him. Coddington's wagon was upset and he was thrown beneath the wreck. Mrs. Coddington jumped from the surrey when the vehicles came together and escaped serious injury. Mr. Coddington was bruised somewhat about the shoulders.

His carriage was completely wrecked. The horse took fright and ran back toward home. Mr. Coddington told a Daily Press reporter that the accident was due to the carelessness of Mr. French's driver, who, he maintains, deliberately ran into him. After the accident the man drove on, not stopping to ascertain the result of Mr. Coddington's injuries.

Mr. Coddington says he will begin an action against Mr. French's coachman to recover damages. He has placed the matters in the hands of a Plainfield lawyer.

MISS COLLIER TO STUDY MEDICINE.

High School Graduate Will Become a Fair M. D. Some Day.

The many friends of Miss Mary Evans Collier, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Collier, of East Sixth street, will be surprised and pleased to learn of her recent success and determination. Miss Collier graduated last June from the Plainfield High School and decided to take up the study of medicine. Before she could enter a college in New York she was obliged to secure from the Regent of the University of the State of New York a certificate to the effect that satisfactory evidence had been produced that she had completed her course of studies in this city. This she has just received and on October 4th next she will enter the New York Medical College, a woman's institution in New York city, and will take the four years' course.

Miss Collier's ambition is to become a physician and her friends will all join in wishing her success in her undertakings. She has talents which will be of great benefit to her in her studies and profession and will no doubt complete the course with honor and credit.

Ethan Lanphear an Author.

Ethan Lanphear has published a second book since he was 81 years of age, entried "Observations of Religious Practices and Preaching for Eighty-one Years on Various Subjects That Are Detrimental to Christ's Church." It is a book of 49 chapters and 304 pages. He proposes to give every pastor of a church in our city one from asking for it, including North Plainfield and the bordering towns of the city

New Trolley Cars.

It is reported that the Plainfield Street Railway Company has placed an order for a large number of new cars for their road, which is necessary on account of the extensions of the road.

AN HONORABLE FIRM SUSPENDS BUSINESS.

VanEmburgh & Son Assigns For Benefit of Creditors.

TO PAY DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR

FORMER JUDGE W. R. CODINGTON NAMED AS ASSIGNEE.

This Action Taken Now While All the Creditors Will be Able to Secure Full Payment of Their Bills—No Preferred Creditors—Goods to be Inventoried and Then Closed Out for What They Bring.

One of the oldest, if not the oldest, and best known dry goods firms in this section, Tuesday assigned to W. R. Codington in trust for the benefit of their creditors. G. L. VanEmburgh, the senior member of the firm, has been in the dry goods business in this city for 20 years or so. The firm have long ago established a reputation as reliable merchants and have maintained that reputation to the present time.

Business, however, has been such during two or three years past that it was impossible for the firm to longer continue without a sacrifice to the injury both of the firm and their creditors, and sooner than continue under such circumstances the firm considered it more honorable to discontinue and pay their creditors while they had something to pay with, rather than continue a losing business.

The store will remain closed for a few days for the purpose of enabling the assignee to inventory the stock. It will then be opened and the goods sold for such prices as can be obtained. The stock is in first-class order and up to-date, and it is expected that the creditors will be paid 100 cents on the dollar. The firm have not preferred any creditors, and the stock is free and clear of encumbrance.

The public will regret to learn of the failure of this well-known house, and it is hoped that they may see their way clear to some day in the future again resume business.

WANTED A SURE COUNT.

Water Company Superintendent Bothered Street Railway Construction.

Westfield, August 16—The work on the construction of the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company's line through Westfield was temporarily stopped yesterday afternoon, owing to the action of Thomas Doud, of Plainfield, superintendent of the Union Water Company. The railway employes were securing water from one of the hydrants of the water company on Broad street for the purpose of wetting down the street, where macadamizing was being replaced, when Doud stopped the proceedings by demanding that the company station a man at the hydrant to count the loads of water, which were to be paid for at the rate of ten cents a load. A. A. Gaddis, representing the company, tried to arrange matters with Doud, but was unable to, and the work was suspended until Frank Bergen, of Elizabeth, president of the water company, could be communicated with. He ordered that the railway company be allowed to take all the water that they needed.

COULDN'T PROVE COCK FIGHTS.

Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals' Case Came to a Fiasco.

Westfield, August 16.—The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals met with defeat yesterday when it tried to convict John L. Titus, of Linden, of participating in a cock fight in a hotel in that town. Sebastin Petrie, a Spaniard, was the only witness for the prosecution. He swore he saw the cock fight through the transom of a door, but a number of other witnesses rebutted the evidence and the jury brought in a verdict of acquittal. There are four other persons charged with being in the same fight, but the outcome of Titus' case will probably end the prosecution.

NEW CENTRAL OFFICIAL.

Charles Register Appointed Superintendent of Bridge Construction.

The position as superintendent of bridge construction on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, recently vacated by R. J. Swackhamer, of Dunellen, who held the same for many years, has been filled by the appointment of Charles J. Register, of Wilmington, Del., who has now fully entered upon his duties. Mr. Register has his office in Jersey City. It is understood that he has had a large experience in bridge work and is well fitted for his new position.

Our Young Folks

ACROSTIC POEM.

Never, never let us tarry, as we go the way of life,
Ever fearless and undaunted, let us battle through the strife.
Verily, 'tis hard to follow in the way that conscience shows,
Even he who plants the seedling, still must tend the flower he sows,

Rendering what God has given, into gentle harmony,
Sowing through the coming harvest we may never, never see,
And although death soon o'ertakes us, when this mission we fulfil,
Yet, although the world forgets us, virtue will remember still.

Dare, then, to exist and labor, close to Mother Nature's breast,
In this world our tasks await us, and we have no time to rest,
Even though the way be dreary, God must know that all is best.

OUR LITTLE GRAY HELPER.

Poorly Equipped by Nature, Yet He Does His Work Well.

We have a little gray helper who cannot hear, nor see, nor make any noise. He wears a little gray coat, and he lives in tiny caves which he burrows out for himself. Our little gray helper has no feet, so he crawls.

He works busily for us all day in the ground under our feet, coming out chiefly at night to get his food. Then he does not take anything which anyone wants, but only fallen leaves and bits of stuff which no one cares about, and which are best out of the way.

Although much less fortunate than we, having neither legs, nor feet, nor hands, nor eyes, nor ears, he has all that is necessary to the performance of the work he has to do; and since our little gray helper has all he needs, and does his work, and does it well, we may think of him as being quite content and happy. And since the work that he does for us is very necessary and important work, and since he does it exceedingly well, we need not regard him with less than respect.

He has a system of blood vessels, a nervous system, and—yes, a brain. When you come to consider him under a microscope and in relation to the work he has to do, he is quite an interesting and curious bit of mechanism. He uses his brain, and has wisdom to know what to eat and how to get it. Though he has neither eyes nor hands, before taking anything into his cave, he examines it carefully by means of his one sense (touch), and with his little upper lip, which the scientists call prostomium. This lip is very sensitive.

He is prudent and thrifty, always dragging into his little house enough to secure him against the coming day, for blind and deaf as he is, he knows it is not wise to be out in the daytime, for the birds and their babies like him entirely too well.

He also knows that, being of a chilly nature, he will need to be wrapped up a bit when he goes to sleep in his cave, so he makes his own little bed of blades of grass and bits of leaves which he has dragged in with the little lip that does so much. He seems to like fresh air when he can get it, so he rests with his head near the mouth of his cave; and Mother Nature, realising that this might give Robin Redbreast an unfair advantage of him, provided him with a head-covering darker than the rest of his coat, and very nearly the color of earth.

Great Names.

This game can be played by as many as like to take part.

Every player is provided with paper and pencil, and at a given signal each begins to write down on the paper all the names of celebrated people that he can recall, beginning with the letter "A"—musicians, artists, authors, Bible characters, or any others—only the player must be able to prove whether he really lived and what he was. One of the players must time the game with a watch. He gives, say, three minutes for the letter "A," and by that time all must stop writing. Then go on with all the letters of the alphabet, giving the same time for each. The one who has the largest number of names is the winner.

The Bells of Cologne.

If you want to hear the "bells of Cologne" just take a silver tablespoon, tie a piece of string around the slender part of the handle so as to have two ends of the string. Wind an end of the string around the first finger of each hand, placing the tops of each finger in each ear. Allow the back of the spoon to strike the edge of a wooden table.

Mabel Wanted to Know.

Little Mabel was visiting in the country and saw some little pigs for the first time. What attracted her attention most was the twist in their tails, and after looking at them in wonder for quite a while, she asked: "Say, grandpa, does the piggies' mamma put their tails up in curl papers every night?"

Colors in the Soap Bubble.

The beautiful colors seen in the soap bubble arise from the fact that the bubble, being very thin, reflects light from both the outer and inner surfaces of the film.

FASHION'S SIMPLICITY.

It Does Not Imply a Decrease of Expense.

The fashionable gown is usually simple in appearance, but its exquisiteness of cut, fit and finish compensate for its lack of elaboration. Elegant simplicity is the order of the day, and the tailor made gown leads the van of out of door gowns. In Paris walking is a fashionable amusement, and very elegant costumes are worn by promenaders in the Bois de Boulogne, where society takes exercise on foot, on horseback or in its carriage. Tailor made costumes of thin cloth of most delicate tones—cream, pale blue, heliotrope, white, water green, nastic, light gray—are enjoying special favor and are certainly very charming. In more sober and subdued tints such gowns also predominate in the city streets.

The style of skirt varies but little. Always tight at the top and molded to the figure, flat trimmings only are employed for it, such as stitched bands, heavy cording, embroidery and galloon. The skirt being long, it is fitted in the back, the lining of bright silk being thus revealed.

The bodice is usually a bolero or a short jacket, but the bolero is the smarter, and its fronts are generally a little elongated. A blouse is worn beneath, silk and gauze being now less fashionably employed than the finest lawn, tucked, puffed, embroidered and covered with delicate lace.

The jacket illustrated is of cloth, with applications of embroidery. It is close fitting at the back, but straight in front, crossing to the left with a single rever faced with grosgrain. The front is pointed, the basque being rounded at the sides. There are flaring wrists to the sleeves and a Valois collar.

OLD GLOVES.

The Many Purposes For Which They Are Useful.

Old gloves should not be thrown away as soon as they are discarded, for they are still useful in a number of ways after they are no longer fit for wear in the street. Probably everybody understands their value as a protection for the hands in gardening, rowing or cleaning a bicycle, and most persons have a few glove fingers laid away in reserve for use in case the hand is injured, but bits of glove kid may be utilized in many fashions. They are excellent for applying dressing to kid shoes, for making watch cases and pen wipers and for tying over the tops of bottles, in traveling, to keep the stopper secure. Suspenders may be mended with kid, spectacles, jewelry and finger nails polished with it. Strips may be cut from the clean part of the wrist of mousquetaire gloves, these strips to be neatly stitched upon the edge of the collar, cuffs and belt of a tailor made gown as an appropriate finish. There is material enough in the arms of long evening gloves to make pretty little shoes for infants, and those long arms usually go to waste, the hand part becoming soiled and worn long before the rest is defaced.

The little girl's dress illustrated is of dark blue summer cheviot. The skirt is stitched around the foot and trimmed with white mohair braid. The blouse bodice, which has a pointed yoke of white silk, framed in blue velvet, is trimmed with white braid and pearl buttons. The close sleeves are also trimmed with braid. The collar and the belt, which ties at the back with long ends, are of blue velvet. JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE SUMMER WARDROBE.

Transparent Materials and Fine Needlework In the Lead.

It is necessary to look back a long time, at least as far as 1840, to find a taste for thin, sheer fabrics and trimmings as pronounced as those which now prevail. One would naturally have thought, on observing the fashion of gowns to become more and more smooth and clinging, that substantial materials would be adopted perforce, but, on the contrary, never have organdies, cotton or silk muslins, linens, gauzes and lawns had a greater success.

For underwear, the finest and most transparent lawns and batistes are employed, the necessary fullness around the foot being obtained by superimposed flounces adorned with quantities of lace and embroidery. The lace chosen is of a kind to bear laundering, else it is of no value as a decoration for lingerie. Tucks and puffings are combined with needlework and lace to enrich the effects.

The cut shows a costume of pale violet barege. The skirt, which is in one piece, is trimmed with three rows of knotted silk fringe which descend in points in front, simulating a triple tunic. The bodice has a draped front which closes obliquely with large, soft revers, bordered with narrow fringe. A large choux of pansy velvet is placed at the left side, and the draped belt is of pansy velvet. The cravat and plastron are of white mousseline de soie and lace, the hat of pansy straw trimmed with violet gauze and purple poppies.

MILLINERY NOTES.

Hats, Veils and Collars For Summer Wear.

Very plain hats are used for morning wear and for bicycling, and a white veil is the rule. Various styles of veil are seen, plain tulle or net, net dotted with black chenille, and white lace wash veils all being in favor.

Sailor hats have wide brims, and the crown is pressed down in front. They are trimmed with a ribbon band or a scarf of mousseline de soie and often have one long feather.

The high collars, which are still in vogue, are now made of the thinnest possible material, wired to preserve their flaring form. These collars are often adjustable and may be changed from gown to gown at will. When they are thus separate, the lower edge is usually finished with a rather deep fringe, and sometimes there is a cravat attachment in front.

Belts are quite narrow, and the favorite buckles are of wrought gold, silver or cut steel. Strong buckles of gun metal are also liked.

The illustration given today shows a bodice of plaid surah. It is gathered at the waist and has a short, full basque and a wide collar, which is bordered with lace and tied in a fichu knot. The collar and small plastron are of lace. The shirt sleeves have three tucks at the top, and the cuffs are edged with lace. The belt is of white kid.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

A Shrewd Man.

Many and strange are the methods the westerners adopt in money making. In the early days of Seattle a man pre-empted a site on the water front of the town. The law required that he have a house. Near by on the beach was a weather beaten hull of a vessel. He drew the remnant to his lot and started a second "Rudder Grange." It was not long before sites on the shore were in demand, and the shrewd "squatter" sold his lot for $250,000.

MODES AND FABRICS.

Summer Cloths—Tunic Skirts Versus Plain Ones.

The new cloths—and cloth is a fabric excessively fashionable at present—are becoming finer and finer, thinner and thinner, and it is now possible to adapt them to all sorts of flexible styles—draperies, plaitings and flounces—without fear of too much weightiness. These new cloths are very brilliant and compose very elaborate and fashionable toilets, usually enriched by embroideries and applications of silk or velvet.

The fashion of tunic skirts—which fashion is of great value to a fine or graceful figure, if it is properly worked out—has brought into prominence beaded or embroidered tulle, which is made up over a lining of silk. Fancy gauzes are also employed for the tunic, over a skirt of silk of the same color, and in the hands of an expert modiste the effect is charming; otherwise it is atrocious. For a tunic, the wearer must have good hips and a graceful carriage and should reach the medium height—a short woman appears to greater advantage in a plain skirt. If she must wear a tunic, however, because the edict of fashion prescribes them, let her beware of a short one or one arranged with drapery. The longer and simpler it is the better for her.

The bodice illustrated has a yoke at the back and an entire front of pale blue satin covered with an application of guipure. The lower part of the back is of straw bengaline and is cut with a coat basque. There are open, pointed fronts of the bengaline, which are held at the top by Louis XV knots of black velvet, from which twists of the velvet pass over the shoulders to the satin back. The top of the bengaline sleeves is of blue satin covered with guipure and is trimmed in the same way with black velvet.

THE WARDROBE.

Crepes de Chine In Favor—Useful Parasols.

Crepe de chine, that softest and most artistic of fabrics, is enjoying the highest fashionable estimation at present and composes some of the most charming model summer costumes. Its gray, russian and cerise tints are particularly charming, and it is shown in the warm and delicate colors as well. For tunics nothing could be more effective, it is so clinging and drapes so beautifully. There is a variety of new weaves, of different luster and size of rib, some having a fine surface, others being heavily wrinkled.

A parasol matching the costume is always elegant, but not always practicable, unless one has a large assortment of parasols, which is not probable. For women of moderate means the best course is to choose one or two of noncommittal shades, which can be carried with all gowns without being inharmonious. Black, white and beige look well with any color, and there are certain fancy silks in subdued tints which are also generally serviceable, such as plaids and broches in black and white, gray, ecru or fawn. As to the bandjes, those of natural wood, in the native color or stained green or blue, are the favorites in spite of many odd and fantastic novelties which are offered. If two parasols are to be purchased, it would be advisable to have one a sun umbrella, as it will do for general service, while the other, more ornate, may be kept for nicer use.

The girl's costume illustrated is of navy blue serge, the skirt having a deep circular flounce headed by a bias band of plaid silk. The little blue bolero is trimmed with stitching and black brandebourgs and opens over a waist of plaid silk, the collar and cuffs being trimmed with plaitings of navy blue taffeta. The high collar is of guipure. The tight sleeves are finished with stitching. JUDIC CHOLLET.

MILLINERY NOTES.

Both Flowers and Fruit Are Used as Trimming.

There are little hats entirely of flowers, trimmed with changeable ribbon, which are exceedingly attractive. For example, a toque made of mignonette is decorated with green and white changeable ribbon and another of Parma violets with straw and violet ribbon.

The veil is being omitted more and more frequently, even for informal occasions. Of course it is never worn upon occasions of ceremony. Speaking of omissions, the custom of a man offering his arm to a lady is now more honored in the breach than the observance. For a long time it has disappeared from ordinary daily life, although a former generation considered it essential to good manners. The only occasions upon which the custom has obtained of late years have been the walk in to dinner from the drawing room and the promenade in the ballroom between dances, but now promenaders are beginning to walk side by side without touching arms, and no doubt it will soon be possible for a woman to march in to dinner without actual support from her cavalier. Obstructionists will doubtless be able to trace back this change of manners to the higher education of woman and her adoption of the bicycle.

Cherries are a frequent decoration of hats this season. A model of light beige straw is very prettily trimmed with ecru lace and a quantity of cherries of different shades of red, with foliage.

The hat illustrated is of beige straw, the edge being violet, with beige tulle. At the side is a choux of rare ribbon, connected with another choux which rests upon the hair. A trail of pink convolvulus passes up over the crown.

SUMMER FASHIONS.

Humble Fabrics Exalted to a High Position.

Within the last few years many materials not before considered as belonging to the domain of dress have come into use for gowns, denim and crash being conspicuous among them, but this year there is a yet more striking innovation, burlaps, pure and simple, being introduced as a dress fabric. Of course it is not the coarsest, roughest kind of sacking. It is the comparatively smooth, even quality of the lightest weight used for wall hangings, etc., and is appropriately trimmed with incrustations of duck of a different color and with cotton or linen braid and tape in fancy patterns. An era of simplicity has begun, for, while these coarse goods are so largely employed for ordinary hot weather wear, swiss muslin, both plain and dotted, composes some of the nicest hot weather gowns.

Country hats of lawn and muslin are again in vogue. They are not particularly durable, but as they are inexpensive that is of little consequence, and they are extremely light and cool as well as attractive while they are clean and fresh. They are entirely composed of puffs and draperies of muslin, and the wearer can give them an aspect of originality by the addition of a knot of velvet or ribbon or a bunch of flowers and some quills.

The picture shows a novel tailor made redingote of very thin mastic cloth. It is tight, but forms a sort of stitched plastron in front, which falls from the neck to the foot and is adorned with wooden buttons. Bands of shirred silk are applied to the foot of the redingote and the sleeves in ornamental designs and also decorate the outside of the flaring collar. There is a narrow belt of the silk also.

THE FASHION.

Flowers Are Essential to the Mode of the Moment.

Flowers are fashionable, and, whether a woman cares for them or not, if she wishes to be in the mode she must wear them and decorate her house with them, and there is always room for new ideas on the subject of floral adornment for the home. A pretty Parisian fashion is to intertwine the hanging chandelier of the dining room with sprays of climbing roses, wistaria or honeysuckle vines.

With neutral tinted costumes, gray or beige, parasols of bright plaid silk are carried, which supply a gay note to the otherwise low toned gown. For light or bright toilets, however, there are white parasols, with lines or bands of the color of the gown as a border. For example, a white parasol to accompany a pink gown has a pink border and lining, and the light it throws upon the complexion is most becoming.

An extremely simple but very attractive gown is depicted which is suitable for the seaside or the mountains. It is of red and black mixed wool, the skirt, opening at the left side, being bordered there and round the foot with black mohair braid having a red edge. Small black buttons trim the skirt. The bodice, closing at the side and slightly draped, has revers and scalloped epaulets and is trimmed with braid matching that on the skirt. The plastron and collar are of plaited red surah, the belt of the trimming braid. The red straw hat is trimmed with red flowers and black quills.

Suggestions For Summer Traveling Attire.

The Louis Quinze bolero is fashion's favorite, and with good reason, for its form renders it becoming to all figures. It just reaches the waist at the back, while in front it is elongated in a point, or sometimes in rounded tabs.

Poplin is a revived fabric which is most serviceable and attractive for summer wear. It composes neat, cool tailor made gowns, highly suitable for traveling, as it sheds dust and is of light weight.

The sailor hat or the alpine, in some one of its many modifications, is usually chosen for wear during a journey. It is only the inexperienced traveler who appears in a hat loaded with flowers and other perishable and cumbrous trimming. A neat, plain straw, decorated with ribbon and quills or a buckle, is the only suitable thing, as it is easily put on and off and may be put in the rack of a car or exposed to dust and rain without noticeable disfigurement.

The cut shows a gown of periwinkle blue silk. The plain skirt has coquilles of plaited white mousseline de soie at the sides of the tablier. The tight bodice has a full guimpe and plastron of white mousseline de soie, with a high collar to match. The sleeves, which are of elbow length, are wrinkled and terminate in a frill of lace. The revers and belt are of white satin embroidered with silver, and there are silver buttons on the bodice. The hat of blue tulle is trimmed with bluets, part of which are so arranged as to rest upon the hair.

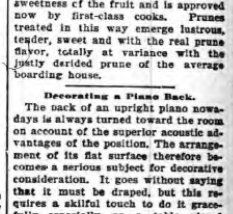
Rules to Observe When Buying Prunes.

When buying prunes, the California prunes will be found more satisfactory and far cleaner than the foreign fruit. Do not soak them over night, as that allows the prunes to break, while the syrup is not so clear. They should, however, be carefully washed, one by one, in tepid water, allowing them to stand in the water two or three minutes to "plump." Follow this by a second washing; then put in the saucepan, allowing a cup and a half of water to every cup of prunes. Simmer slowly on the back of the range or in the oven for two hours and a half, never allowing them to boil. If desired, sugar may be added, but the long, slow cooking brings out the natural sweetness of the fruit and is approved now by first-class cooks. Prunes treated in this way emerge lustrous, tender, sweet and with the real prune flavor, totally at variance with the justly derided prune of the average boarding house.

Decorating a Piano Back.

The back of an upright piano nowadays is always turned toward the room on account of the superior acoustic advantages of the position. The arrangement of its flat surface therefore becomes a serious subject for decorative consideration. It goes without saying that it must be draped, but this requires a skilful touch to do it gracefully, especially as a table placed against the board is apt to interfere with the tone.



A PRETTY PIANO BACK EFFECT.

A pretty arrangement is shown in the accompanying sketch. The drapery of embroidered Chinese silk is held at the two corners with fans, those on the left being of peacock feathers, and on the right of small Oriental bradded and embroidered straws. A couple of portfolios, with the boards covered with brocade embossed with gold and silver, are arranged to hold music, and are affixed to the left side of the piano above the other with ribbons to hold the outside lid slightly open.

An Invalid's Dish.

Prepare a young pigeon and lay it in a stew-pan containing equal parts of milk and white stock seasoned and boiling slowly. Not fat must be on it. Simmer the pigeon in this for half an hour, then take it out, thicken the sauce, boil it up and serve round the bird. A few peppercorns and a small onion are a great improvement to this dish.

Model Dish Towels.

A servant is much more likely to be fastidious in her dish washing and careful with the towels if she is provided with proper ones in the beginning. The ideal cloth for washing dishes is made by taking a square of cheese cloth, doubling it twice (making it four thicknesses) and quilting it in large meshes on the sewing machine. This makes a towel soft, thick, agreeable to handle and easily kept white.

A Kitchen Aid.

A double chopping knife should find its way into every well-equipped kitchen. Upon the theory that time is money, how much of it is wasted in chopping apples for the mincemeat, suet for the pudding, or ham for sandwiches, with a single-bladed, old-fashioned chopper that will only do half the work of a double one in the same time!

Luncheon Made Easy.

An appetizing dish for luncheon or supper, that requires neither great outlay of time, strength or money, is salmon loaf. To one can of salmon allow four crackers rolled fine, two well-beaten eggs, one-half cupful sweet milk, butter the size of an egg, salt and pepper to taste. Mix thoroughly, put in greased cans and steam one hour.

The Piscashion Popular Again.

The pincushion, for awhile supernatanted and retired from active service, is again out in force, and much larger than life. Many of the new cushions are almost the size of the top of the dressing table, and as ornate as fancy can devise and fingers execute.

When Making Curry.

Meats left from beef tea should be saved for use when making curry. The water draws out the flavoring and the stimulating principles of the beef, but the gelatine, which contains the greater part of the nourishment, is left undissolved.

Standard Facts in Cooking.

All dry materials should be sifted before measuring.

RICE AT WEDDINGS.

UNIVERSAL CUSTOM WAS BORROWED FROM PEOPLE OF CHINA.

They Tell a Story of How Peachblossom Used It to Great Effect at Her Wedding to the Famous Sorcerer Chao.

There are very few people who know that the custom of throwing rice at weddings is one borrowed from the Chinese, and fewer still who are cognizant of the interesting legend that makes the throwing of rice considered lucky by the Celestials. This is the story as told by a Chinaman:

"Long ago, in the days of Shang dynasty, some fifteen hundred years before the birth of Christ, there lived in the province of Silnasi, in China, a most famous sorcerer called Chao. It happened one day that a Mr. P'ang came to consult the oracle, and Chao, having divined by means of the tortoise diagram, informed the trembling P'ang that he had but six days to live.

"But P'ang was not satisfied, and, in order that there should be no mistake, to the fair Peachblossom he went, a young lady who had acquired some reputation as a sorceress, and to the tender feminine heart unfolded the story of his woe. Her divinations yielded the same result as Chao's—in six days P'ang would die—unless by the exercise of her magical powers she could avert the catastrophe.

"Her efforts were successful, and on the seventh day great was Chao's astonishment, and still greater his mortification and rage, when he met P'ang taking his evening stroll and learned that there lived a greater magician than he. The story would soon get about, and unless he could put an end to his fair rival's existence his reputation would be ruined.

"And that he how Chao plotted against the life of Peachblossom. He sent a go-between to Peachblossom's parents to inquire if their daughter was still unmarried, and, receiving a reply in the affirmative he befooled the simple parents into believing that he had a son who was wedding a wife, and ultimately he induced them to engage Peachblossom to him in marriage. The marriage cards were duly interchanged, the crafty Chao had chosen the most unlucky day he could select for the wedding—the day when the 'Golden Peasant' was in the ascendant. Soon after the bride entered the red chair, the spirit bird would destroy her with powerful beak!

"But the wise Peachblossom knew all these things, and said: 'I will go,' she said; 'I will fight and defeat him.' When the wedding morning she gave directions to have rice thrown out at the door, which the spirit bird seeing, made haste to devour, and while his attention was thus occupied Peachblossom stepped into the bridal chair and passed on her way unharmed."

And now the ingenuous reader knows why he throws rice after the bride; at least, that is how the Chinese explain the custom.

Poor Children of the Rich.

Childhood at Newport is in a bad way, to judge from the accounts of the boys' and girls' side of amusement. "Their main diversion," says an observer, "consists of entertaining each other at dinner and luncheon, an absurd custom introduced within a few years. When the truth is told that both luncheons and dinners are served on the same extravagant scale as that of their elders, ceremonious to a degree, with a parade of dress involved; and that by reason of after-dinner entertainments at late hours follow, and my little Miss and Master lie late o' mornings, one thinks its high time to set the fashion of farming out this little gentry. Some of the wiser society fathers and mothers need to set up in their neighborhood a farm estate, where their children shall pass their summers in a natural healthful way, guided and taught by tutors and governesses under a competent chatelaine's watchful eye and kind management. Gentlewomen would find congenial occupation in this new field, and the little 400 their future salvation.

NOT MUCH OF AN EATER

He Ate But Little, But You Ought To See the Welsh Eat.

Captain B. W. Morgan, every inch a Welshman himself, likes to tell this story when there is another Welshman in hearing, says the Pittsburg News. He went home to dinner one day and found a paperhanger at work in the house. He asked the time, and Captain Morgan told him it was noon.

"I guess I'll knock off and go home to dinner then," the paperhanger remarked.

"Stay and eat with us," the captain said, and the invitation was accepted.

Captain Morgan was attentive to his guest during the meal. He had a prodigious appetite. The captain helped him to most beef several times, until at last he had some curiosity to see just how much the fellow would eat without a limit. Finally the game was growing quite interesting when the fellow began to show signs of quitting.

"Will you have some of the plum pudding?" the captain asked him to revive his failing appetite.

"No, thanks," he replied, "I've had enough, I think."

"Why, take a small piece of the pudding," the captain urged; "it's genuine English plum-pudding, and homemade at that."

"Well, I don't mind trying it," he said.

The captain helped him to a section of the pudding weighing about a pound and he ate it with much relish. Then he shoved his chair away from the table and leaned back for an after-dinner chat.

"I'm not much of an eater," he said, not noticing the smile on the captain's face; "it takes very little to satisfy me. Say, you ought to see the Welsh eat."

"Are they hearty eaters?" asked the captain.

"Hearty eaters?" repeated the fellow. "Say, they eat like a lot of hogs."

The Japanese Woman.

The chief duty of a Japanese woman all her life is obedience; while unmarried, to her parents; when married, to her husband; in widowhood, to her son. In the "Greater Learning of Women" we read:

"A woman should look upon her husband as if he were Heaven itself, and thus escape celestial punishment.

"The five worst maladies that afflict the female mind are: Indocility, discontent, anger, jealousy and envy.

Without any doubt these five maladies afflict seven or eight out of every ten women, and from them arise the seven causes for divorce. A woman should cure them by self-inspection and self-reproach. The worst of them all, and the parent of the other five, is stillness."

The above extract shows us very clearly the position which women have, until quite recently, taken in Japan. As a German writer says, her condition is the intermediate link between the European and the Asiatic. On the one hand, she is treated as a subjected to no seclusion, and are as carefully educated as the men, and take their places in society with them; but, other hand, they have absolutely no independence, and are in complete subjection to their husbands, sons and other relations. Practically without legal rights, and under no circumstances can a wife obtain a divorce or separation from her husband, however great his offense. Notwithstanding this, in no country does one find a higher standard of morality than among the married women of Japan. Faithlessness is practically unknown, although the poor little wives must often have much to put up with from their autocratic lords and masters. They bear all, however, silently and uncomplainingly, their characteristic pride and reserve forbidding them to show to the outer world what they suffer. We Europeans might well in many respects imitate, and have still much to learn from our little cousins in the Far East.—Cornhill Magazine.

One Way of Making a Living.

There are many and various ways of making a living in this city, says the New York Times, and between "chasing eighths" in Wall Street and chasing potato bugs in Jamaica, the ways of gaining dollars are of wide range. One of those seldom seen by any except the people directly interested is the search of contractors for extensive waterfront improvements in the Navy Yard. Stringers, timbers, and planking of yellow pine and spiling of spruce have been used. The scow-load, and around the corner of the yard, in Little-st., some enterprising young men have started a woodyard. Knot ends, rejected planks, anything of wood that is found floating in the water after the scows are taken in out of the wet," dried, split and peddled around the neighborhood at prices which the kindling-wood people cannot touch, but which, low as they are, represent good wages for the work done.

"Man, It's Me."

She was a pretty child of four or five summers, as the knew it, says the New York Tribune. Her mother took care that the fact should not escape the observation of others and in this she was quite right, for a child is not to be miss. The other day the child was on dress parade in Central Park, and was naturally piqued by the fact that a man who sat reading on one of the benches in the Mall. Two or three times she passed him, and still he read on. At last she looked at him in amazement, and then, with a look of mingled incredulity and determination, she went up to him and—planted her foot on the pavement and said, "Man, it's me!"

TOMB OF ESTHER

Recent Explorations In Hamadan, Persia, Led to Its Discovery.

The tomb of Esther and Mordecai, the famous characters in the Biblical book of Esther, has been discovered in Hamadan, Persia, and the inscriptions on the sarcophagi and the tomb itself read and translated. This discovery is most timely, for some writers have tried to discredit the Biblical story and the festival of Purim, which goes back to it for a basis.

Every reader of Scripture is familiar with that strange tale of the Jewish maiden whose name was changed that King of Persia that he took her for his wife and placed her on his throne by his side. The Jews of Hamadan show this tomb of the hero and heroine of the Bible story to all travellers with no small pride, for in it lies their title to nobility, one of their own people having actually reigned with the king. This tomb has evidently been added to at various periods, and is now sixty feet long. The entrance is to the left of the center, leading into an outer passage. To the left is the tomb of some ancient savage and to the right the tomb of the king's uncle, with a stand bearing lamps and oil in front of it.

A wall separates the sacred part from this outer section. At its western end a door leads to the principal part of the tomb. To the right is Mordecai's tomb and to the left Esther's, separated from each by a corridor along which pilgrims pass going around the sarcophagi. In a niche is a scroll of the law, and an ostrich egg is suspended beneath the dome, as is the custom in all Persian tombs.

The sarcophagi are made of dark wood, evidently of great antiquity, and are covered with inscriptions in Hebrew. On Mordecai's sarcophagus is this inscription:

"Here lies the holy ark of Mordecai the Righteous. May his merits protect us! Amen."

The same inscription is repeated on each side of the coffin, beside these verses from the Bible:

"Now, in Shushan, the palace, there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, the Benjaminite, son of—

TOMB OF ESTHER AND MORDECAI.

"Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward."

"Therefore, my heart is glad, and my glory rejoices; my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt make me full of joy; in thy presence is fulness of joy, at thy right hand there are pleasures forever more."

On Esther's Sarcophagus are these inscriptions.

"Here is the ark in which is interred Esther the Righteous. May her merit protect us! Amen."

"Then Esther, the queen, the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai, the Jew, wrote with all authority, to confirm this second letter of Purim."

"And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim; and it was written in the book. And the king, Ahasuerus, laid a tribute upon the land, and upon the isle of the sea."

Facsimiles of the inscriptions have been taken from plaster impressions now in the possession of Dr. Zadoc Kahn, chief rabbi of France.

The Woman Porter of Mattinique.

At the age of nine or ten she can carry a heavy basket or tray containing a weight of from twenty-five or thirty pounds, says Chamber's Journal. She is then employed in petty peddling journeys with her mother, elder sister, or responsible female friend, walking barefoot as long as fifteen miles per day. At eighteen she is vigorous and tough as a mountain pony, and, like most mountain-bred women, she is remarkably active. She carries on her head a tray and burden of from 120 to 150 pounds, earning less than 30s. a month by travelling fifty miles a day in an climate, whether dry or fifty miles a day, always bearing a burden of over 100 pounds—for stones are added as the tray is emptied of merchandise, to retain the customary weight—and this for an income of a franc a day! Out of this franc she has her food and clothes to provide for, perhaps, and her clothes to get. Twenty francs a year will keep her in clothes.

A brief chemise and a light calico robe constitute her whole apparel. On her head she wears a soft toche, or pad, upon which the tait (tray) is placed. She wears no shoes; she needs none. After long use her feet become inured to something like india rubber, feeling no asperities of surface, bidding defiance to the sharpest flints. Her food is simple, a bowl of dry coffee or biscuits, a few sous for ragout, a few sous for some cheap liquor to mix with her drinking water; perhaps 15 sous in all. Her sleeping quarters might be expected to bring her daily expenses up to a franc; nevertheless, such is her ability to economize that she actually manages to live on her income, (which seems incredible,) but actually saves enough to set herself up in some simple business when her youth and physical powers decline.

Coral Velvet Hat.

Some of the hats seen at a fashionable milliner's are extremely original. One of these, represented in the illustration, is a toque, with the crown wide at the base and diminishing in width to the top. It is made of coral velvet embroidered all over with silver and steel. The brim, which turns up all round and is shaped into four corners, is ornamented with stitching.

It is split upon the left side, and is trimmed with a twist of coral velvet, made into a loop, which runs each side of the hat beneath the brim. In the split is a handsome strass crescent, in which are fixed two white ostrich feathers, upright. The sides and ends of these feathers are tipped with chinchilla.

History of Pocket Handkerchiefs.

Until the reign of the Empress Josephine a handkerchief was thought in France so shocking an object that a lady would never have dared to use it before any one. The word, even, was carefully avoided in refined conversation. An actor who would have used a han dkerchief on the stage, even in the most tearful moments of the play, would have been unmercifully hissed; and it was only in the beginning of the present century that a celebrated actress, Mlle. Duchesnois, dared to produce a handkerchief in her hand. Having to speak of this handkerchief in the course of the piece, she never could summon enough courage to call it by its true name, but referred to it as "a light tissue."

A few years later, says Woman's Life, a translation of some of Shakspeare's plays, by Alfred de Vigny, having been acted, the word handkerchief was used for the first time on the stage, and was received with indignation from every part of the house.

It is doubtful if even to-day French ladies would carry handkerchiefs if the word had not been introduced as the signal for adopting them.

The Empress Josephine, although really lovely, and bad teeth. To conceal them she was in the habit of carrying small handkerchiefs, adorned with costly laces, which she constantly raised gracefully to her lips. Of course, all the ladies of the court followed her example, and handkerchiefs then rapidly became an important part of the feminine toilet.

Dangers of Laughter.

It is surprising to learn from the highest medical authority in England that laughter may be injurious.

Laughter itself, cannot very well kill, but it may do harm. Hysterical girls and boys with kindred nervous affections are often given to immoderate laughter, which tends to increase nervous exhaustion.

Dr. Feilchenfeld relates an instructive case in which a little girl suffered from very definite cardiac symptoms after immoderate laughter. The patient was thirteen years old, and had previously been free from any sign of heart disease. After laughing on and off for nearly an hour with some companions, she suddenly felt stabbing pains in the chest and was seized with fits of coughing, followed by cardiac dyspnoea, very well marked. Feilchenfeld believes that the cardiac disease directly resulted from immoderate laughing.

Women Dress Artists.

Women are developing the new profession of the dress artist. Dress artists are professional shoppers, who go to the home of the woman who is too busy to do her own shopping, take an inventory of her needs, the contents of the pocketbook, and later provide her with an outfit selected especially for her. The commission received for this service varies from 85 to 85, and it is often added to by the store proprietors to whom the dress artists bring trade.

PROVINCE OF MATANZAS.

It Is One of the Wealthiest of the Island of Cuba.

There is but one safe ground to take with reference to any statistics regarding the island of Cuba, that is to accept nothing as more than fairly approximate. The province of Matanzas is the smallest of the six provincial districts of Cuba. It is given as covering 3,300 square miles, an area little less than that of the island of Porto Rico, and something under the half of the area of the State of New Jersey. The Cuban Matanzas province appears larger than Havana province, but the area of the latter is increased by the inclusion of the Isle of Pines. At the beginning of the Cuban war the population of Matanzas province was probably a little over 270,000. It is now estimated at about 190,000. Nearly one-third of its people have died within the past four years. The death rate has included an abnormal percentage of adult males.

In 1894 the province was said to contain, in round figures, 300,000 head of cattle and 100,000 head of horses. Today the cattle are estimated at 10,000 and the horses at 5,000. The wealth industry of the district is sugar-raising. It includes some of the best sugar lands on the island. In 1894 there were 108 sugar-mills in operation, and very fifty-five, of which forty-two are in operation. In 1894 the province exported something over 400,000 tons of sugar, or about one-third of the entire output of the island. Still using rough, though approximate estimates, that amount would represent a value of nearly $20,000,000. The entire output for the entire island for 1869 will but little, if at all, exceed that sum.

As far as the province of Matanzas is concerned, there is no visible reason why it should not, in any case, come out a winner. Except under an almost impossible recurrence of Weylerism, the island should hardly be in a worse plight than it has been. The next of the province, and the same applies with almost equal force to the whole island, is not so much government as honest administration. The province is rich; the island is rich. Its income from the custom house and a very limited system of internal taxation with a wholly reasonable taxation of municipalities for municipal purposes, will furnish a sum which is more than adequate for all requirements.

The problem of Cuba is one of the utmost simplicity. It consists in an honest and economical expenditure of an ample income which is derived by a taxation, direct and indirect, which would make the average American smile over the amount of his tax bill. Cuba should be self-governed. It was by no means crushed by Spanish imposition of taxes for all manner of unreasonable purposes, to maintain a war against the people of the island, to contribute to the peninsular government and to enrich Spanish officials. Toward all Cubans, Matanzas, immensely rich in her natural resources, contributed her full share. Relieved of this burden, and bearing only that which is just and reasonable, with honest and public-spirited officials, whether they take their hats to the American flag or to the Cuban, the wealth of Matanzas province and of Matanzas are beyond a question.

A Brooklyn Inventor's Claim.

Just as the people are beginning to forget about the wonderful light of the recently discovered and exploited Nernst electric light in Germany and England, comes the claim that the material for the filaments necessary in such a light and an almost identical theory as to its use were not only invented by a Brooklyn man, Lewis J. Jones, but patented in the United States in this country in 1885. Nernst's lamp is simply one whose luminous conductor is free from carbon or other combustible materials. It is a solid refractory oxide which will stand any temperature short of its own fusion, and requiring no vacuum globe. The chief trouble in the lamp is that the illuminant body or filament has first to be heated with a match, spirit lamp, or platinum coil, before it would become a conductor. This is done through the application of the electrical current. Mr. Jones's invention described a material which was intended to take the place of the carbon and platinum filaments, of a mixture of a non-conducting oxide, thereby including the Nernst theory of combustion under which a body which is a conductor when cold, and therefore needs no preliminary heating as in the case of the Nernst filament, when heated to incandescence was a mixture of 90 per cent. of oxide of magnesium and 10 per cent. of oxide of iron, but this has since been improved upon by the use of still more refractory materials which are used in the Welsbach mantels, thoria, zirconia, and ceria. The Brooklyn inventor expected to produce a lamp more economical than any now in use, and which is self-lighting.

Lobes of the Brain.

Some of the more advanced of the physiologists now claim that the back lobes of the brain are the seat of the highest intellectual faculties, in which, in direct opposition to that of the phrenologists and to popular opinions as well, the latter being that a high forehead is the especially lofty development. To the large bind head has been attributed an unusual degree of animalism. Dr. C. Clapham, an anthropologist of Paris, has brought forward facts and given arguments in favor of the posterior lobes in a recently published paper which shows that man, of all creatures, has the especially highly developed posterior lobes, and that the ablest men and races have them in the highest perfection. Idiots and consumptive, according to these investigations, have these imperfectly developed or in a very bad state.

The Free Travel.

Has it ever occurred to you to reckon how far your eye travels in reading? The distance will not startle you, perhaps, for fourteen letters in ordinary type would measure hardly more than a mile placed side by side. In a lifetime, however the average reader would read his way through 2,000 miles of print. The average novel of 300 pages contains one mile of reading; that is, the eye travels 1,760 yards in reading the book through.

TEXTS ON GOLD LEAF

Why Gold Leaf Is Packed Between Leaves of the Bible.

People outside of regular dealers in gold leaf are occasionally surprised when they purchase books of the material to find that the paper leaves between the sheets of gold have texts of Scripture printed on them. Looking closer they find that the paper leaves are actually cut from the Bible. Speaking of this the head of a Chicago firms which deals in gold leaf said:

"The gold leaf which is put up in books made from paper leaves cut from the Bible comes right from England. There is no intention to be irreverent in packing the gold leaf in this way. The paper is usually printed in small type and is always very evenly set, and the impression of the type on the paper is light, but enough to hold the gold leaf in place without injuring it. Another book that is used for the same purpose is the Book of Common Prayer, in the small type editions, of course. The paper is always very fine and smooth and when printed the leaves are just adapted for the purpose of packing the leaf.

"The first time I was asked for an explanation on this point was when I had a store order filled for artist's materials. A gentleman who bought several books of English-made gold leaf came to me and asked me if paper was so scarce in England that the leaf was made that they had to cut up Bibles for the purpose of packing the leaf. He had noticed that the sheets of gold leaf were packed between sheets of printed paper, but paid no attention to it until his eye caught a Scriptural text that had often puzzled him. It was the passage from the fourteenth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.' Then he saw that the gold leaf was packed between cut-up pages of the Bible. He seemed to think that the sheets of the Bible were used by some religious manufacturers who thought some one might be converted by reading a stray text. He said he was almost startled when he read the text he was puzzling over and looked disappointed when I explained in a matter-of-fact way why pages of the Bible were used.

"Once or twice very excellent people who bought some gold leaf from me were indignant when they found that the Bible was cut up to hold it, and told me it should be discouraged. The profanation by selling that kind of leaf. Others who were of a different temperament said they were glad to see it, as it would lead some people reading texts of Scripture, by glancing with curiosity at the printed sheets, who never took a Bible in their hands. They held that no matter what form it took it was a good thing to circulate texts of Scripture."

London's Meat.

Little more than a half of the bill that London settles every year goes into the pocket of the English farmer. From the Argentine the earth comes the vast supply. This great ogre of a city of ours, before whose gastronomic efforts the feats of all the giants of legend and fairy tale fade into insignificance, has taken his toll of the wild ranchers from boundless Western prairies, of the beautiful cheese-colored herds of the Andalusian Mountains, of the piebald-coated cattle that the honest Dutch tend as their own children, and of the sturdy cows of the North German plains, says Cassell's Magazine. Canada and Australia send us lambs and sheep, the River Plate our ox tongues, Ireland and Rotterdam our pigs. What an advertisement for the Navy League! What an object lesson for those who declare our fleet is overgrown!

It passes human comprehension to think what would become of London if our command of the sea were lost and the foreign supplies failed! If the 150,000 live cattle from America that swell the metropolitan cattle herd during the year never reached their destination; if Holland's half million of sheep were forced to remain on the home pastures—in short, if the 140,000 tons of meat, neither bred nor fed in these islands, that London annually consumes, ceased to appear in the butchers' shops of the metropolis.

Glory to Temptation.

A few years ago the river drivers were working on the West Branch. The logs had jammed into a nasty snarl, and no one hankered for the job of going out with a cantdog and starting the key log. In the crew was an Indian who was noted for his coolness and his keenness. The boss finally looked over in his direction. "Lacoote," he said, "you go out and break that jam, and I'll see that you get a nice puff in the paper." The redskin looked at the logs and then at the boss. "Dead Injun look in nice on paper," he grunted and walked away.—The Aroostook (Me.) Pioneer.

Perils of Early Housekeeping.

Young Wife—Harry, those bundles of kindling wood you sent home this morning were just the right size, except that they were too long. I hired a boy to break them up into suitable lengths for the stove.

A RECORD BREAKER.

AROUND THE WORLD IN THIRTY-THREE DAYS.

The Present Around the World Time is Just Double That, Being 66 Days—But Faster Communications Will Soon Lower This.

A new world record will soon be broken. Prince Hilkoff, Russian Minister of Communications, stated that when the new Siberian railway is completed it will be possible to travel around the world in thirty-three days.

Prince Hilkoff arranges his thirty-three-day itinerary as follows:

Bremen, by rail to St. Petersburg, one and one half days; St. Petersburg to Vladivostock, ten days; Vladivostock to San Francisco, ten days; San Francisco to New York, four and one half days; New York to Bremen, seven days; making a total of thirty-three days for the trip.

In calculating this run Prince Hilkoff estimates speed on the Siberian railway at the very modest rate of but forty-eight kilometers, or thirty miles, per hour. Faster communication both by sea and land will doubtless soon reduce the minimum time to thirty days.

MAP SHOWING ROUTE.

The present round-the-world timetable is as follows:

New York to Southampton, six days; Southampton to Brindisi, three and one half days; Brindisi to Yokohama by Suez Canal, forty-two days; Yokohama to San Francisco, ten days; San Francisco to New York, four and one half days; making a total of sixty-six days.

It might fairly be said, however, that one week more than that is required in going about it by the present route.

An Effective Narration.

According to the Waterville (Me.) Mail, this letter to the Pension Department brought a pension to Henry Johnson of Winslow, Me.:

To prevent correspondence
Is written in relation
To my delayed application
For an augmentation
Of my present subscription —
Some sort of explanation
Or so much hesitation
And continued prochastination.
A year or more elapsed
Before an order for examination
Reached its destination.
I wrote before the board without perturbation.
They correctly reported my situation—
It was a total prostration
Of my physical condition.
I also received from them this information,
In utter consternation,
That cataracts were causing a cessation
And soon a termination
To my visual observation.
In my crippled situation
I have labored in desperation
To prevent want and starvation
My ten children, my appropriation
To the strength of the Nation
And to increase its population.
My age is now at the termination
Of my earthly probation,
Twenty years a widower, more than a generation.
Charity furnishes me a habitation
And a portion of my daily ration.
Blindness denies me the gratification
Of reading and memoranda mention
For general information
And but for my daughter's kind ministration
I should be driven to desperation.
She prepares a frugal ration,
Reads to me some new publication,
Attending to my daily wants is her vocation.
If I could obtain an increased remuneration
To keep me from want and privation
It would give me great consolation
Until my life's termination.
I would not indulge in solicitation
For a further consideration,
If you reject this application,
The poorhouse is my destination.

The Imperial Body Guard.

The Cent Gardes foundered with the Second Empire in 1870, says London Truth. The corps dated from the time of the Crimean War, when a visit from Queen Victoria was expected. The tallest and finest looking men and officers were picked out for the duty. There were 137 of the former and 11 of the latter, but the number of men was afterwards raised to 208. Their function was purely decorative, and they chiefly served within the palace. What swells the officers were in their sky-blue uniforms, with cocked hats and laced! The corps had regulations of their own. They were on no account, when on duty, to stir unless to salute the Emperor or Empress.

One day Marshal Castellane, a valiant, old, peppery personage, had occasion to see the Emperor soon after the creation of the Cent Gardes. The Marshal kept guard beside the door opening from the anteroom on the presence chamber. There remained in the regulation attitude—that is to say, with the right arm horizontally stretched out, and holding a musket by the bayonet. The butt end rested on the ground. The Marshal was in uniform. He looked at not being saluted, he asked the one nearest to him what he meant. The Cent Garde answered that he knew not. Castellane lost self-restraint and abused him. Still the soldier remained impassive. The irate Marshal sent for Col. Verly to complain. The Colonel failed to make him understand that approval and not chastisement was due. Thus the matter was brought before the Emperor, who gave the complainant a sharp rap on the knuckles by expressing his pleasure at the Spartan attitude of a household guard who was bound to ignore every rank but the imperial.

Buying Postage Stamps.

Westfield attributes the refusal of the Postoffice Department to establish the free delivery system in that town to the fact that many residents of Westfield buy their postage stamps in New York instead of purchasing them at the local office. The result is a reduction in the annual revenues in the Westfield postoffice and a corresponding decrease in the standing of the office in the department at Washington—this time the missing link to free delivery.

The idea of urging townsmen to purchase postage stamps at home may seem to the disinterested to be carrying the "home-trade" argument to the ridiculous, but in a place largely populated with New York business men, spending annually immense sums for postal service, the fact is that if many of the commuters would follow the admonition to buy postage stamps at home it would aid material in giving these same men, together with their neighbors, a superior postal delivery service in their home community. Inasmuch as nearly all the towns in the burbusan section bear a great deal of complaint from the commuter element with reference to the poor postal facilities which they are compelled, by the force of circumstances, to submit to in their places of residence, the argument for buying postage stamps at the home office in preference to buying them in New York is not without its force and aptness.

Considered from the standpoint of Uncle Sam the idea is somewhat of a "robbing Peter to pay Paul" plan, because an increase of revenue in any of the small towns by the extra sale of stamps to New York business men means an equal loss in the receipts of the New York postoffice. But in this day and age of progress and improvement it is the manifest duty of every community, if it is to be up-to-date, to look out for its own interests first, and the advice to buy postage stamps at home seems to hold good along this line.

Taxing Corporation Privileges.

In line with the opinion rendered by City Counsel Price, of Newark, that corporation privileges are assessable as real estate, Camden's City Solicitor has decided to ask for an increase in the assessed valuation of the Camden Suburban Railway Company by $1,000,000.

The increase is asked for on the ground that in assessing the company the Assessors did not place any value upon the right of way of the company, which, it is claimed, is an assessable asset. If the increase should be made the tax collected it would mean a twenty-thousand dollar increase in revenue to Camden. The company's present valuation is $200,000. Should the increase be granted, it will raise the company's taxes from $4,000 to $24 000.

A proper application of this view of taxation laws in Plainfield would undoubtedly result in a great increase in the assessed valuation of property in this city, and in the natural course of events cause a material reduction in the tax rate by putting on the money-making corporations a share of the municipal expenses that they now evade under the present view of levying assessments.

We hope that when Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh returns from his European trip he will look into the application of the law as viewed by the legal representatives of Newark and Camden, and put such a construction on it, if it is possible, as will result in a just increase in Plainfield along the lines suggested.

Must Pay Her Majesty, Too.

The statement that it was his desire to dodge taxes in New York that caused William Waldorf Astor to become naturalized as a British subject, does not hold good in face of the laws that the wealthy have to pay tribute to in England.

For the privilege of becoming a British subject William Waldorf Astor will have to pay the Queen annually between $50,000 and $200,000 as an income tax alone. For the privilege of dying a Britisher Mr. Astor will be taxed about $8,348,000.

In England the rich pay. The British income tax is equivalent to three and one-third per cent. on all incomes of more than $2,000 a year.

His snobbish fade and likes are probably the only thing that caused him to change his citizenship from the "home of the brave and the land of the free" to the country ruled over by Her Majesty.

A New Kind of Pavement.

The reluctant spirit with which some of the city officials regard the proposed introduction of permanent pavement in the centre of the city, owing to the necessity of raising funds for such a purpose by issuing bonds, is taken by many to mean that the contemplated improvement may not be made after all.

As a desire for economy is the only thing that prompts the city officials in question to regard the permanent pavement idea with little favor, it follows that they will undoubtedly welcome some cheaper method for improving the city thoroughfares in a satisfactory way. Along this line The American Contractor tells of a new kind of pavement that is of contemporaneous interest to Plainfield.

The Contractor reports the paving of streets in Hamilton, Canada, with tarred macadam that costs only 76 cents per square yard, and is a very satisfactory pavement. Inquiry of the Hamilton street committee gained the following statements in response: First, that the price reported was correct, the paving costing only 76 cents per square yard. Second, that they have streets which have been paved for ten and fifteen years and they have been kept in good repair at small expense. Third, that "tarred macadam" is the most satisfactory pavement they have in that city.

The construction is described as follows: After the street has been excavated and graded and rolled, four inches of crushed stone is spread on and thoroughly rolled. Then a coating is put on of crushed stone and tar, both stone and tar being heated and mixed while hot, and rolled down into a solid mass. There is some pitch added to the tar. The road is surfaced with three-fourths of an inch of mixed tar and gravel rolled down smooth.

Seeking for a combination of economy and good results it would not be a bad idea for the Councilmanic street committee to look up this new paving material, as it might prove just the article that Plainfield is looking for.

The Trial of Dreyfus.

The attempted assassination of M. Labori, counsel for Dreyfus, is a tragic incident in the greatest court-martial of the century, and reflects the high and desperate temper to which a certain class of Frenchmen has been pitched in the intensity of feeling aroused by the case of the late exile of Devil's Island.

The murderous act against the chief counsel of the prisoner will undoubtedly effectually remove him from the stirring scenes of the trial, where his close intimacy with the facts and evidence in the case had shown him to be a terror to the military men who have undoubtedly conspired to visit an unholy, unjustified and brutal punishment upon Dreyfus. So unexpected a turn of affairs will discomfit the defense, but the evidence already heard on the new trial, the disclosures that led up to the reopening of the case, and the multitude of other dramatic incidents in connection with the trial, has been so favorable to Dreyfus that from a pure sense of justice it would seem that the prisoner would be returned to the ranks of the army with all the honor and emoluments that were his before the inglorious events of a few years ago.

But the French army is in a crisis, and whether reason and justice will sway the authorities in the face of the buffetings of a divided populace, both aroused to a high temper from their respective points of view, remains to be seen. Certain it is that the attempted killing of Labori and the consequent removal from the trial will jeopardize Dreyfus' liberty to an important degree. This is not because there is not another French lawyer who is equal to the task laid out before Labori, but because the latter has the mass of pivotal points in the case so clearly elucidated in his own mind that with him in the foreground for the defense there would be certainty, where doubt exists when the lead is left to M. Demange, his associate, who is confessedly unprepared to take the defense in a convincing manner where the injured man left off.

However much the attempted assassination of Labori tends to injure the defense of Dreyfus in court, it is a fact that outside of France the whole world is deeply interested to see his acquittal and return to the ranks of his countrymen in honor and justice.

A Set-back to Thrift.

The discouraging of thrift is not the least of the harmful effects of a bank wreck, if the following story, told by the Perth Amboy Norwegian, is true:

The fellow had been in this country a few years and had been employed at the smelting works. He was thrifty and frugal and had a few hundred dollars saved up. He kept them in an old sock in his bureau drawer. Cohoemates learned of his treasure. One morning he awoke to find that he had been robbed. He complained to the Magistrate, and thereafter put his money in the Middlesex Banking Bank. He had a few more hundred dollars saved when the bank collapsed. Now he is reported as soliloquizing: "Eat all you want; drink all you want; raise hell. Saving money no good."

A rare find in the shape of a moa's egg has been made in a mining district in Central Otago. There was a fall of rock in a digging the other day, and presently the huge egg was seen floating uninjured in the water. The discovery is the more interesting from the fact that this is the second perfect moa's egg that has ever been found. The only other perfect specimen was unearthed by a miner while digging in the alluvial soil at the Kaikoura mountains in the early 60's. Some idea of the size of these eggs may be gleaned from the fact that a moa's head makes an excellent egg-cup for them.

Probably the longest game of chess ever known was recently played between a gentleman residing in Australia and a friend living in Newark, U. S. A. Each move was made by letter, one playing via the Suez and the other via the Pacific ocean and San Francisco. Five years elapsed before the game was won by a close. Another similar record in chess playing was a correspondence game which took place twenty years ago between several Germans living in New York and the chess club in Bremen, Germany. The game terminated with a victory for the New York players, having lasted a period of two years and five months.

POLICE SPOILED A FIGHT

AFTER HIGH WORDS IT WAS DECIDED TO HAVE A MILL.

But the Police Interfered and the Principals Were Arraigned in City Court and the Reconciliation Dealt With

The police spoiled a fight Monday. A procession, led by the two principals, was headed out West Second street, with Samptown as its ultimate destination, when Sergeant Kiely and Patrolman Vanderweg stepped in and arrested John Slover and Theodore Wilson, who were playing a prominent part in lively discussion. Tuesday morning they were arraigned before City Judge Runyon.

There has been some bad feeling between the two men for quite a time. Remarks had been made or were supposed to have been made that intensified the feeling. Early Monday evening they met in a Park avenue saloon. There were high words and the proprietor of the saloon felt called upon to throw Wilson out. He found it necessary to repeat the performance two more times. Both men had been drinking.

Slover and Wilson met again shortly before 8 o'clock on East Second street. There were more words and it was decided to fight it out. One suggested that they adjourn outside the city limits and they departed down West Second street. They occasionally dropped remarks about each other at a high pitch in which profanity prevailed. Patrolman Vanderweg heard them on Park avenue and followed them up. At Central avenue, he met the Sergeant, who had been attracted by the noise. At Liberty street the officers decided that action was necessary to save the faces of the combatants. Both were arrested and locked up.

City Judge Runyon decided that Wilson was the aggressor and gave him his choice between a fine of $3 or eight days in jail. The small fine was paid. Sentence was suspended on Slover.

WESTFIELD WAS NOT DRY

Crusade Against Sunday Liquor Selling a Failure Sunday, 15.

Westfield, August 15—The members of the Township Committee had a conference with the retail liquor dealers Sunday afternoon. It is understood that it was in reference to Sunday selling, against which a crusade has been in progress. The conference was unofficial and strictly private. What the understanding was has not been divulged, but so far as the thirsty public were concerned, refreshments of all kinds could be obtained as easily Sunday as on any Sunday previous.

Martin Wells, of the Township Committee, is taking the initiative in the attempt to have all the hotels closed Sundays. The hotel keepers are inclined to resent what they consider to be interference on the part of the Township Committee.

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is positively indigent in its effects as only nasty liquids injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee sets the nerves on edge, robs the digestion effects the health and attacks the nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and builds up the whole system. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

POND TOOL COMPANY IN $8,000,000 TRUST.

Consolidation of Four Big Firms Under One Head.

STOCK IS NOT FOR SALE.

NEW CORPORATION WILL BE KNOWN AS NILES-BEMENT-POND COMPANY

The Consolidation Effected in Trenton Monday Under New Jersey Laws—Pond Company Biggest Industry in Plainfield—No Information Can be Obtained About it at Their Offices.

Trenton, August 15—Two big new industrial companies were organized yesterday, and articles of incorporation were taken out here. One of these was referred to as a Tool Trust, although its organizers declared that they were not seeking to establish a monopoly.

It is known as the Niles-Bement-Pond Company, and it has a capital stock of $8,000,000, $5,000,000 of which is common and $3,000,000 6 per cent. cumulative preferred.

The new concern is a consolidation of the Niles Tool Works Company, of Hamilton, Ohio; Pond Machine Tool Company, of Plainfield, N. J.; Bement, Miles & Co., of Philadelphia, and the Philadelphia Engineering Works. These four companies are said to control the heavy machine tool trade, including the manufacture of gun carriages, of this country. In the organization of the new company the public will not be invited to participate. The entire issue of stock will be taken by the members of the constituent concerns.

It is said that the management of the separate plants will continue as heretofore. Upward of 3,000 men will be employed in the four factories. The central offices will be in New York. The list of officers and directors have not yet been determined upon. It is understood, however, that Colonel McKinney will be president of the company.

The Pond Machine Tool Company, which is one of four companies concerned in the organization of the $8,000,000 machine tool trust, which was consummated in Trenton yesterday, as stated above, is the biggest industrial concern in Plainfield. Their shops here employ about 1,000 men. For the past few years they have done a large amount of contracting with the War Department in the manufacture of disappearing gun carriages for coast defense. A year ago the company was purchased by the owners of the Niles Tool Works Company, of Hamilton, O., and since that time the two concerns have been run under the same management, but entirely independent of each other.

It was stated at the office of the Pond Tool Machine Company this morning that the combination was in no sense a trust, as they did not aim to control the output or prices. It was a consolidation of various interests in which the same men held stock, and was effected for the purpose of reducing operating expenses in certain departments.

Death of a Young Man.

Fred Martin, a young man well-known in the borough, died at 11 p. m. Monday at the home of his sister, 141 Dover street, after an illness of several weeks. Mr. Martin was for a time employed at Dreyer's hotel, corner of Somerset street and Lincoln place. The deceased was about 22 years of age. He has been a member of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M. for about one year. The funeral services will be held from the house Friday afternoon next at 2:30 o'clock, and the members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will attend the services in a body. They will meet at the lodge rooms at 1:30 o'clock sharp.

Added to Faculty of Business College.

Rev. H. W. McKane, pastor of the First Church of Christ, has been added to the faculty of the Gregg College of Business, where he will teach the classes in Hebrew, Greek and Latin. This course of studies has been added to the curriculum of the college and is a new departure that will tend to place the college among the best in the metropolitan district.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A DRINK

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

BARN WAS BURNED UP.

IT WAS FILLED WITH HAY AND BURNED RAPIDLY.

Owned by Frank W. Miles—Rivalry Between the Hose Companies to See Which Would Reach the Fire First.

A barn belonging to Frank W. Miles and situated in the rear of his residence at 356 Somerset street, North Plainfield, was partially destroyed by fire about 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

The fire occasioned much excitement in the neighborhood and when the alarm was sent in from box 145 there was at once a great rivalry manifested between the two fire companies to see which could get the first stream of water on the blaze.

The boys of the West End Hose Company, being the nearest company to the threatening conflagration, were the lucky ones and they soon had a good stream playing upon the flames. The Warren Engine Company, however, were by no means slow in responding and were a close second.

However, by the time the firemen reached the scene of the fire the flames were bursting from the upper part of the barn, which was filled with hay. The fire had gained such headway that the firemen found that they had a stubborn battle before them. They went at the fight with a will and soon had the fire under control. The barn being located within a short distance of Mr. Miles' residence, it was with some difficulty that the firemen succeeded in preventing the flames from spreading to that. After half an hour's hard work the fire was entirely extinguished.

The origin of the fire is not known. It was first discovered by members of the family, who noticed smoke pouring from beneath the eaves of the barn. Before they could make a thorough investigation the flames had burst from the roof. The loss will probably amount to $500, upon which there was a small insurance. Fortunately Mr. Miles' horses and carriage were being used at the time of the discovery of the fire and thereby escaped possible destruction. Besides the loss of the hay a number of florists' tools and a quantity of plants and flower pots were destroyed.

MORE TROUBLE FOR HACKMEN.

Roundsman Flynn Found Them Inside the "Dead Line" Saturday Afternoon.

There was more trouble among the hackmen Saturday afternoon and Roundsman Flynn came up just in time to find Alfred Hankinson, Morris Barry and Charles Berry standing on the sidewalk in front of the North avenue station soliciting passengers. He ordered them all to appear for trial Monday before City Judge Runyon.

Morris Barry and Hankinson, who is a colored man, appeared but Berry failed to put in an appearance. The Judge was inclined to be lenient with the two prisoners saying that he realized that hackmen had to work hard for every cent they earned. The testimony of the two hackmen and Roundsman Flynn was that Charles Berry was a disturbing element at the station among the hackmen.

Hankinson had only been a hackman a little while and didn't know the rules very well. Barry said he pulled up because other ones did and he didn't want to lose all his trade.

The Judge suspended sentence and told Roundsman Flynn to be sure and have the missing Barry on hand tomorrow morning.

MORTIMER NEED NOT PAY

Brooklyn, where he found that he could not live on $1,000 a year left from his income after the bank had exercised its rights as power of attorney. Then Mortimer, much to the surprise of all, revoked his power of attorney. The bank then brought suit to have the note act as a lien against the income of the estate.

It is not known whether or not the bank will call on the creditors who endorsed the note to repay to the bank the amount of the note.

In defending the action of the bank against the estate Mortimer has also secured judgment for about $160 legal expenses which he will call upon the plaintiff to settle.

Saturday Tribune No More.

The Saturday Tribune, a weekly paper published by Mr. Kellar, of Plainfield avenue, has gone out of existence and the plant has been sold to the publishers of The Sabbath Recorder. Mr. Kellar recently secured a good position on the New York Sun, and he gave up his local business. The presses he used and all his material will be put to use in the Sabbath Recorder plant.

BOB HOUSTON MAY BE IGNORED BY LEADERS

His Chances For Shrievalty Nomination are Slim.

CORIELL GOOD CANDIDATE.

FIGHT FOR COUNTY CLERK LIES BETWEEN HOWARD AND SQUIER.

If Clerk Howard Did Not Clinch His Showing for Nomination by His Act at County Convention, He Has Little Show Now—Two Assemblymen for the Town-hips—Newcom Mentioned.

"I think," remarked a prominent G. O. P. man of this city, who comes pretty near knowing what's what in county political affairs, "That you are safe in counting Bob Houston out of the race for the Shrievalty nomination. Not but what he wants it badly enough and was promised the office three years ago. B. Frank Coriell, Deputy County Clerk, is a likely candidate, and I wouldn't be a bit surprised to see him nominated, unless Plainfield stands by the pledges made to Houston."

Other Republican politicians have been united more or less strongly in the belief that Assemblyman Robert Houston will not be the Republican candidate for the office of Sheriff of Union county. Houston hails from the section of the city of Elizabeth commonly known as the "Port." He is popular among his constituents and with his fellow workers in other parts of the county as well. It has been his great aim to be sheriff, and the efforts of his friends nearly won the place for him six and three years ago. In consideration of his withdrawal in favor of Kirk on the latter occasion, Plainfield promised to give her support to Houston in 1900 to succeed Kirk.

"The trouble with Houston is," continued the Republican already quoted, "That he is not the man for Sheriff and the Republicans through the county realize the fact. To be frank about it Bob is a mighty good fellow but I don't believe that he is properly qualified for the office. What did he do for the Assembly? He was completely overshadowed by both Murray and Squire I may be wrong but it is my belief that his claim for the place is going to be quietly ignored."

If Houston has been counted out by the county leaders, then the chances of the Plainfield candidate for the Shrievalty nomination are much improved. Sheriff William T. Kirk is still in line for the nomination for County Clerk but the great fight is now conceded to be between Clerk Howard, of Rahway, and Assemblyman George Squier.

Either has lost no opportunity of increasing his power in the county and is now quite a factor in the running of the Republican machine. Whether his power is large enough to win him the nomination, is another thing. Concerning Howard's support in the city of Elizabeth, Plainfield is in the dark. It is a well-known fact that it was through the influence of Mr. Howard that the Rahway delegation turned its support at the last moment from H. H. Ackerman to Judge Cross for the Senatorial nomination, thereby resulting in the victory of the latter.

For that Howard was to receive the renomination for the clerkship this fall. If he did not clinch the bargain then he made an extremely foolish move. There are many Plainfielders who haven't forgotten that act and would be glad of the opportunity of letting Rahway remember it at the county convention. Under these circumstances Clerk Howard is not likely to expect much support from this city.

The distribution of the nominations for the Assembly is still an unsettled question. Elizabeth will get one without doubt. One will go to the smaller townships. The other may possibly come to Plainfield or be apportioned off in the share of Summit or Westfield. No really full fledged boom for the Assembly nomination has been started in Plainfield as yet. The name of Wm. Newcorn has been mentioned for the place, however.

If Plainfield gets the Shrievalty nomination then the Assembly plum is likely to go elsewhere. If Rahway's new favored son gets "dumped" in the chase for the clerkship, then it is likely that Rahway will receive the extra seat in the Assembly. Elizabeth, if successful in filling the nominations for Senator and County Clerk, can hardly ask for more than one Assemblyman, although Elizabeth has been known to attempt to "play the hog" on several occasions.

NEW SHIP YARD FOR SHOOTER'S ISLAND.

Has Been Purchased by Townsend & Downey, of Brooklyn.

BUILDING HAS STARTED.

VALUABLE PROPERTY WILL BE IMPROVED AT ONCE.

Purchased Island From Tide Water Oil Company, of Bayonne, Nearly a Year Ago—Was Formerly Leased by Seaboard Lumber Company Until That Company Went Out of Business Five Years Ago.

Signs of activity on Shooter's Island, a little island at the mouth of Newark Bay between Elizabethport and Bergen Point, have led to all sorts of rumors concerning the cause. It was reported and afterwards contradicted that the Cramps, the Philadelphia ship builders, were to establish a ship yard there. The real facts are that the island changed owners nearly a year ago and that the owners, Townsend & Downey, of Brooklyn, are starting to establish their ship yard there.

Shooter's Island is nearly thirty acres in extent and is an exceedingly valuable property. Its sheltered position, combined with its nearness to New York bay, adds to its value. When the improvements contemplated by the United States Government to the Kill von Kull are completed it will permit ships of the deepest draught to reach and depart from the island, which will then have nearly a half-mile of deep water front.

The island was originally owned by Lombard, Ayres & Co., of New York, and leased by them to the Seaboard Lumber Company, in which the former company was largely interested. It was sold eleven years ago to the Tide Water Oil Company, of Bayonne, which continued to lease it to the Seaboard Lumber Company, until the latter concern went out of business five years ago.

The property lay idle until last fall when it was sold to Townsend & Downey, of Brooklyn, whose New York office is in the Produce Exchange building, Broadway. Their yard was located in the Erie Basin, Brooklyn. It is the intention of the new firm to establish a ship yard on the island, where ships of various sizes will be built and repaired. Several $100,000 will be spent in putting the plant in order. The rumor that the Cramps were interested in the yard came from the fact that one of the members of the firm is a relative of the famous shipbuilders.

ATTACKS FIRST-DAY WORSHIP.

Dr. Lewis' Book on "Swift Decadence of Sunday" Seems Popular.

The first edition of a thousand volumes of Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis' new book, "Swift Decadence of Sunday; What Next?" has been completely exhausted although it only made its appearance less than three months ago. The book was published by the American Sabbath Tract Society of this city. A second edition will be printed at once and will make its appearance this fall.

The book asserts that Sabbath observance is waning, analyzes the causes of decline and suggests methods of reform.

ASSESSOR'S BOOKS EXAMINED.

Few Changes Made By Borough Council in Mr. French's Books.

Mayor Smalley and the Borough Council met last Monday with Assessor E. M. French and completed the work of examining the books of the assessor. The books were found to be very satisfactory and very few changes were made in the amounts. The borough tax rate cannot yet be ascertained until the County Board of Assessors meet and fix the county rate, but it is believed that the rate will not be much higher than at present.

A Jack, the Tire Cutter.

The tire to the back wheel of Joe Sadusky's bicycle was stabbed Sunday afternoon to the serious detriment of the condition of the tire. Sadusky is a coachman employed on Crescent avenue. Sunday afternoon he rode his wheel to the home of a friend on East Front street and left his wheel in the gutter while he went into the house. When he came out again, he found the back tire flat and two deep gashes in it. A friend saw a man stop at the wheel and drive his pen knife in the tire.

Hank Frisbie's Pullets Gone.

Mail-Carrier Frisbie lost five valuable pullets Monday night about 12 o'clock. He was sitting in his bedroom partaking of his midnight meal, when his dog began barking. He called to the dog to keep quiet, which he did, thus giving the chicken thieves every opportunity to do their work. Frisbie discovered his loss in the morning when he went to feed the chickens. He now has his eagle-eye peeled hoping that he may find some trace of the robbers.

HAS KEAN JOINED WITH NORTH JERSEY?

A Big Trolley Consolidation Reported at Elizabeth.

EVIDENCES TO PROVE IT.

SEEMS TO BE ON VERY FAMILIAR TERMS WITH TRACTION CO.

Borrowing Their Tools, Using Their Barns, Employing Their Inspectors and Taking Their Tutorship—A Number of Different Things That Lend Color to the Story, of Amalgamation

Elizabeth, Aug. 15.—Senator John Kean has consolidated his trolley interests with those of the North Jersey Street Railway Company. The Senator and his associates may deny this, but prominent stockholder in both concerns says it is so.

The consolidation was to have taken place on June 17th, but owing to the serious illness of one of the men interested the deal was postponed until July 17th. In the meantime Senator Kean had acquired from the Union County Freeholders and the Elizabeth City Council all of the favors he needed for the present, or in fact for all time to come, and there is now little secrecy manifested in his operations.

Superintendent Hasbrouck, who formerly superintended Mr. Kean's "dinky" line to the 'Port, is at the barns and power house of the North Jersey Street Railway Company, taking practical lessons in the art of running a trolley.

Another thing that lends color to the statement of the informing stockholder is the fact that the best inspectors on the North Jersey's staff are acting as inspectors of the work being done on Mr. Kean's line, while the latter has borrowed tools, joints and lights from the North Jersey people.

The six modern trolley cars which were built for Mr. Kean's road arrived a few days ago and tomorrow or next day they will be transferred to the barns of the North Jersey Company in Broad street, where they will receive their final equipment.

When this line is completed from Broad and East Grand street to the 'Port, the Newark cars will run direct to the Staten Island ferry, landing its passengers within fifty feet of the ferryboat and making the trip eight minutes quicker than by the old route, while a system of transfers and a jigger will be utilized to carry the passengers up Quality Hill. The property along the line has experienced a 25 per cent. increase since work was begun to change the motive power on this line, and it is still rising.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Assemblyman Squires is owa.

Assemblyman George A. Squires, of Elizabeth, was a visitor in Plainfield, but if he talked politics it was simply to his friends. Mr. Squires came to Plainfield to attend the race meet at the Driving Park. After that was over he was a member of a dinner party at the Hotel Kensington, which included Judge W. A Codington, J. E. McClintock, M. H. Dingee, of Linchburg, Va., John C. Wheab, of New York, and S. S. Squires, the Assemblyman's brother, of this city.

HONORS FOR CUP TO NEW COMPETITORS.

George T. Rogers Made Low Score For Day.

AT PARK GOLF CLUB LINKS.

MANY LADIES IN EVIDENCE AT THE COURSE SATURDAY.

A Number of Members Entered Cup Competition, But Only Three Scores Were Handed In—Fred P. Taylor Played Round, But Did Not Compete—Cooley and Faber Were Absent.

The honors for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen cup at the links of the Park Golf Club Saturday afternoon, were divided among new aspirants for the club championship cup. While there were many golfers out on the green, only three scores were handed in and they were all from members who have not heretofore figured in the contest for the trophy. First honers went to George T. Rogers who, although a very enthusiastic player, has hitherto played for amusement rather than points. The day was a pleasant one for golf and there was a large attendance at the course. The ladies went out in force and a number played round although Miss Elsberg was the only one to turn in her score for the ladies' trophy, offered by Mr. Buttfield.

Fred P. Taylor was the only one of the crack players present and he took no part in the competition. Even if he had, it would have made very little difference in the result as Taylor plays from scratch now and Saturday he did not show his usual good form. Gifford W. Cooley and Charles E. Faber, who had everything their own way the week before and now stand at the head of the list of competitors for the McCutchen cup, were not present. Their lead for the trophy was not disturbed however. Meredith Dryden, the club secretary, who stands third in the competition, played the eighteen holes in company with Volney F. Green but did not record his scores although he entered for the cup. He has been absent from the course for several weeks and was off his usual form.

The members of the champion whist team of the Park Club have all turned their attention to golf. S. St. John McCutchen has been playing at the golf course at Belmar while the other three, George T. Rogers, Samuel Townsend and J. H. Howell, were constant players on the Park Club course. Now, however, Mr. Rogers is the only one of the four remaining in Plainfield, Messrs. Howell and Townsend having joined the Belmar settlement. During the last two weeks Mr. Rogers has been over the local course very often, and has showed a marked improvement every time.

Saturday Mr. Rogers was out and made his tournament round in company with Augustus VanDeventer. Mr. Rogers drives hard and with accuracy, and his iron shots are usually very clever. On the putting green he is fair. The greens committee have allowed him a generous handicap, which, with his good playing, enabled him to score three points for the McCutchen Cup.

After completing the tournamant round, Mr. Rogers played in company with Fred P. Taylor and James T. Scott. It was Mr. Scott's first appearance on the links for several weeks and he did not enter in the competition for the trophy. He played his usual steady game.

Volney F. Green has not played before for over a month. Consequently his form was rather ragged and his score ran up correspondingly high. A few days play will put him back, and if he continues to play for the cup he is likely to be a strong competitor.

There were a number who entered for the McCutchen cup but the only scores to be handed in were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
George T. Rogers	122	21	101
Volney F. Green	134	18	116
Aug. VanDeventer	157	30	127

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

Gifford W. Cooley	7
Charles E. Faber	7
Meredith Dryden	6½
S. St. John	6
W. de la R. Anderson	4½
Samuel Townsend	4½
E. T. Douglass	3½
H. D. Hubbard	3
Geo. T. Rogers	3
Arthur Faber	2½
Fred P. Taylor	2½
S. S. Spencer	2½
Wm. A. Townsend	2½
J. E. Faber	2
Volney F. Green	2
Fred S. Overton	1½
Clarence S. Osmun	1½
Augustus VanDeventer	1
C. W. Mershon	1

Miss Daisy Elsberg was the only competitor to hand in her score for the Buttfield cup. She made the nine holes in 89. Deducting her handicap of 18, her net score was 71.

The course was in good condition, except in places where the grass on the fair green was a trifle high. Green Keeper Barrie and his assistants were busy cutting it. The putting greens were all in good shape and faster than usual.

W. F. Arnold and family, of Third place, are summering at Ocean Grove.

PERMANENT PAVEMENT MAY NOT BE LAID

Change of Sentiment Among Some of the City Officials.

MAYOR IS FOR ECONOMY.

BELIEVES GOOD MACADAMIZING WILL DO JUST AS WELL.

Rumor Has It That the Proposed Permanent Pavement in the Centre of the City Will Not Materialize—Mayor Rockfellow Points to Park Avenue Macadamizing With a Great Deal of Pride.

Apropos the establishment of a permanent pavement in the business part of the city, it is said that a change of ideas and methods have entered the minds of the Mayor and some of the Councilmen, and the prospect of asphalt or block asphalt is not as sure as was thought. It is also stated that Mayor Rockfellow objects strongly to the issuance of bonds to do the work.

The cow in question was tied to a large stake in a lot at Avon Park, in the vicinity of Becker's home. The heat was intense and as the sun climbed higher the cow felt its hot rays upon its back.

The heat became unbearable and the poor animal become thoroughly excited. Its excitement grew to nervousness and from nervousness to frenzie.

By afternoon the cow had worked herself into a perfect rage and made desperate struggles to break the rope which held her in bondage and to the tortures of the hot sun's rays.

The poor creature bellowed and pawed the earth with its hoofs and made desperate efforts to break loose.

The pitiful bellowing of the cow finally attracted the attention of Mrs. Becker who went to release the critter. Mrs. Becker approached the cow without fear of any trouble. She had approached to within a few feet of the excited animal, and was about to stoop to unfasten the rope, when the cow made a dash for her.

Lowering its horns and pawing up the earth the cow came headfirst toward the unsuspecting woman. Mrs. Becker did not have time to think of her danger before the infuriated cow had from the torturing of the terrible heat which had been pouring upon its back for several hours, was upon her. The poor woman was caught on the cow's sharp horns and tossed like a ball into the air.

She immediately screamed for help, but before assistance reached her the mad cow had again tossed her about tearing her clothing and inflicting severe gashes to her body. Mrs. Becker's heartrending screams finally attracted the attention of "Big Jim" Hennessy, who with his lady friend were spinning along on a tandem wheel. It took but a moment for Hennessy to realize the woman's peril and he did not hesitate. Dismounting from his wheel, which he left in charge of his friend, Hennessy secured a club from some trees which have recently been cut down and vaulting the fence went to the woman's rescue.

By the time he reached the scene the cow was goring and trampling Mrs. Becker. Fearing the woman would be killed before he could drive off the cow, Hennessy cried lustily for help, at the same time sailing into the mad creature with all his might. He lashed and pounded the cow all the time keeping up persistent cries for help.

The terrible beating Hennessy gave the cow finally had the desired effect and the maddened animal was driven off.

Hennessy's vigorous cries for help had attracted the attention of three young men from Plainfield who were riding their wheels in the vicinity.

The young men were about to go to Hennessy's assistance when one of them noticed that his lady friend had fainted from the excitement.

One of the men held the young woman in his arms and while another was securing water to dash in her face his companion used his cap to fan her back to consciousness. By the time the young woman had been looked after the Plainfield young men had assumed sufficient courage to go to Hennessy's aid.

Mrs. Becker was helped to the house, considerably bruised but not dangerously injured.

PARALYSIS WAS FATAL.

JAMES H. SHARP PASSED AWAY WITHOUT MUCH WARNING.

Stricken Soon After Arising Saturday Morning—Unable to Speak—Had Resided in Plainfield for Many Years.

James H. Sharp, aged about fifty-two years, a well-known painter, died at his home on Harmony street Monday at 3 o'clock from a stroke of paralysis which he suffered last Saturday. Mrs. Sharp was waiting for her husband to come down stairs to breakfast. He seemed late, and she went upstairs to learn what the trouble was. She was startled to find her husband lying on the floor in a helpless condition, and unable to speak. He retained his senses and knew all that was said to him, but could make no reply. As quickly as possible a physician was sent for and the man was given proper treatment. He did not, however, get any better and gradually grew worse until he passed away at 3 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. Sharp has been a resident in this vicinity for many years, and has always followed the trade of a painter. He held his last position with Marsh, Ayres & Co., but he has been unable to work for about three months past.

The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, from the residence, 11 Harmony street.

BUSINESS MEN'S CLAMBAKE.

The Great Event Arranged to Be Held August 30th.

The Plainfield Advancement Association has decided to hold the "business men's clambake" Wednesday, August 30th, commencing at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. One hundred invitations have been issued to business men, and stages will be engaged to take them to the scene of the festivities, which will be in Vail's Grove, near Mountain Park Inn. The committee in charge of the bake consists of City Judge Wm. N. Runyon, W. F. Williams and Assessor Elston M. French, and they will leave no stone unturned in making the affair a great success. Of course Mayor Smalley will have general supervision of the affair and will see that everything passes off smoothly.

Baptised In The Brook.

Services and baptism were held at Green Brook near Water street, yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Second Christian church. The services were conducted by the pastor.

WOMAN AT MERCY OF A VICIOUS COW.

Animal Had Been Made Mad By the Terrific Heat.

"BIG JIM" WENT TO RESCUE.

AFTER A STRUGGLE HE DROVE OFF THE BEAST WITH A CLUB.

The Animal Seriously Bruised the Woman—Took Place in Sight of Park Avenue—A Young Woman Who Had Witnessed the Struggle Fainted Away From Excitement and Fright.

Mrs. George Becker was seriously injured Sunday and came within an ace of being killed by a mad cow. To the fact that she is alive today she has a man of iron courage to thank. The brave man who saved her life is James Hennessy, who when he is at home in Staten Island is known as "Big Jim," because of his large stature and immense strength.

The cow in question was tied to a large stake in a lot at Avon Park, in the vicinity of Becker's home. The heat was intense and as the sun climbed higher the cow felt its hot rays upon its back.

The heat became unbearable and the poor animal become thoroughly excited. Its excitement grew to nervousness and from nervousness to frenzie.

By afternoon the cow had worked herself into a perfect rage and made desperate struggles to break the rope which held her in bondage and to the tortures of the hot sun's rays.

The poor creature bellowed and pawed the earth with its hoofs and made desperate efforts to break loose.

The pitiful bellowing of the cow finally attracted the attention of Mrs. Becker who went to release the critter. Mrs. Becker approached the cow without fear of any trouble. She had approached to within a few feet of the excited animal, and was about to stoop to unfasten the rope, when the cow made a dash for her.

Lowering its horns and pawing up the earth the cow came headfirst toward the unsuspecting woman. Mrs. Becker did not have time to think of her danger before the infuriated cow had from the torturing of the terrible heat which had been pouring upon its back for several hours, was upon her. The poor woman was caught on the cow's sharp horns and tossed like a ball into the air.

She immediately screamed for help, but before assistance reached her the mad cow had again tossed her about tearing her clothing and inflicting severe gashes to her body. Mrs. Becker's heartrending screams finally attracted the attention of "Big Jim" Hennessy, who with his lady friend were spinning along on a tandem wheel. It took but a moment for Hennessy to realize the woman's peril and he did not hesitate. Dismounting from his wheel, which he left in charge of his friend, Hennessy secured a club from some trees which have recently been cut down and vaulting the fence went to the woman's rescue.

By the time he reached the scene the cow was goring and trampling Mrs. Becker. Fearing the woman would be killed before he could drive off the cow, Hennessy cried lustily for help, at the same time sailing into the mad creature with all his might. He lashed and pounded the cow all the time keeping up persistent cries for help.

The terrible beating Hennessy gave the cow finally had the desired effect and the maddened animal was driven off.

Hennessy's vigorous cries for help had attracted the attention of three young men from Plainfield who were riding their wheels in the vicinity.

The young men were about to go to Hennessy's assistance when one of them noticed that his lady friend had fainted from the excitement.

One of the men held the young woman in his arms and while another was securing water to dash in her face his companion used his cap to fan her back to consciousness. By the time the young woman had been looked after the Plainfield young men had assumed sufficient courage to go to Hennessy's aid.

Mrs. Becker was helped to the house, considerably bruised but not dangerously injured.

In Rev. Dr. Yerkes' Place.

Rev. Mr. Geismer, pastor of the Baptist church at Haddonfield, Camden county, preached two strong and impressive sermons at the First Baptist church Sunday. The attendance at both the morning and evening service was excellent. G. W. Smith had charge of the music and Howard Case presided at the organ as usual. Next Sunday Rev. Frank Smith, pastor of the Somerville Baptist church, will preach at the First Baptist church. Mr. Smith is a talented preacher, and large congregations should greet him.

Mrs. A. B. Darby, of Grove street, has gone to Bethlehem, N. H., for an outing.

WELCOME FOR SEWELL.

STEAMBOAT-LOAD OF FRIENDS MET HIM DOWN THE BAY.

Governor Voorhees Was on Hand—Senator Reed in Somerset County Delegation and Roger Murray With Union County.

United States Senator William J. Sewell was given a royal welcome this morning upon his arrival from Europe on the American line Steamer St. Paul. General Sewell, who has been abroad about two months, was accompanied by his family. On the same steamer were Sheriff David Baird and State Tax Commissioner Henry J. West, of Camden. There were about 300 in the party welcoming, Gov. Voorhees and Senator Manlon Pitney being in the vanguard.
